Harmony Society. See Harmonist, 4.—Preëstablished harmony, the doctrine of Leibnitz by which he explained the relation between mind and matter, as distinct substances, and the facts of our knowledge of the material world. He supposed the universe to consist of monads, or self-contained beings, which cannot act one upon another, each state of every monad being determined solely by its preceding states; but at the same time he assumed that each monad is a mirror of the universe. To explain the fact that the succession of states of any one monad, as a human mind, actually corresponds to the succession of states in other monads, and that thus the mental picture of the events of the external world is a true one, he assumed that a certain harmony (the preëstablished harmony) was established in the beginning by God among the monads.= Syn. 2. Melody, Rhythm, etc. See euphony.—4. Correspondence, consistency, congruity; amity.

harmost (här'most), n. [< Gr. ἁρμοστής, governor, < ἁρμόζειν, set in order, regulate: see harmony.] In Gr. antiq., the title of the governors appointed by the Lacedæmonians, during their supremacy after the Peloponnesian war, over subject or conquered towns; hence, in general, a military governor of a colony or province.

When Sparta conquered another Greek city, she sent a harmost to govern it like a tyrant; in other words, she virtually enslaved the subject city.
J. Fiske, Amer. Pol. Ideas, p. 75.

harmotome (här'mō-tōm), n. [< Gr. ἁρμός, a joint, + τέμνειν, ταμεῖν, cut.] A mineral belonging to the zeolite group, commonly occurring in cruciform twin crystals which vary in color from white to yellow, red, or brown. It is a hydrous silicate of aluminium and barium. Sometimes called cross-stone and andreolite.

The W. harnais, harness, trappings, is from E.] 1. The defensive armor and weapons of a soldier, especially of a knight; in general, and especially in modern poetical use, a suit of armor. The trappings of the war-horse are also sometimes included in the term. Harness was the early name for body-armor of all kinds. Modern writers have tried to discriminate between harness as the armor of the eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth centuries, and armor as confined to the plate suits of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries; but armor is the modern English word for defensive garments of all sorts, and harness in this sense is a poetical archaism.

Whan thei were alle come to the londe thei were right gladde, and trussed theire harneys, and lepe on theire horse. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 259.

I can remember that I buckled his harnes when he went to Blackheath fielde. Latimer, 1st Sermon bef. Edw. VI.

Ring the alarum-bell:—Blow wind! come wrack!
At least we'll die with harness on our back.
Shak., Macbeth, v. 5.

They quitted not their harness bright,
Neither by day, nor yet by night.
Scott, L. of L. M., i. 4.

2. Clothing; dress; garments. [Rare.]—3. The working-gear or tackle of a horse, mule, ass, goat, dog, or other animal (except the ox) used for draft; the straps, collar, bridle, lines, traces, etc., put upon a draft-animal to enable it to work and to guide its actions. See cut in next column.

Another of these disguised peasants cuts the hairness of the horse. Coryat, Crudities, I. 21.

Hence—4. Figuratively, working-tackle of any kind; an equipment for any kind of labor; also, that which fits or makes ready for labor: as, his duties keep him constantly in the harness.

It [the soul] arouses itself at last from these endearments, as toys, and puts on the harness, and aspires to vast and universal aims. Emerson, Love.

Pg. Pr. arpa, F. harpe), a harp; root unknown. Not connected with Gr. ἅρπη, a sickle.] 1. A musical instrument with strings which are played by being plucked with the fingers. The modern orchestral harp consists of a wooden frame somewhat triangular in shape, on which are strung nearly fifty strings of varying length. The frame comprises the pedestal, supporting the whole and containing the pedals; the large hollow back, with the soundboard, in which are inserted the lower ends of the strings; the neck, with the wrestpins to which the upper ends of the strings are attached, and bearing the mechanism operated by the pedals; and the pillar, supporting the outer end of the neck, and containing the pedal-rods. The strings are of catgut, colored so as to be readily distinguished from each other; the lowest eight are wound with light wire. They are tuned diatonically in the scale of C♭, beginning two octaves below middle C, and extending upward about six and a half octaves. The pedal-action is so contrived that a slight movement raises the pitch of all the strings of the same letter-name a semitone; while a greater movement shortens them two semitones. Seven pedals are used, one for each tone of the scale, all of which may be held by notches in either position, so that the entire instrument may be tuned in C♭, C♮, or C♯, or in any desired combination of sharps and flats. Thus music in any key is possible, with somewhat extreme modulations. The modern harp has been evolved from types found among the Egyptians, Assyrians, Hebrews, and various Celtic nations. All antique varieties are deficient in compass, in precision of pitch, and in sonority. Most of the Oriental forms lack that important part of the frame, the pillar. The medieval harps could be played only in one key, with such slight chromatic alterations as could be effected by stopping a string with the finger. Chromatic tuning has been unsuccessfully attempted. Pedals for making chromatic changes were introduced early in the eighteenth century. Single-action harps are those in which each pedal produces only one such change; double-action, those in which each pedal may be used to produce two such changes. The modern double-action harp was perfected in 1810 by Sebastian Erard. A double harp is one with two sets or rows of strings, differently tuned; a triple harp, one with three such sets or rows. The technique of the harp is notable, because the fingering remains the same in all keys; while its mechanism is exactly modeled on the principles of the staff-notation. The harp is capable of very beautiful and varied music within certain limits of power and quality. Although solid chords are feasible, more characteristic effects are produced by playing the tones of the harmony

3. To sift or separate by means of a harp or screen: as, to harp grain; to harp sand. See harp, n., 4 and 5. [Scotch.]

Harpa[1] (här'pä), n. [NL., < LL. harpa, a harp: see harp.] A genus of mollusks, representative of the family Harpidæ, having a comparatively wide aperture and ventricose cross-ribbed whorls; the harp-shells. There are several species, of most tropical seas. Lamarck, Jour. Soc. Hist. Nat., 1799. See cut under harp-shell.

harpa[2], n. See harpe.

Harpactor (här-pak'tor), n. [NL., < Gr. ἁρπάκτωρ, var. of ἁρπακτήρ, a robber, < ἁρπάζειν, snatch, seize, steal.] A genus of predatory heteropterous insects, of the family Reduviidæ. The head is convex behind the eyes, the ocelli are distant and knobbed, and the first antennal joint is as long as and stouter than the two following. Harpactor cinctus, about 10 millimeters long, and easily recognized by its yellowish-brown color and banded legs, is abundant in the eastern parts of North America.

Harpactor cinctus (line shows natural size), and beak of same enlarged.

Harpactorides (här-pak-tor'i-dēz), n. pl. [NL., < Harpactor + -ides.] A group of heteropterous insects, named from the genus Harpactor.

Harpagidæ (här-paj'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Harpax (Harpag-), 2, + -idæ.] A family of orthopterous insects regarded by Burmeister as a subfamily of Mantidæ, having two projections on the vertex and spurs on the four hinder tibiæ. It includes several genera besides Harpax, the typical genus.

Harpagifer (här-paj'i-fėr), n. [NL., < Gr. ἁρπάγη, a hook, + L. ferre = E. bear[1].] The typical genus of Harpagiferidæ: so called from the hook-like spine which arises from the operculum. J. Richardson, 1848.

Harpagiferidæ (här-paj-i-fer'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Harpagifer + -idæ.] A family of acanthopterygian fishes, typified by the genus Harpagifer. The body is naked, the snout rounded, the dorsal fins are two in number (the first short and the second oblong), and the anal fin is shorter than the second dorsal. Only two species, inhabitants of the antarctic seas, are known.

Harpago (här'pa-gō), n. [NL., < L. harpago(n-), a hook, grapple: see harpagon.] 1. A genus of mollusks. Klein, 1753.—2. [l. c.; pl. harpagones (här-pa-gō'nēz).] In entom., one of the clasps of the genital armature of a lepidopterous insect.

harpagon†, n. [< L. harpago(n-), < Gr. ἁρπάγη, a hook, a rake, < ἁρπάζειν, snatch, seize: see harpoon, harpy.] A grappling-iron.

At last the enemies from out the Carthaginian ships began to cast out certain loggets, with yron hookes at the end (which the souldiers call harpagones), . . . for to take hold upon the Roman ships. Holland, tr. of Livy, p. 746.

harpagones, n. Plural of harpago, 2.

Harpagophytum (här-pa-gof'i-tum), n. [< Gr. ἁρπάγη, a hook (see harpagon), + φύτον, a plant.] A genus of dicotyledonous gamopetalous plants founded by Meisner in 1840, belonging to the natural family Pedaliaceæ, distinguished botanically from Pedalium and other related genera by having numerous ovules instead of only two in each cell. It embraces two or three species, natives of South Africa. It derives its name from its peculiar fruit, which is armed with long and strong hooked spines, adhering firmly to the mouth or nose of animals which touch them while grazing, a circumstance from which the principal species, H. procumbens, has acquired the name of grapple-plant. The plants are procumbent perennial herbs of whitish aspect, with incised leaves, and solitary short-pedicelled flowers in their axils.

Harpagornis (här-pa-gôr'nis), n. [NL., < Gr. ἁρπαξ (ἁρπαγ-), robbing, rapacious (see Harpax), + ὄρνις, a bird.] 1. A genus of subfossil raptorial birds of New Zealand, of size and strength sufficiently great to enable them to prey upon the moas. Julius Haast, 1872.—2. [l. c.] A bird of this genus.

Harpagus (här'pa-gus), n. [NL., < Gr. ἁρπάγη, a hook: see harpagon.] 1. A notable genus of South American falcons with bidentate or doubly toothed beak, such as H. bidentatus or H. diodon. Also called Bidens (Spix, 1824), Diodon (Lesson, 1831), and Diplodon (Nitzsch, 1840). N. A. Vigors, 1824.—2. A genus of tineid moths. Stephens, 1834.

Harpalidæ (här-pal'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Harpalus + -idæ.] The Harpalinæ rated as a separate family. The same or a similar group is also called Harpalida, Harpalidea, Harpalides, and Harpalini.

Harpalinæ (här-pa-lī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Harpalus + -inæ.] A subfamily of beetles, of the family Carabidæ, typified by the genus Harpalus. It includes adephagous beetles with the middle coxal cavities closed by the sterna, the epimera not reaching the coxæ, no antennal grooves on the head, the supraorbital setæ distinct, and the ambulatorial abdominal setæ usually well developed. They are generally found under stones.

harpaline (här'pa-lin), a. Pertaining to or having the characters of the Harpalinæ or Harpalidæ.

Harpalus (här'pa-lus), n. [NL., < Gr. ἁρπαλέος, greedy, < ἁρπάζειν, snatch, seize.] The typical genus of Harpalinæ, containing many large flattened black beetles, as H. caliginosus (Say), a species about an inch long, found in the United States. Latreille, 1802.

Harpax (här'paks), n. [NL., < Gr. ἁρπαξ, rapacious, < ἁρπάζειν, snatch, seize: see harpagon, harpoon, harpy.] 1. A genus of fossil shells, of the group Pectinacea, oblong and somewhat triangular in shape, the hinge being formed by two projecting teeth. It is now included in the genus Plicatula. Parkinson, 1811.—2. The typical genus of Harpagidæ. Serville, 1831.

harpe, harpa[2] (här'pē, -pä), n. [NL., < Gr. ἅρπη, a sickle, simitar, hook.] 1. In classical myth., the peculiarly shaped sword of Hermes, lent by him to Perseus, who with it cut off the head of Medusa. It is represented sometimes as curved like a sickle, and sometimes with a straight blade from which projects a curved point or tooth.

2. In entom., the inwardly projecting armature of the interior of the valves of the genital organs of lepidopterous insects. Gosse.—3. [cap.] In ichth., a genus of fishes. T. N. Gill, 1863.

Harpephyllum (här-pē-fil'um), n. [NL. (Bernhardi, 1844), < Gr. ἅρπη, a simitar, + φύλλον, a leaf.] A genus of South African evergreen trees, belonging to the family Anacardiaceæ and tribe Spondieæ, distinguished from related genera by its dicœcious flowers (the male flowers having 8 or 9 stamens), and by its obovate, two-celled drupe. It has alternate odd-pinnate leaves crowded at the ends of the branches; the leaflets are falcate or sword-shaped. Only one species, H. Caffrum, is known, which is called Kaffir's simitar-tree by the English and Eschenhout by the Dutch colonists. The fruit, which is edible, is called zuurebesges.

harper (här'pėr), n. [< ME. harpere, herper, harpour, < AS. hearpere (= MHG. harpfære, G. harfner), a harper, < hearpian, harp: see harp, v.] 1. One who plays on the harp.

Struck with a harping-iron the younger foe.
Waller, Battle of the Summer Islands.

harpist (här'pist), n. [= F. harpiste = Pg. harpista, arpista = Sp. It. arpista; as harp + -ist. The proper E. word is harper.] One who plays on the harp; a harper.

That Ægrian harpist, for whose lay Tigers with hunger pinde and left their pray.
W. Browne, Britannia's Pastorals, i. 5.

harp-lute (härp'lūt), n. A variety of guitar invented early in the nineteenth century, in which, by pressing a dital or thumb-key, the pitch of the strings may be chromatically raised. See dital harp, under dital.

harpoon (här-pön'), n. [= G. harpune = Dan. Sw. harpun, < D. harpoen (pron. as E. harpoon), < F. harpon, orig. a cramp-iron, hence a grappling-iron, a harpoon, = Sp. arpón = Pg. arpão, a harpoon; connected with OF. harpe, a dog's claw or paw, harper, grapple, grasp, Sp. Pg. arpar, tear to pieces, rend, claw; these perhaps being shortened forms from the root of L. harpago(n-), a grappling-iron, hook, drag (> It. arpagone, a harpoon: see harpagon), < Gr. ἁρπάγη, a hook, a rake, < ἁρπάζειν, snatch, seize, the shorter base appearing in ἅρπη, a bird of prey: see harpy.] A missile weapon used in capturing whales and large fish, and either thrown by hand or fired from a gun. See harpoon-gun. In the older form of this weapon the head is a heavy, flat, triangular piece of iron with strong barbs, sharpened on the outer edges to enable it to penetrate deeply, and fastened to a handle or shank, 2½ or 3 feet long, to which is attached a long cord or rope. In a later form the head has but one barb. The common non-explosive harpoon is not employed by whalemen to kill the whale, but merely to fasten it to the boat, in order that the latter may be hauled up alongside the animal, which is then killed by a lance. (See exploding harpoon, below.) The harpoons that are to be first used are carried at the head of the whale-boat, six being included in the outfit of a boat. The first two are known as the first and second irons; the rest as the spare harpoons, one of which is the drag-iron. The first harpoon is darted into the whale by hand, and the second follows if there is time; if not, it is thrown overboard to prevent fouling with the outgoing line. See toggle-iron.

The line is joined to the harpoon by the "foregoer," a piece of rope somewhat lighter and more pliable than whale-line. The foregoer being the only part of the line drawn out by the harpoon while in flight, its length, usually from 10 to 12 fathoms, regulates the distance the harpoon may be fired. Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 526.

Bomb-harpoon, an explosive harpoon that may be thrust by hand or discharged from a swivel-gun; also, a bomb-lance.—Conch harpoon, a barbed spear with fixed head and single point, used in the capture of large fish. [Bahamas, and Florida, U. S.]—Electric harpoon, a bomb-lance in which the charge is fired by means of an electric fuse, the connection being made by means of a wire in the harpoon-line. See bomb-lance.—Exploding or explosive harpoon, a harpoon the head of which is filled with an explosive; also, improperly, a bomb-lance.—Toggle-harpoon, the ordinary toggle-iron.

harpoon (här-pön'), v. t. [< harpoon, n.] To strike, catch, or kill with a harpoon.

The beluga is usually caught in nets, but is sometimes harpooned. Pennant.

harpoon-arrow (här-pön'ar″ō), n. An arrow propelled by a spring consisting of a bent rod or bow, used in fishing by the Eskimos of Alaska.

harpooneer†, n. [Also harpoonier, harponier; < harpoon + -eer.] Same as harpooner.

When they espy him [the whale] on the top of the water, . . . they row toward him in a Shallop, in which the Harponier stands ready with both his hands to dart his Harping-iron. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 742.

harpooner (här-pö'nėr), n. [< harpoon + *-er*¹.] One who throws a harpoon.

Each sail is set to catch the favouring gale,
While on the yard-arm the harpooner sits.
Grainger, The Sugar Cane, ii.

harpoon-fork (här-pön'fôrk), n. A hay-fork consisting of two barbed points like harpoons, forming a tool shaped like an inverted U.

harpoon-gun (här-pön'gun), n. A gun from which a harpoon or toggle-iron may be discharged. It may be either a gun fired from the shoulder or a swivel-gun. The projectile may be an explosive harpoon or lance (see bomb-lance), or simply a toggle-iron, without the pole, having an eye in the after end of the shank into which is bent one end of the tow-line, the latter being either on the outside of the barrel of the gun or doubled up in the bore.

harpoon-shuttle (här-pön'shut″l), n. A long shuttle or needle used in weaving large brush mats which are employed in building dikes and levees, and in other hydraulic constructions.

Harporhynchus (här-pō-ring'kus), n. [NL., < Gr. ἅρπη, a sickle, + ῥύγχος, bill.] A notable genus of mocking-thrushes, of the subfamily Mimineæ; the bow-billed mockers, or thrashers: so called from the arcuation of the bill. The common thrasher or brown thrush of the United States is H. rufus; there are numerous other species in the southwestern United States and Mexico, as the Californian thrasher (H. redivivus), the Yuma thrasher (H. lecontei), etc. This name was given by Cabanis in 1848; the genus had before been called Harpes and Toxostoma, names both preoccupied in other connections; the name Methriopterus was given to the genus by Reichenbach in 1850.

harp-pedal (härp'ped″al), n. One of the foot-levers by which the strings of a harp are temporarily shortened and their pitch raised. See harp, 1. Also called harp-treadle.

harp-seal (härp'sēl), n. The Greenland seal, Phoca grœnlandica or Pagophilus grœnlandicus, a large hair-seal of a whitish color with a crescentic black band on each side meeting its fellow over the back, forming a figure likened to a harp. It is common from Newfoundland northward, and is of gregarious and roving habits, congregating in vast numbers on ice-floes, where many thousands are annually killed. The Newfoundland sealers call them harpers or harps; the female is known as Jennie harp; the young in the second year, hopper-harp or bedlamer; in the third year, when assuming adult characters, turner-harp.

harpsecol†, n. See harpsicol.

harp-shell (härp'shel), n. A shell of the genus Harpa. Species such as the East Indian H. ventricosa are very common in collections. The shell is large and inflated, yet not capacious enough to hold the whole animal.

Harp-shell (Harpa ventricosa).

harp-shilling (härp'shil″ing), n. See harper, 2.

harpsichon†, n. See harpsichord.

harpsichord (härp'si-kôrd), n. [Formerly also arpsichord; a corrupt form, otherwise perverted harpsichon, harpsicon, harpsicol, harpsecol, and even harpers-cord (the letter s being intrusive); < OF. harpe-chorde (= It. arpicordo), < harpe, harp, + chorde, corde, chord, cord.] A stringed musical instrument in use in the sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth centuries, which in its form and in the arrangement of the keyboard and strings resembled a piano, but in which the tone was produced by the plucking or snapping of the strings by leather or quill points, which were set in jacks connected by levers with the keys. In form it usually resembled a modern grand pianoforte, though both square and upright varieties were also made. The length of the keyboard was from four to six and a half octaves. The number of separate strings to a key varied from one to four, sometimes including one tuned an octave above the others; the latter variety was called a double harpsichord. The tone was weak and tinkling, and gradation of force was impossible. Two keyboards were sometimes combined, one for soft effects, the other for loud. Numerous devices, usually connected with the jacks, were introduced at different times to secure variety in force, and especially in quality. These mechanisms, which often aimed to simulate the tone-qualities of various orchestral instruments, were usually controlled by stop-knobs near the keyboard. The harpsichord, though essentially different from the pianoforte, was its immediate predecessor. Before 1800 it was regularly used in all dramatic music, especially in accompanying recitatives, and in orchestral music. The conductor usually directed from his seat at a harpsichord placed amid the other instruments.

If he the tinkling harpsichord regards
As inoffensive, what offence in cards?
Cowper, Progress of Error, l. 148.

Vis-à-vis harpsichord, a harpsichord with keyboards for two performers.

harpsichord-graces (härp'si-kôrd-grā″sez), n. pl. Various melodic embellishments, such as turns, trills, etc., introduced freely into music for the harpsichord, mainly to compensate for its unsustainable tone. See embellishment, 3, and grace, 6.

harpsichordist (härp'si-kôr-dist), n. [< harpsichord + -ist.] A performer upon the harpsichord.

harpsicol†, harpsecol† (härp'si-kọl), n. A harpsichord.

harpster† (härp'stėr), n. [ME. not found; < AS. hearpestre, a female harper, < hearpian, harp: see harp and -ster.] A female performer on the harp.

harpstring (härp'string), n. [< ME. harpstryng, harpestring, < AS. hearpestreng (= Icel. hörpustrengr), < hearpe, harp, + streng, a string.] One of the strings or cords of a harp.

Of the schepe is cast away no thynge, . . . for harpestryngis his ropys seruythe ichoone.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 17.

As harpstrings are broken asunder
By music they throb to express.
Longfellow, Sandalphon.

harp-style (härp'stīl), n. In music, a style or method of composition or of performance like that best suited to the harp; especially, a style abounding in arpeggio effects.

harp-treadle (härp'tred″l), n. Same as harp-pedal.

harpula (här'pū-lą), n. A valuable tree, Harpullia cupanioides: so called at Chittagong in Bengal. See Harpullia.

Harpulia (här-pū'li-ą), n. [< harpula.] Same as Harpullia.

Harpullia (här-pul'i-ą), n. [NL. (Roxburgh, 1820), < harpula.] A genus of dicotyledonous choripetalous trees, belonging to the family Sapindaceæ and type of the tribe Harpullieæ of Radlkofer, distinguished from related genera by its two-valved capsule with loculicidal dehiscence. It embraces 23 species, mostly natives of tropical Asia, Australia, and Madagascar. They are erect trees with alternate, odd-pinnate leaves, green flowers in racemes or panicles, and large red or orange-colored fruit. The Australian species have an economic importance, either as hardy evergreen shade-trees or for the quality of their wood. H. Hillii attains a height of 80 feet, and furnishes the tulip-wood of Queensland, which is valuable for fine cabinet-work. The Moreton bay tulip-wood, H. pendula, is equally valuable. H. cupanioides, the harpula of India, has long been in cultivation.

Harpullieæ (här-pu-lī'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Harpullia + -eæ.] A tribe of plants, of the family Sapindaceæ, established by Radlkofer, embracing the genera Harpullia, Conchopetalum, Magonia, Xanthoceras, Ungnadia, and two other little-known genera. See Harpullia.

harpy (här'pi), n.; pl. harpies (-piz). [Early mod. E. harpie, < OF. harpie, harpye, < L. harpyia, usually in pl. harpyiæ, < Gr. ἅρπυιαι, pl., the harpies, lit. 'the snatchers,' in Homer a personification of whirlwinds or hurricanes, in later myth. hideous winged creatures (see def. 1); cf. ἅρπη, a certain bird of prey; < ἁρπ-άζ-ειν, snatch, seize, = L. rapere, snatch, seize: see rap[2], rapture.] 1. In Gr. myth., a winged monster, ravenous and filthy, having the face and body of a woman and the wings of a bird of prey, with the feet and fingers armed with sharp claws and the face pale with hunger, serving as a minister of divine vengeance, and defiling everything it touched. The harpies were commonly regarded either as two (Aëllo and Ocypete) or three in number, but occasionally several others are mentioned. They were originally conceived of simply as storm-winds sent by the gods to carry off offenders, and were later personified as fair-haired winged maidens, their features and characteristics being more or less repulsive at different times and places. The harpies have been to some extent confounded by modern scholars with the sirens, which, though of kindred origin, were goddesses of melody, even if of a sweetness that was harmful to mankind, and were represented as women in the upper parts of their bodies and as birds below.

> For having caught her Joseph all alone,
> She Harpie-like clap'd one bold tallon fast.
> J. Beaumont, Psyche, i. 227.

> These prodigies [visions] . . . unspeakable, > Abominable, strangers at my hearth
> Not welcome, harpies miring every dish.
> Tennyson, Lucretius.

Hence—2. A rapacious, grasping person; one who is repulsively greedy and unfeeling.

> I will . . . do you any embassage . . . rather than hold three words' conference with this harpy.
> Shak., Much Ado, ii. 1.

> A company of irreligious harpies, scraping, griping catchpoles. Burton, Anat. of Mel., To the Reader, p. 54.

3. In ornith.: (a) The harpy-eagle. (b) An English book-name of the marsh-harrier or moor-buzzard, Circus æruginosus. Also called white-headed harpy.—4. In mammal., a fruit-bat of the genus Harpyia.—Harpy monument, a sculptured funeral monument from Xanthus in Lycia. Among the reliefs upon it are four figures of birds with women's heads and arms, each clasping tenderly a small human form evidently representing a soul. These bird-figures were at first held to be harpies, whence the name of the monument. It is now in the British Museum.

Winged Genius, from the Harpy Tomb.

Harpya (här'pi-ä), n. Same as Harpyia.

harpy-eagle (här'pi-ē″gl), n. A very large South American crested eagle, somewhat longer than the golden eagle, and one of the most powerful birds of prey, with enormous beak and talons, crested head, long fan-shaped tail, and rounded wings. See Harpyia and Thrasaëtus.

harpy-footed (här'pi-fůt″ed), a. Having feet like those of a harpy.

> Thither by harpy-footed furies haled,
> At certain revolutions all the damn'd > Are brought. Milton, P. L., ii. 596.

Harpyia (här-pi'i-ä), n. [NL., < L. harpyia, < Gr. ἅρπυια, a harpy: see harpy.] 1. In mammal., a genus of fruit-bats, of the family Pteropodidæ. The body and limbs are as in Cynopterus, the nostrils tubular, the premaxillary bones united in front, 1 incisor and 1 canine in each upper and lower half-jaw, 2 premolars above, 3 below on each side, and 2 molars in each upper and lower half-jaw. There are two species, of the Austromalayan subregion. Illiger, 1811.

2. In ornith., either a generic or a specific name of the great harpy-eagle of South America, Harpyia destructor or Thrasaëtus harpyia. G. Cuvier, 1817.—3. In entom., a genus of puss-moths, containing such as the European H. vinuli: synonymous in part with Cerura, in part with Stauropus. Ochsenheimer, 1810.

Harpy-eagle (Harpyia destructor or Thrasaëtus harpyia).

Also Harpia, Harpya.

harquebus†, arquebus† (här'-, är'ke-bus), n. [Also harquebuss, harquebuse, arquebus, harquebuze, harcubuse, archibuze (after It.), harquebush, hargubush, etc., in many unstable forms; < F. harquebuse, arquebuse, dial. harkibuse, after It. arcobugio, arcobuso, now archibugio, archibuso = Sp. Pg. arcabuz, corrupt forms of a form nearer the orig., namely, OF. hacquebuche, hacquebute, etc., represented by E. hackbut: see hackbut. The word, in all forms, became obsolete with the thing; but the form harquebus, with many minor variations of spelling, is the one now commonly used by archæologists and historians.] 1. An old form of hand-firearm. The earliest hand-guns having been mere tubes fired by a burning match applied to the touch-hole, the name harquebus was given to a gun fitted with a match-holder which came down upon the priming-pan when a trigger was pulled. Later, when the wheel-lock was introduced, a piece fitted with it was still called a harquebus. After the musket had been introduced into the French army (about 1575), the harquebus remained the favorite weapon of private persons, because it was lighter and was supposed to have greater precision. It was not a heavy arm, and was rarely fired from a rest, except by horsemen, who had a light rest secured to the saddle-bow. But during the sixteenth century many experiments were made with firearms throwing balls of six or even four to the pound, mounted on swivels, for rampart-defense, and these, when fitted with a match-lock, were called great harquebuses; in like manner arquebuse à croc, or 'with a rest,' was a name given to a heavy but still portable weapon, which was superseded by the musket.

> They [the Janizaries] serve with harquebushes, armed besides with cymiters and hatchets.
> Sandys, Travailes, p. 38.

> A chance-medley combat ensued, with lances, arquebuses, cross-bows, and scimetars. Irving, Granada, p. 452.

> Such fine results had been obtained by the English longbow men that, although in the time of Henry VIII. the arquebus had been brought to a far more perfect state than when first introduced, it was forbidden by Act of Parliament to be used, or even to be possessed, by any of the king's subjects. W. W. Greener, The Gun, p. 11.

2. A harquebusier.

> He marcheth in the middle, guarded about
> With full five hundred harquebuze on foot.
> Peele, Battle of Alcazar, iv. 1.

Double harquebus, a harquebus with two locks, either both of the same mechanism and merely as a precaution against the inferior workmanship of the day, or one a match-lock and the other a flint- or wheel-lock.

harquebusade†, arquebusade† (här″-, är″ke-bus-ād'), n. [F. arquebusade, shot of a harquebus (eau d'arquebusade, a remedy for gunshot wounds), < arquebuse, a harquebus: see harquebus.] 1. The firing of a harquebus; a discharge of harquebuses.

> The soldiers discharged a salve of harqubusaides on the poor people.
> Roger Williams, Brief Discourse of War (1590).

2. A lotion applied to gunshot wounds, sprains, bruises, etc. Also harquebusade-water.

> You will find a letter from my sister to thank you for the arquebusade water which you sent her. Chesterfield.

harquebusier†, arquebusier† (här″-, är″ke-bus-ēr'), n. [Also harquebussier, arquebuseer, harcubusier, etc.; < F. arquebusier (ML. arcubusarius), < arquebuse, harquebuse, harquebus: see harquebus. Cf. hackbutter.] A soldier armed with a harquebus.

> He giueth to his Harcubusiers certaine allowance for powder and shot. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 239.

> Well fare an old harquebuzier yet,
> Could prime his powder, and give fire, and hit,
> All in a twinkling! B. Jonson, Alchemist, v. 3.

> The Spanish arquebusiers, screened by their defences, poured a galling fire into the dense masses of the enemy. Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., ii. 12.

harr[1]† (här), n. Same as har[1].

harr[2] (här), v. i. [A var. of hurr, or an aspirated form of arr[3].] To snarl like a dog. Grose. [North. Eng.]

harr[3] (här), n. Same as har[2].

harra (har'ä), n. See hara-nut.

harrage† (har'āj), v. t. A corrupt form of harass, perhaps confused with harry.

> Of late the Danes . . . had harraged all this countrey. Fuller, Hist. Camb. Univ., i.

harrateen†, harateen† (har-a-tēn'), n. [Origin not ascertained.] A coarse linen cloth, mentioned as late as 1739.

> Mean time, thus silver'd with meanders gay,
> In mimic pride the snail-wrought tissue shines, > Perchance of tabby or of harrateen
> Not ill expressive. Shenstone, Economy, iii.

> You never saw such a wretched hovel, lean, unpainted, and half its nakedness barely shaded with harateen stretched till it cracks. Walpole, Letters, II. 4.

harridan (har'i-dan), n. [Origin uncertain; supposed by Skeat to be a variant of OF. aridelle, haridelle, a worn-out horse, a lean, ill-favored jade, F. a jade, a thin scraggy woman (cf. jade[1], similarly used); appar. dim. < aride, dry, withered: see arid.] An odious old woman; a hag; a vixenish woman.

> I have a scheme to see you shortly with the old harridan's consent, and even to make her a go-between in our interview. Sheridan, The Rivals, iii. 3

> Such a weak, watery, wicked old harridan substituted for the pretty creature I had been used to see. De Quincey, Secret Societies, i harrier[1] (har'i-ėr), n. [< hare[1] + -ier[1].] A small kind of hound employed in hunting the hare. There are particular breeds of the harrier, as the large slow-hunting harrier and the little fox-beagle, and a cross-breed between these. In all the scent is extremely keen, which enables them to follow all the doublings of the hare. Also spelled harier.

harrier[2] (har'i-ėr), n. [< harry + -er[1]. Cf. harrower[2].] 1. One who harries. See harry, v.

> She [Grandeur] hides her mountains and her sea
> From the harriers of scenery,
> Who hunt down sunsets, and huddle and bay,
> Mouthing and mumbling the dying day.
> Lowell, Appledore.

2. A bird of prey of the family Falconidæ, subfamily Circinæ, and genus Circus. There are about 12 species, of most parts of the world, of light build, small-bodied in proportion to the length of wing and tail, with a rather long and slender scaly shank, untoothed bill, large external ear-parts, and a ruff or disk somewhat like an owl's. The best-known species is the European hen-harrier or ringtail, Circus cyaneus, from which the common marsh-hawk of America, C. hudsonius, scarcely differs. (See cut under Circinæ.) The European marsh-harrier is C. æruginosus. (See harpy, 3 (b).) Montagu's harrier is another species, C. cinerascens. The males of the harriers differ much from the females, being bluish above instead of dark-brown, and are often called blue-hawks.

> It [a pheasant] was immediately pursued by the blue hawk, known by the name of the hen-harrier.
> Gilbert White, Nat. Hist. of Selborne, Obs. on Birds.

harriment (har'i-ment), n. [Sc. also herriment; < harry + -ment.] Harrying; vexation; trouble.

> Staumrel, corky-headed, graceless gentry,
> The herryment and ruin of the country.
> Burns, Brigs of Ayr.

Harrington (har'ing-ton), n. [So called because the patent for issuing it was first granted (in 1613) to Lord Harrington.] A brass farthing-token current in England under James I. and Charles I.

Obverse. Reverse.

Harrington of James I., British Museum. (Size of the original.)

They [plums] that ar litle ones, and harde, and harrish taste, ar sterk noughts. Turner, Herbal (1562).

Black feels as if you were feeling needles' points, or some harsh sand; and red feels very smooth. Boyle.

I met my lady once;
A woman like a butt, and harsh as crabs.
Tennyson, Walking to the Mail.

The haze of the October afternoon . . . blended in all and sundry of the local colors, harsh and harmonious, into one pleasant bit of gleaming tone.
G. H. Boughton, Artist Strolls in Holland, vi.

2. Hard or severe in effect; of such a nature as to be repellent from any physical point of view.

The valleyes and sides of the hills very fertile, but the mountaines harsh, and of a sulphurous composition.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, II. 272.

He who writes honestly is no more an enemy to the offender than the physician to the patient, when he prescribes harsh remedies to an inveterate disease.
Dryden, Abs. and Achit., To the Reader.

3. Repugnant to the mind or the sensibilities; mentally or morally forbidding; hard to bear, endure, resolve upon, etc.

The very shining force of excellent virtue, though in a very harrish subject, had wrought a kind of reverence in them. Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, iv.

How charming is divine philosophy!
Not harsh and crabbed, as dull fools suppose.
Milton, Comus, l. 477.

Bear patiently the harsh words of thy enemies.
Jer. Taylor.

But, like all compulsory legislation, that of Nature is harsh and wasteful in its operation.

Hartford fern. Same as climbing-fern.

hartin (här'tin), n. [< (Ober)hart (see def.) + *-in*2.] A fossil resin ($C_{10}H_{17}O$) resembling hartite, massive, but crystallizing from rock-oil in needles belonging to the trimetric system. It is found in the lignite of Oberhart, Austria.

hartite (här'tīt), n. [< (Ober)hart (see def.) + *-ite*2.] A fossil resin (C_3H_5) resembling hartin, and found like it in the lignite of Oberhart, Austria.

Hartleian (härt'lē-an), a. Pertaining or relating to David Hartley, M. D. (1705–57), an English metaphysician generally regarded as the founder of the associationist school. His "Observations on Man" was published in 1749.

Their mode of thinking [that of the Philosophic Radicals] was . . . a combination of Bentham's point of view with . . . the Hartleian metaphysics.
J. S. Mill, Autobiog., p. 105.

Hartogia (här-tō'ji-ą), n. [NL., named after John Hartog, an early traveler.] An untenable name for Mystrothamnus, a genus of plants, of the family Celastraceæ. It is distinguished by having the stamens located between the lobes of the disk, and by its ovoid fruit and serrate leaves. The only species, M. Africanus (Hartogia Capensis of Linnæus), is a small tree of South Africa. Its wood is remarkably hard, tough, fine-grained, and susceptible of polish. The Dutch colonists call it ladle-wood, from the chief use to which they put it. Also used for veneering.

hartroyal (härt'roi″al), n. 1†. Same as hart royal (which see, under *hart*1).—2. A plant, a species of plantain.

hart's-ballst (härts'bâlz), n. Same as hart's-truffles.

hart's-clover (härts'klō″vėr), n. [Cf. hart-clover.] A plant, Melilotus officinalis, the yellow melilot: so called, it is said, because deer delight to feed on it. Also called hart's-trefoil.

hart's-eyet, n. Wild dittany. Topsell.

hartshorn (härts'hôrn), n. [= D. hartshoorn; ★as hart's, poss., + horn; cf. G. hirschhorn = Sw. hjorthorn = Dan. hjortehorn.] 1. The antler of the hart or stag, Cervus elaphus. The constituent elements of deciduous antlers differ materially from those of persistent horns, as of the ox, and are identical, or nearly so, with those of bone. These antlers were formerly much used as a source of ammonia, and the products of their distillation were employed in medicine under the name of the volatile salt of hartshorn, or spirit of hartshorn; but they have now been superseded by simpler preparations of ammonia and ammonium carbonate, often called by the same name. See ammonia, 1.

Hartshorn has been usually imported into this country from Germany, in the form of shavings. These are without smell and taste, pliable, and of an ivory yellow color.
U. S. Dispensatory, p. 1659.

2. Spirit of hartshorn; ammonia.—3. In bot. See hartshorn-plantain.—Jelly of hartshorn, a nutritive jelly formerly obtained from shavings of the horns of harts, now procured from shavings of the bones of calves.

hartshorn-plantain (härts'hôrn-plan″tān), n. A species of plantain, Plantago Coronopus, common in Europe: so called from its furcated leaves. See buck's-horn.

hart's-thorn (härts'thôrn), n. The plant Rhamnus cathartica. See buckthorn, 1.

hart's-tongue (härts'tung), n. [< ME. hertes tunge, hertys tonge, hertes tounge; not found in AS.; = MHG. hirzes zunge, G. hirschzunge.] A fern, Phyllitis Scolopendrium (Scolopendrium vulgare), with long simple fronds; also, rarely, Olfersia cervina. See Scolopendrium.

hart's-trefoil (härts'trē″foil), n. Same as hart's-clover.

hart's-truffles (härts'truf″lz), n. A fungus, Elaphomyces cervinus, supposed to be an aphrodisiac, now sold under the name of lycoperdon nuts. Formerly also called hart's-balls and deer-balls.

hartwort (härt'wėrt), n. One of several umbelliferous plants of the genera Tordylium, Seseli, and Bupleurum, especially Tordylium maximum, of central Europe and the Mediterranean region, and also sparingly found in England. See Tordylium.

harum-scarum (hăr'um-skăr'um), a. and n. [Also formerly harem-scarem; a riming compound of uncertain elements, now appar. accom. to *hare*1, as a type of unreasoning haste and instability, and to scare, in allusion to its timidity. Cf. E. dial. havey-scavey, helter-skelter (in Cumberland), also wavering, doubtful (Grose).] I. a. Harebrained; flighty; giddy; rash.

He seemed a mighty rattling harem-scarem gentleman.
Mme. D'Arblay, Diary, I. 358.

She was one of the first who brought what I call harum-scarum manners into fashion.
Miss Edgeworth, Belinda, iii.

Don't take these flights
Upon moon-shiny nights,
With gay harum-scarum young men.
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, II. 162.

They had a quarrel with Sir Thomas Newcome's own son, a harum-scarum lad, who ran away, and then was sent to India. Thackeray, Newcomes, v.

II. n. A giddy, harebrained, or rash person.

When I married I was a girl like you, only ten times wilder, the greatest harum-scarum in the county!
Mrs. Craik, Agatha's Husband, xii.

haruspex (ha-rus'peks), n.; pl. haruspices (-pi-sēz). [L., also written, less correctly, aruspex, lit. inspector of entrails, < haru-* = Skt. hira, entrails (akin to χολάδες, entrails, χορδή, gut (> ult. E. *cord*1, chord, q. v.), and to E. yarn, q. v.), + specere, view, inspect: see species, spectacle, etc. Cf. L. hariolus, a soothsayer, a word containing the same element haru-: see hariolation.] One of a class of minor priests or soothsayers in ancient Rome, of Etrurian origin, whose function it was to inspect the entrails of victims killed in sacrifice, and by them, as well as by certain natural phenomena, to interpret the will of the gods. Their duties were thus similar to those of the augurs, who, however, occupied a much higher position in the state.

A little after the civil war between Cæsar and Pompey, the haruspices ordered the temples of the deities to be demolished. Jortin, On Eccles. Hist.

"Am I to be frightened," he said, in answer to some report of the haruspices, "because a sheep is without a heart?" Froude, Cæsar, p. 510.

haruspication (ha-rus-pi-kā'shon), n. [< haruspex (-spic-) + -ation.] The act or practice of prognosticating by the inspection of the entrails of animals slain in sacrifice; divination.

Haruspication belongs, among the lower races, especially to the Malays and Polynesians, and to various Asiatic tribes. . . . Captain Burton's account from Central Africa perhaps fairly displays its symbolic principle. He describes the mganga or sorcerer taking an ordeal by killing and splitting a fowl and inspecting its inside; i. blackness or blemish appears about the wings, it denotes the treachery of children and kinsmen; the backbone convicts the mother and grandmother; the tail shows that the criminal is the wife, etc.
E. B. Tylor, Prim. Culture, I. 111.

haruspice (ha-rus'pis), n. [< L. haruspex, pl. haruspices: see haruspex.] Same as haruspex.

haruspices, n. Plural of haruspex.

haruspicy (ha-rus'pi-si), n. [< L. haruspicium, the inspection of victims, < haruspex, haruspex: see haruspex.] Same as haruspication. Also aruspicy. See haruspex.

harvest (här'vest), n. [E. dial. and Sc. contr. harrest, harst, hairst, < ME. harvest, hervest, herfest, harvest, autumn, < AS. hærfest, autumn (as one of the four seasons lencten, sumor, hærfest, winter, without reference, except by implication, to the gathering of crops), = D. herfst, OD. also harvest, autumn, = OHG. herbist, MHG. herbest, autumn, harvest, G. herbst, autumn, dial. harvest, vintage. The Scand. forms are contracted (in such a way as to suggest a conformation to OF. Aoust, August, also harvest-time, Bret. eost = D. oogst, harvest, < L. Augustus, August): Icel. haust = Sw. Dan. höst, autumn. The fact that harvest in its earliest use (AS.) had no direct reference to the gathering of crops (see above) is against the current association of the word with L. carpere, pluck, Gr. καρπός, fruit.] 1†. The third season of the year; autumn; fall.

Heruest with the heite & the high sun
Was comyn into colde.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 12465.

2. The season of gathering the ripened crops; specifically, the time of reaping and gathering grain.

He that sleepeth in harvest is a son that causeth shame.
Prov. x. 5.

Clar. O, do not slander him, for he is kind.
1 Murd. Right, as snow in harvest.
Shak., Rich. III., i. 4.

3. A crop or crops gathered or ready to be gathered; specifically, ripe grain reaped, and stored in stacks or barns; hence, a supply of anything gathered at maturity and stored up: as, a harvest of nuts, or of ice.

To glean the broken ears after the man
That the main harvest reaps.
Shak., As you Like it, iii. 5.

Heavy harvests nod beneath the snow.
Pope, Dunciad, i. 78.

No more shall . . . Peace
Pipe on her pastoral hillock a languid note,
And watch her harvest ripen.
Tennyson, Maud, xxviii.

Hence—4. The product of any labor, or the result of any course of action; gain; result; effect; consequence.

What is that to him that reaps not harvest of his youthful joys? Tennyson, Locksley Hall.

5. The act or process of harvesting.

Look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest. John iv. 35.

The peasants urge their harvest, ply the fork.
Cowper, Table Talk, l. 214.

To owe one a day in harvest, to owe a good deed when it shall be most needed, in return for a favor received.

Heark thee, man, I owe thee a day in harst; . . . I'll pay up your thousan pund Scots. Scott, Rob Roy, xxiii.

harvest (här'vest), v. t. [< ME. hervesten = OD. herfsten = G. herbsten, draw near autumn, dial. harvest, = Icel. hausta, draw near autumn, = Sw. hösta = Dan. höste, harvest; from the noun.] To reap or gather, as corn and other crops, for the use of man and beast: often used figuratively.

Men hervesten the corn twyes a zeer.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 300.

I have seen a stock of reeds harvested and stacked, worth two or three hundred pounds. Pennant, Tour in Scotland.

harvest-apple (här'vest-ap″l), n. A small early variety of apple ripening in August.

harvest-bells (här'vest-belz), n. A beautiful gentian, Gentiana Pneumonanthe, found in nearly all parts of Europe, but rare in England. It is a perennial herb nearly a foot high, with linear leaves, and bright-blue corolla an inch and a half long, striate with fine greenish lines. It blooms in harvest-time, whence the name.

harvest-bug (här'vest-bug), n. 1. Same as harvest-tick.

This animal (which we call a harvest bug) is very minute, . . . of a bright scarlet colour, and of the genus of Acarus.
Gilbert White, Nat. Hist. of Selborne, xxxiv.

2. Same as harvest-fly. [New Eng.]

harvester (här'ves-tėr), n. 1. One who harvests.

Would she were mine, and I to-day,
Like her, a harvester of hay.
Whittier, Maud Muller.

2. A machine for gathering field-crops, such as grain, beans, flax, potatoes, etc.; specifically, a reaping-machine. Any machine for gathering field-crops is called a harvester, except the grass-cutting machines, which are called mowers or mowing-machines; any grain-harvesting machine also, except the heading-machine, is called a reaper. See mower and reaper.

3. A harvest-spider or harvestman.

harvest-feast (här'vest-fēst), n. A feast made at the ingathering of the harvest.

harvest-field (här'vest-fēld), n. A field from which a harvest is gathered.

The country people bring home from the harvest field . . . a figure made with corn, round which the men and the women were promiscuously singing, and preceded by a piper or a drum. Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, p. 468.

My brother James is in the harvest-field.
Tennyson, The Brook.

harvest-fish (här'vest-fish), n. 1. The butterfish, dollar-fish, or lafayette, Poronotus triacanthus. [New Jersey, U. It visits the North American coast in the autumn, at harvest-time.

harvest-fly (här'vest-flī), n. A homopterous insect of the family Cicadidæ; a lyerman. Cicada tibicen is known as the dog-day harvest-fly in the United States; it is a near relative of the seventeen-year cicada, and, like it, is often called locust. Sometimes called harvest-bug.

harvest-goose (här'vest-gös), n. Same as stubble-goose.

harvest-home (här'vest-hōm'), n. 1. The time of gathering the harvest; the bringing home of the harvest; hence, any opportunity for making advantage or gain.

And his chin, new reap'd, Show'd like a stubble-land at harvest-home.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., i. 3.

2. A festival held by the English peasantry in August in honor of the homing of the harvest. It was formerly observed by farm-laborers, servants, and the whole rural community, with universal merrymaking, feasting, songs and dances, and processions of oxen and horses with decorated carts and implements of husbandry. At present little remains of this custom but a supper.

As we were returning to our inn [in or near Windsor], we happened to meet some country people celebrating their harvest-home: their last load of corn they crown with flowers, having besides an image richly dressed, by which perhaps they signify Ceres; this they keep moving about, while the men and women, and men and maid servants, riding through the streets in the cart, shout as loud as they can till they arrive at the barn.
Hentzner (end of 16th century), quoted in Strutt's Sports [and Pastimes, p. 467.

3. The song sung at this festival.

Crown'd with the eares of corne, now come
And, to the pipe, sing harvest-home. Herrick.

We have ploughed, we have sowed,
We have reaped, we have mowed,
We have brought home every load,
Hone's Every-Day Book, II. 1164.

harvest-moon (här'vest-mön), n. The full moon nearest to the autumnal equinox. At that season the moon, when nearly full, rises for several consecutive nights at about the same hour, so that there is an unusual proportion of moonlight evenings. The phenomenon is more striking in higher latitudes than in the United States, and disappears entirely in the tropics. It is most marked when the ascending node of the moon's orbit is at or near the vernal equinox, as it will be in 1913. The phenomenon is due to the fact that at the time of the autumnal equinox the full moon (necessarily opposite to the sun) is in that part of its orbit which makes the least possible angle with the eastern horizon at the point where the moon rises.

The full moon which happens on or nearest to the 21st of September is called the harvest-moon.
Sir J. F. W. Herschel, Outlines of Astronomy, § 428 b.

Preserving distinct statements of certain color facts—as that the harvest-moon at rising was of such and such a red. Ruskin, Elements of Drawing, iii.

harvest-mouse (här'vest-mous), n. A very small murine rodent or mouse, Mus minutus, abundant in Europe, nesting in grain, and therefore specially observable in harvest-time. It is one of the very smallest of mice, being about 2¼ inches in length, with a tail nearly as long.

Harvest-mouse (Mus minutus or messorius) and its Nest.

harvest-spider (här'vest-spī″dėr), n. Same as harvestman, 2.

harvest-tick (här'vest-tik), n. One of several different mites or acarids which are abundant and troublesome late in the summer and in autumn. They attach themselves like ticks to the skin, become gorged with blood, and occasion much inconvenience. They are also called harvest-lice, harvest-mites, harvest-bugs, and red lice, and were formerly all placed in a spurious genus Leptus, which is composed of the six-legged immature forms of various mites, mainly harvest-mites or trombidiids, but also includes certain forms of the family Rhyncolophidæ. Thus, in England, the common harvest-bug is Rhyncolophus (formerly "Leptus") autumnalis. In the United States the same name is given to the six-legged or Leptus stage of a mite called "Leptus" irritans, the adult of which is unknown, but is probably a species of Rhyncolophus; and also to a true harvest-mite with eight legs, Trombidium americanum. See Leptus, Trombidium.

Harvest-ticks, much magnified.
"Leptus" irritans. Trombidium americanum.

Harveyize (här'vi-īz), v. t. [From H. A. Harvey, an American inventor.] To subject the face of (a steel plate, particularly a steel armor-plate), for the purpose of chilling, to a process of cementation which increases the carbon in that portion of the plate and produces a plate with a comparatively soft and ductile body and a very hard face.

Like as the waves make towards the pebbled shore,
So do our minutes hasten to their end.
Shak., Sonnets, lx.

I hastened to the spot whence the noise came.
Defoe, Robinson Crusoe.

Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates and men decay.
Goldsmith, Des. Vil., l. 51.

=Syn. Hasten, Hurry. To hasten is to work, move, etc., quickly, but properly not too quickly; to hurry is to go too fast for dignity, comfort, or thoroughness: as, to hasten to tell a piece of good news; to hasten the erection of a building; to hurry through a lesson; to look hurried. While hasten has come to be thus used only in a good sense, haste, n., hasty, and hastiness retain a bad meaning as well as a good: as, the book was evidently written in haste; he had a hasty temper; he had occasion to regret his hastiness. Indeed, hasty and hastiness usually convey censure.

II. trans. To cause to move or act with celerity; cause to make haste; drive or urge forward; expedite.

Yet for all that thei myght hem hasten, thise other were vpon hem er thei myght be half a-raied of her harneyse.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 153.

Sorrowe ne needе be hastened on,
For he will come, without calling, anone.
Spenser, Shep. Cal., May.

I would hasten my escape from the windy storm.
Ps. lv. 8.

The British . . . were joined by two companies of grenadiers, whom the noise of the firing had hastened to the spot.
Emerson, Hist. Discourse at Concord.

They are commonly worn in the West Indies and frequently on the American continent.—Red hat, a cardinal's hat. See cardinal.

It may buy the red hat yet.
C. Kingsley, Westward Ho.

To give one a (one's) hat†, to lift the hat to one, or to take it off in his presence; salute by lifting the hat.

I said nothing to you, but gave you my hat as I passed you. History of Col. Jack (1723).

To hang up one's hat in a house, to make one's self at home; be continually in another's house, especially if not very welcome.

The merchants of Calcutta are celebrated for a frank and liberal hospitality, which dates from the time when every European hung up his hat in his banker's or his agent's house on his arriving in the country.
W. H. Russell, Diary in India, I. 107.

To have a brick in one's hat. See brick[2].— To pass round the hat, to present a hat or any other convenient receptacle to receive contributions, as at a public meeting; hence, to ask for money for charitable use or some purpose of common interest.

Lamartine, after passing round the hat in Europe and America, takes to his bed from wounded pride when the French Senate votes him a subsidy, and sheds tears of humiliation. Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 370.

To thumb the hat, to determine the order or succession of the watches on board a fishing-schooner. Five or more men, each representing a dory, form a circle about the captain, placing each a thumb on the inside of the rim of a hat. The skipper, beginning at random, counts on the thumbs until he reaches the seventh. This seventh man has the first watch, the process being repeated for the other watches.

hat[1] (hat), v. t.; pret. and pp. hatted, ppr. hatting. [< hat[1], n.] 1. To provide with a hat: used chiefly in composition: as, straw-hatted girls.

That was a spurred heel which had rung on the pavement, and that was a hatted head which now passed under the arched porte-cochère of the hotel.
Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xv.

The bonneting of some unhappy wretch who has had the audacity to wear . . . a high beaver hat. . . . Woe be to the hatted one should he attempt to resent their actions. The Century, XXVI. 875.

hatamoto (hä′tä-mō′tō), n. [Jap., < hata, flag, + moto, under.] A feudatory vassal of the Tokugawa shoguns of Japan.

hatband (hat′band), n. 1. A band or ribbon placed about a hat just above the brim. A broader band of some black material, such as crape, is often worn as mourning. In Great Britain a broad band of bombazine, with bows at the back and hanging ends of some length, is worn on the hat by the undertaker and his assistants at funerals, similar bands of crape, but with shorter ends, being worn by the chief mourners then and for some time thereafter.

I became conscious of the servile Pumblechook in a black cloak and several yards of hat-band. . . . We were all going to "follow." Dickens, Great Expectations, xxxv.

2. In her., a bearing representing a ribbon, or sometimes a sort of braid ending in tassels.— Dick's hatband, a phrase used satirically in proverbial comparisons, such as as queer, as fine, or as tight as Dick's hatband. Said (doubtless erroneously) to allude to the authority (typified by the royal crown) conferred upon Richard (Dick) Cromwell as Lord Protector of England, in succession to his father Oliver Cromwell, for which he was notoriously unfit. He held it from September, 1658, to May, 1659, when he resigned.— Gold hatband†, a nobleman at a university; a tuft. Davies.

His companion is ordinarily some stale fellow that has beene notorious for an ingle to gold hatbands, whom hee admires at first, afterwards scornes.
Bp. Earle, Micro-cosmographie, Young Gentleman of [the Universitie.

3. An opening, generally rectangular, in a ship's deck, for taking in or discharging the cargo, or for affording a passage into the interior of the ship; a hatchway. The fore-hatch is generally just forward of the foremast, the main-hatch forward of the mainmast, and the after-hatch between the main- and mizzenmasts. See cut under hatchway.

The briny seas, which saw the ship infold thee,
Would vault up to the hatches to behold thee.
Drayton, De la Poole to Queen Mary.

Hence—4. Any similar opening, as in the floor of a building, or a cover placed over it.—5. An opening made in a mine, or made in searching for a mine.—6†. A rack for hay.

Hay hertely he had in haches on hight.
Gawan and Gologras, II. 9.

7. A frame or weir in a river, for catching fish.—8. A bedstead. [Scotch.]

Curst thirst of gold! O how thou causest care!
My bed of Doun I change for hatches bare;
Rather than rest, this stormy war I chose;
T' enlarge my fields, both land and life I lose.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Schisme.

A rude wooden stool, and still ruder hatch or bedframe.
Scott.

9. A hollow trap to catch weasels and other animals. [Prov. Eng.]—Under hatches. (a) Below deck; off duty: said of a naval officer or sailor, often implying that he is under arrest or suspended from duty.

To the king's ship, invisible as thou art:
There shalt thou find the mariners asleep
Under the hatches. Shak., Tempest, v. 1.

(b) Under close confinement; in servitude.

He assures us how this fatherhood continued its course till the captivity in Egypt, and then the poor fatherhood was under hatches. Locke, Government, i. 2.

hatch[1] (hach), v. t. [< hatch[1], n.] To close with or as with a hatch.

If in our youths we could pick up some pretty estate, 'twere not amiss to keep our door hatched.
Shak., Pericles, iv. 3.

Sleep begins with heavy wings
To hatch mine eyes.
Sir P. Sidney (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 522).

hatch[2] (hach), v. [< ME. hacchen (pret. hagte, haihte, pp. ihaht) (not in AS.) = MHG. G. hecken = Sw. häcka = Dan. hække, hatch, produce young from eggs by incubation (G. hecken comprehends the laying of the eggs, and even the pairing and nesting; in common language it is not applied to domestic fowls). Cf. hatch[2], n. The asserted derivation from hatch[1] ("to hatch birds is to produce them under a hatch or coop" —Skeat) is improbable, because the notion is a more general one; the earliest instances (ME.) refer to the owl and other non-domestic birds, which do not hatch under a coop; moreover, hatch[1] does not mean in E. a coop or breeding-cage, and the Sw. Dan. G. nouns with this sense are prop. derivatives of the verb, though easily confused (in Sw. Dan.) with the other noun meaning 'rack,' = E. hatch[1]. Wedgwood's assertion that hatch[2] is identical with hack[1] (cf. hatch[3], ult. = hack[1]), because "the young bird is supposed to peck its way out of the shell" (G. hacken, hack, also peck or strike with the bill), is negatived by the difference in the ME. forms (pres. and pret.). The word is prob. an independent verb, of which early record is lost.] I. trans. 1. To cause to develop in and emerge from (an egg) by incubation or other natural process, or by artificial heat; cause the developed young to emerge from (an egg).

As the partridge sitteth on eggs, and hatcheth them not. Jer. xvii. 11.

That you should hatch gold in a furnace, sir,
As they do eggs in Egypt!
B. Jonson, Alchemist, ii. 1.

Insects which do not sit upon their eggs deposit them in those particular situations in which the young, when hatched, find their appropriate food.
Paley, Nat. Theol., xviii.

2. To contrive or plot, especially secretly; form by meditation, and bring into being; originate and produce: as, to hatch mischief; to hatch heresy.

The whole Senate of Iewish, Saracenicall, and Christian Astrologers together hatching a lie.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 13.

Thine are fancies hatch'd
In silken-folded idleness.
Tennyson, Princess, iv.

Hatching apparatus, an artificial incubator for bringing forth chickens from eggs by the agency of heat. See incubator.— To count one's chickens before they are hatched. See chicken[1].

II. intrans. 1. To be hatched, as the eggs of birds, reptiles, fishes, insects, etc.: as, the eggs hatch in two weeks, in the water, under ground, etc.—2. To come forth from or out of the egg: as, the chicks hatch naked in ten days.

Open your bee-hives, for now they hatch.
Evelyn, Calendarium Hortense, April.

hatch[2] (hach), n. [Cf. G. hecke (not in MHG.), a hatching, a hatch, brood, breed, also breeding- or hatching-time, breeding-cage, aviary, = Sw. häck, a coop, = Dan. hæk, hatching, breeding (cf. hækkebur, breeding-cage (see bower[1]), hækketid, hatching- or nesting-time); from the verb: see hatch[2], v.] 1. A brood; as many young birds as are produced at one time, or by one incubation.—2. The number of eggs incubated at one time; a clutch.—3. The act of hatching; also, that which is hatched, in either sense of that word.

There's something in his soul
O'er which his melancholy sits on brood;
And, I do doubt, the hatch, and the disclose,
Will be some danger. Shak., Hamlet, iii. 1.

hatch[3] (hach), v. t. [Early mod. E.; < OF. hacher, hack, shred, slice, hew, chop, cut in pieces, also hatch (a hilt), F. hacher, < MHG. G. hacken, cut: see hack[1]. Cf. hash[1].] 1†. To chase; engrave; mark with cuts or lines.

Who first shall wound, through others' arms, his blood appearing fresh,
Shall win this sword, silver'd and hatcht. Chapman.

And such again,
As venerable Nestor['s], hatch'd in silver,
Should . . . knit all Greeks' ears
To his experienc'd tongue. Shak., T. and C., i. 3.

Why should not I
Doat on my horse well trapt, my sword well hatcht?
Fletcher, Bonduca, ii.

A rymer is a fellow whose face is hatcht all over with impudence, and should hee bee hang'd or pilloried 'tis armed for it. Sir T. Overbury, Characters.

Thy hair is fine as gold, thy chin is hatch'd
With silver. Shirley, Love in a Maze, ii. 2.

2. Specifically, in drawing, engraving, etc., to shade by means of lines; especially, to shade with lines crossing one another. See hatching and cross-hatching.

Those hatching strokes of the pencil. Dryden.

Though very rich and varied in effect, the tapestry of the best period usually is woven with not more than twenty different tints of wool—half tints and gradations being got by hatching one colour into another.
Encyc. Brit., XXIII. 212.

3. To lay in small and numerous bands upon a ground of different material: as, laces of silver hatched on a satin ground.

hatch[3] (hach), n. [< hatch[3], v.] A shading line in drawing or engraving.

To discern an original print from a copy print . . . is a knack very easily attain'd; because 'tis almost impossible to imitate every hatch, and to make the stroaks of exact and equal dimensions. Evelyn, Sculptura, v.

hatch-bar (hach'bär), n. One of the iron bars ★with which the hatches of a ship are secured.

hatch-boat (hach'bōt), n. A kind of half-decked fishing-boat; a boat that has a hatch or well for holding fish. Simmonds.

hatchel (hach'el), n. [An assibilated form of hackle[1], heckle, q. v.] An instrument consisting of long iron teeth set in a board, used in cleansing flax or hemp from the tow and hards, or coarse part; a hackle or heckle. Also hetchel.

And yet the same must bee better kembed with hetchell-teeth of yron, . . . untill it be cleansed from all the grosse barke and rind among. Holland, tr. of Pliny, xix. 1.

hatchel (hach'el), v. t.; pret. and pp. hatcheled or hatchelled, ppr. hatcheling or hatchelling. [An assibilated form of hackle[1], heckle, v.] 1. To draw, as flax or hemp, through the teeth of a hatchel, to separate the fiber from the hard or coarse parts of the plant; hackle or heckle.

The Russians do spin and hachell it [hemp], and the English tarre it in threed and lay the cable. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 364.

Hence—2. To tease or vex by sarcasms or reproaches; heckle.

hatcheler, hatcheller (hach'el-ėr), n. [< hatchel + -er[1]. Cf. hackler, heckler.] One who hatchels or hackles flax or hemp.

hatcher (hach'ėr), n. [< hatch[2] + -er[1].] 1. One who hatches; a contriver; a plotter.

A man ever in haste, a great hatcher and breeder of business. Swift, Tale of a Tub, ix.

2. A bird that hatches; also, any apparatus for hatching eggs, as a hatching-box or -trough; an incubator.

hatchery (hach'ėr-i), n.; pl. hatcheries (-iz). [< hatch[2], v., + -ery.] A place for hatching eggs; an arrangement for promoting the hatching of eggs, especially those of fish, by artificial appliances.

By the request of the Commissioner, such fish were kept alive until they could be put into the live box at the hatchery. Science, III. 54.

hatchet (hach'et), n. [< ME. hachet (also ingeniously accom. hakchyp (Prompt. Parv.), mod. as if hack-chip*), < OF. hachette, a hatchet or small ax, dim. of hache, an ax, = Pr. apcha = Sp. hacha = Pg. facha, hacha = It. accia, azza (mixed with ascia, < L. ascia, an ax: see ax[1]), < OHG. happja*, heppe, MHG. hepe, a bill, sickle, scythe. Not connected with hack[1], n.] A small ax with a short handle, designed to be used with one hand.—Ceremonial hatchet, an object resembling an ax or a hatchet, sometimes made with a stone head and with the handle elaborately sculptured, but more commonly a mere imitation of a hatchet in thin wood or the like. Such imitative or emblematic weapons are in use in several of the South Sea islands in religious ceremonies.—To take or dig up the hatchet, to make war; to bury the hatchet, to make peace: phrases derived from the customs of the North American Indians. See tomahawk.

Spain, Portugal, and France, have not yet shut their doors against us: it will be time enough when they do, to take up the commercial hatchet. Jefferson, Correspondence, I. 362.

Shingis, sachem of the Delawares, . . . took up the hatchet at various times against the English. Irving, Washington, I. 78.

Buried was the bloody hatchet, . . .
There was peace among the nations.
Longfellow, Hiawatha, xiii.

To throw the helve after the hatchet. See helve.

hatchet-face (hach'et-fās), n. A face with sharp and prominent features; a face like a hatchet.

An ape his own dear image will embrace;
An ugly beau adores a hatchet-face. Dryden.

hatchet-faced (hach'et-fāst), a. Having a hatchet-face; having a thin face with prominent features.

hatchet-shaped (hach'et-shāpt), a. Having the shape of a hatchet; dolabriform.

hatchet-stake (hach'et-stāk), n. A small anvil from 2 to 10 inches wide, used in bending thin metals.

hatchettin, hatchettine (hach'et-in), n. [After the English chemist Charles Hatchett (1765–1847), the discoverer of columbium and tantalum.] 1. A fatty substance occurring in thin flaky veins in the argillaceous ironstone of Merthyr-Tydvil in Wales and in other localities. It is like wax or spermaceti in consistence, of a yellowish-white or greenish-yellow color, and inodorous when cold, but of a slightly bituminous odor when heated, or after fusion. It is also called adipocere mineral and mineral tallow. (See adipocere.) It consists of 86 per cent. of carbon and 14 of hydrogen. Also hatchettite.

2. A soft mineral containing 80 per cent. of carbon and 20 of hydrogen, found in cavities of carboniferous rocks in Saxony. Also called chrismatin, chrismatine.

hatchettolite (hach'et-ō-līt), n. [< Hatchett (see hatchettin) + Gr. λίθος.] A mineral related to pyrochlore. It is found with samarskite in North Carolina. It occurs in octahedral crystals, and is essentially a tantaloniobate of uranium and calcium. It contains a little water, which may be due to partial alteration.

hatchet-vetch (hach'et-vech), n. A plant, Bonaveria Securidaca (Securigera Coronilla), the pods of which are falcate and thin-edged. See axfitch and Securigera.

The Grecians name this, whether it be a Pulse, or an infirmitie among corn, ἠδύσαρον: the Latines, of the forme of the seed, Securidaca, and Hedysarum: in English, Axseed, Axwort, Ax-fitch, and hatchet Fitch. Gerarde, Herball (1636), p. 1236.

hatching (hach'ing), n. [Verbal n. of hatch[3], v.] 1. In drawing, engraving, etc., the art of disposing lines, especially parallel lines, whether curved, straight, or wavy, so as to give the effect of shading, according to the shape and character of the object represented. In cross-hatching the lines form lozenges or squares. If the hatchings are double or triple, the lines which indicate form predominate over the rest.

2. A line made for this purpose, or such lines collectively.

As for the graving, so the contours and outlines be well designed, I am not solicitous for the hatching (as they call it). Evelyn, To Mr. Benjamin Tooke (Printer).

Also hachure, hatchure.

hatching-box (hach'ing-boks), n. A device for holding the eggs of fish in artificial fish-culture. Hatching-boxes are made in a great variety of forms, according to the habits of the fish from which the eggs are taken and the location.

hatching-jar (hach'ing-jär), n. A conical receptacle placed with the apex downward, and containing fish-eggs for hatching. Encyc. Brit., XIX. 128.

hatching-trough (hach'ing-trôf), n. A trough for artificially hatching fish-eggs. It is a rectangular wooden trough of convenient length (generally from 10 to 12 feet), and usually 6 or 8 inches deep by 12 to 14 inches wide. The trough is sometimes provided with a transverse screen at the head or upper end, to disperse or generalize the inflowing current of water, and such a screen is always placed at the lower end of the trough, to prevent the escape of the fish. The eggs are hatched either on wire-cloth trays or on gravel spread on the floor of the trough.

hatch-ladder (hach'lad″ėr), n. Naut., a fixed ladder, consisting usually of iron rods set in a frame at the side of a hatchway, for passing from one deck to another.

hatchment (hach'ment), n. [Formerly also atchment, achment, achement, early mod. E. hachement, a contraction, through a form atcheament, of achievement, formerly also spelled atchievement. See achievement, 3.] 1. In her.: (a) An escutcheon or armorial shield granted in recognition of some distinguished achievement; an achievement (in sense 3). Especially—(b) A funeral achievement; a square tablet set diagonally and bearing the arms of a deceased person, placed over a tomb or upon the exterior of the house in which the person dwelt. The surroundings of the shield of arms are so distinguished that the sex and condition of the deceased can be known: thus, an unmarried man has his shield and crest upon a black ground; an unmarried woman, a lozenge bearing her arms with a knot instead of a crest, also on a black ground.

Hatchment of an Esquire—his arms impaled with those of his wife, the wife surviving.

For married persons the shield is impaled (see impalement); and in case a widow or widower survives, that half of the shield or lozenge which bears the arms of the survivor carries them upon a white background, the half appropriated to the deceased having a black background. A bishop's arms, being impaled with those of his see, are relieved on a black background, those of the see having a white one. When a person is the last of his race, a skull is put above the shield or lozenge in the place of the crest. In the case of a member of the Order of the Garter who is a married man, or of his wife, two shields are displayed side by side, that on the dexter side having the knight's arms alone surrounded by the motto of the order, that on the sinister having the coats of husband and wife.

Houses where funeral hatchments for murdered inmates had been perpetually suspended were decked with garlands. Motley, Dutch Republic, II. 265.

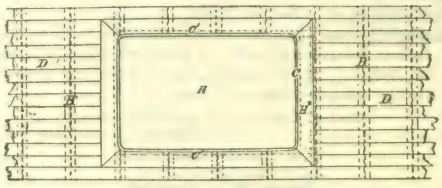
Hence—2. Any distinguishing mark, badge of honor, symbol, or the like, as the sword of a soldier.



Receive these pledges,
These hatchments of our griefs, and grace us so much
To place 'em on his hearse. Fletcher, Bonduca, v. 1.

For, as I am condemned, my naked sword Stands but a hatchment by me; only held
To show I was a soldier.
Fletcher, Valentinian, iv. 4.

Let there be deducted, out of our main potation,
Five marks in hatchments to adorn this thigh.
Beau. and Fl., Scornful Lady, ii.

hatchure (hach'ör), n. [See hachure.] Same as hatching.

hatchway (hach'wā), n. [< hatch[1] + way.] 1. A square or oblong opening in the deck of a ship, affording a passage from one deck to Hatchway.

B, B, beams; C, coaming; C', C', carlines; D, D, deck; H, hatchway; H', head-ledge.

another, or into the hold or lower apartments. See hatch[1], n., 3.—2. The opening of any trap-door, as in a floor, ceiling, or roof.

hat-die (hat'dī), n. A block upon which a hat-body is molded to the desired shape of the hat. Also called hat-mold.

hate[1] (hāt), v.; pret. and pp. hated, ppr. hating. [< ME. haten, hatien, < AS. hatian, hatigian = OS. hatōn, hatan = OFries. hatia = D. haten = MLG. LG. haten = OHG. hazzēn, hazzōn, MHG. hazzen, G. hassen = Icel. hata = Sw. hata = Dan. hade = Goth. hatjan and hatan, hate. A secondary form appears in AS. hettan* (only in ppr. as a noun, hettend, an enemy) = OHG. hezzen, MHG. G. hetzen, bait, hunt, set on, incite. The orig. meaning involves the notion of pursuing with hatred. See the noun. Hence, through OF., heinous, q. v.] I. trans. 1. To regard with a strong and passionate dislike or aversion; regard with extreme ill-will.

His euell speche made hym to be hatid of a-monge his felowes, and also of straungers that herden of hym speke, that after refuseden to go in his felisshep to seche a-uentures. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 135.

Pride has made a Lady swear she hated such a Man, tho' she was dying for the sight of him.
Mrs. Centlivre, the Man's Bewitch'd, i.

Some minds by nature are averse to noise,
And hate the tumult half the world enjoys.
Cowper, Retirement, l. 176.

2. In a weakened sense, to dislike; be averse; be unwilling: commonly with an infinitive.

I hate to leave my friend in his extremities.
Beau. and Fl., Woman-Hater, ii. 1.

3. To have little regard for, or less than for some other; despise in comparison with something else regarded as more worthy: a use of the word in Scripture.

If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, . . . he cannot be my disciple. Luke xiv. 26.

=Syn. 1. Hate, Abhor, Detest, Abominate, Loathe. These words express the strongest forms of dislike and aversion of either persons or things. Hate may include the others; it is more permanent and includes more ill-will toward that which is hated. To abhor, literally to start from with horror, is to have all the better feelings excited against that which is abhorred: as, we abhor cruelty. To detest, literally to bear witness against, is to condemn with indignation. Abominate, by derivation and the Biblical use of its congeners, has generally reference to what is offensive to moral and religious sentiment. To loathe is primarily to have great aversion to food, and hence to have like disgust toward that which is offensive to the moral nature or the feelings.

Do good to them which hate you. Luke vi. 27.

I abhor this dilatory sloth. Shak., Hen. VIII., ii. 4.

I do detest false perjur'd Proteus.
Shak., T. G. of V., v. 4.

We do abhor, abominate, and loathe this cruelty.
Southern.

II. intrans. To feel hatred: as, one who neither loves nor hates.

hate[1] (hāt), n. [< ME. hate (with vowel of the verb), reg. hete, < AS. hete, m., = OS. heti = D. haat = MLG. hāt = OHG. haz (hazz-), m., also neut., MHG. haz (hazz-), G. hass = Icel. hatr = Sw. hat = Dan. had = Goth. hatis (gen. hatizis, once gen. hatis), hate, anger (> Goth. hatizōn, be angry): see hate[1], v.] 1. An emotion of extreme or passionate dislike or aversion; inveterate ill-will; hatred.

Haughty Juno's unrelenting hate. Dryden, Æneid, i. 2.

What a fine definition of hate is that which Chaucer gives in the Persones Tale, "Hate is old wrathe." It is, however, borrowed from Cicero — "Odium ira inveterata." Tusc. Disp. iv. 9. G. P. Marsh.

Till hate,
The seed of ill lies, told and hearkened to,
The knot of loving memories shall undo.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, II. 295.

2†. Vengeance; punishment.

Thenne arȝed [became terrified] Abraham & alle his mod chaunge[d],
For hope [in expectation] of the harde hate that hyȝt [threatened] hatz oure lorde.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), ii. 713.

=Syn. Ill-will, Enmity, etc. See animosity. (See also hatred.)

hate[2]†, v. See hight[2].

hateable, a. See hatable.

hateful (hāt'fûl), a. [< ME. hateful (= Sw. hatfull = Dan. hadefuld); < hate[1] + -ful. Cf. hatle, hettle.] 1. Causing hate; exciting intense dislike or aversion; odious.

To ben a murdrer is an hateful name.
Chaucer, Clerk's Tale, l. 676.

Still grew my bosom then,
Still as a stagnant fen;
Hateful to me were men,
The sunlight hateful.
Longfellow, Skeleton in Armor.

2. Full of hate; feeling hatred; malignant; malevolent.

Then cast a languishing regard around,
And saw, with hateful eyes, the temples crown'd
With golden spires, and all the hostile ground.
Dryden, Pal. and Arc., i. 214.

=Syn. 1. Detestable, abominable, execrable, loathsome, horrid, foul, repulsive, revolting, abhorrent, repugnant.

hatefully (hāt'fûl-i), adv. 1. In such a manner as to excite hate; odiously.

The ceremony was hatefully tedious.
Drummond, Travels, p. 75.

2. In a manner exhibiting hate; malignantly; maliciously; spitefully.

And they shall deal with thee hatefully, and shall take away all thy labour, and shall leave thee naked and bare.
Ezek. xxiii. 29.

hatefulness (hāt'fûl-nes), n. The character of being hateful, in any sense.

hatel†, a. and n. See hattle.

hateless (hāt'les), a. [< hate[1] + -less.] Having no feeling of hate.

Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, iii.

hater[1] (hā'tėr), n. [< ME. hatere (= D. hater = MHG. hazzære, hezzer, G. hasser, hässer = Icel. hatari = Dan. hader = Sw. hatare); < hate[1] + -er[1].] One who hates.

An enemy to God, and a hater of all good.
Sir T. Browne.

To be a good hater one needs only to be irascible by nature, and to be placed in some relationship of frequent encounter with the authors of offence.
A. Bain, Emotions and Will, p. 139.

hater[2]†, hatere†, n. [ME., also hatter, hetter, heater, hatren, < AS. hæteru, garments.] Clothing.

She dide of al hire hatere, & wisch hire bodi wt clene watere.
King Horn (E. E. T. S.), p. 121.

hatering†, n. [ME. haterynge; < hater[2] + -ing[1].] Clothing; dress.

hatesome†, a. [ME. hatesum, haatsum (= Icel. hatrsamr); < hate[1] + -some.] Hateful; hated.

For thi that hatesum thei hadden disciplyne, and the drede of the Lord thei vndertoken not.

hathock (haᴛʜ'o̤k), n. A Scotch form of haddock.

hat-honor (hat'hon″o̤r), n. Respect shown by taking off the hat: a term used by the early Friends or Quakers, who refused to pay this token of respect. Also called hat-worship.

The hat-honour was an honour which in relation to the outward ceremony, viz., the putting off the hat, was the same which was given to God; so that in the outward sign of reverence no distinction or difference was made betwixt the Creator and the creature.
George Fox, in Sewel's History of the Quakers (1774), [I. 22.

hathorn (hath'ôrn), n. Same as hawthorn.

hatless (hat'les), a. [< hat[1] + -less.] Having no hat.

So much for shoeless, hatless Masaniello!
Leigh Hunt, High and Low.

hat-measure (hat'mezh″ūr), n. A metallic tape or measure used to ascertain the size of the head in order to fit a hat to it.

hat-mold (hat'mōld), n. Same as hat-die.

hat-money (hat'mun″i), n. Same as primage.

hat-piece (hat'pēs), n. A hat or cap of defense other than a heavy helmet of war; especially, a secret or iron skull-cap worn under the hat.

I saw him try on his buff coat and hat-piece covered with black velvet. Pepys, Diary, II. 216.

hat-plant (hat'plant), n. A papilionaceous plant, Æschynomene aspera, growing in India, with odd-pinnate leaves and jointed pods: so called in commerce. In marshy places about Calcutta it attains a large size, and the thick stem is filled with a light tough pith of which are made hats, bottle-cases, swimming-jackets, floats, and even fishing-nets. The natives call this pith solah.

hat-press (hat'pres), n. A machine for molding hats and pressing them into form. It consists essentially of a brass mold, which is heated, and in which the hat is placed and submitted to pressure from a plunger that enters from above, forcing the hat to the shape of the mold.

hat-rack (hat'rak), n. A rack furnished with pegs on which hats, coats, etc., may be hung.

hat-rail (hat'rāl), n. A hat-rack made to be hung on the wall: often a frame inclosing a small mirror.

Sir Anna, this aunswere allow I no thyng,
I holde it but hatereden, this artikill hale,
And therfore, sir Busshoppe, at my biddyng,
Do telle me nowe trewly the texte of this tale.
York Plays, p. 209.

The thought of the pain which any thing present or absent is apt to produce in us . . . we call hatred.
Locke, Human Understanding, II. xx. 5.

Hatred is another name for malevolent emotion. We recognize under this title a permanent affection grounded on the irascible, as love is on tenderness.
A. Bain, Emotions and Will, p. 139.

=Syn. Ill-will, Enmity, etc. (see animosity); Hatred, Dislike, Antipathy, etc. (see antipathy); Disgrace, Disfavor, Dishonor (see odium); detestation, loathing, abhorrence.

hatrel, n. See hatteral.

hat-roller (hat'rō″lėr), n. In mining, a roller of cast-iron or steel, shaped like a hat, and revolving on a vertical pin, serving to guide around a curve the rope used for hauling in an incline.

hat-stand (hat'stand), n. A hat-rack made to stand on the floor: often combined with a small table or an umbrella-stand, or both.

The hat-stand (with a whip or two standing up in it belonging to bagmen who are still snug in bed).
T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, i. 4.

hat-sweat (hat'swet), n. That part of the lining of a hat which comes in contact with the head; a sweat-band. It is usually of leather.

hatted-kit, hattit-kit (hat'ed-, hat'it-kit), n. [Sc., < hatted, hattit, appar. curdled (cf. D. hotten, curdle, hot, curds, connected with Sc. hat, hot, a confused heap: see hatter), + kit.] A bowlful of sour cream; also, a mixture of buttermilk and milk warm from the cow.

He has spilt the hatted-kit that was for the Master's dinner. Scott, Bride of Lammermoor, xi.

Hattemist (hat'em-ist), n. [< Hattem (see def.) + -ist.] A member of a sect in the Netherlands founded about 1683 by the deposed clergyman Pontianus van Hattem, a Spinozist, who denied the expiatory sacrifice of Christ and the freedom of the will, and affirmed that sin exists only in the imagination, and is itself its only punishment. The sect disappeared in a few years.

hatter[1] (hat'ėr), n. [< ME. hattere; < hat[1] + -er[1].] 1. A maker or seller of hats.—2. In mining, a miner who works alone, or "under his own hat." He differs from a fossicker, who rifles old workings, or spends his time in trying abandoned wash-dirt. The hatter nearly always holds a claim under the by-laws. R. Brough Smyth. [Australia.]

Some, however, prefer to travel, and even to work, when they can get it, quite alone, and these are known to the rest as hatters. Chambers's Journal, 5th ser., II. 286.

Mad as a hatter. [A humorous simile, in which hatter was probably originally a substitute for some other more appropriate term (perhaps hatter* for atter, for attercop, a spider, in which sense Halliwell doubtfully cites hatter from Palsgrave).] (a) Violently crazy or insane. (b) Violently angry.

hatter[2] (hat'ėr), v. [Also hotter; a freq. form, < hat[4], hot[2], a heap.] I. trans. 1. To gather in a heap; collect in a crowd.—2. To entangle.—3. To expose to danger; harass; trouble; weary; wear out.

Religion shows a rosy-colour'd face,
Not hatter'd out with drudging works of grace.
Dryden, Hind and Panther, i. 371.

4. To shatter; batter.

Where hattering bullets are fine sugred plums,
No feare of roaring guns, or thundring drums.
John Taylor, Works (1630).

II. intrans. To speak with thick and confused utterance.

[Now only prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

hatter[2] (hat'ėr), n. [Also hotter; < hatter[2], v.] 1. A state of confusion.—2. A confused heap.

[Now only prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

hatteral (hat'ėr-al), n. [Also hateral, hatrel; < hatter[2].] A confused heap. Galt. [Scotch.]

Hatteria (ha-tē'ri-ä), n. [NL. (J. E. Gray); formation not ascertained.] 1. A genus of rhynchocephalous reptiles containing a lizard peculiar to New Zealand, the only living representative of the order Rhynchocephalia, and the type of the family Hatteriidæ. H. punctata is known as the tuatera. Also called Sphenodon.—2. [l. c.] A member of this genus.

Hatteria punctata or Sphenodon punctatus.

Hatteriidæ (hat-ē-rī'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Hatteria + -idæ.] A family of reptiles, of the order Rhynchocephalia, typified by the genus Hatteria. It is characterized by amphicœlous vertebræ, fixed quadrate bones, maxillary and palatine teeth, and by having some of the ribs in three joints and with uncinate processes. Levere ich hadde to dyen on a knyf Than thee offende, trewe, deere wyf.
Chaucer, Merchant's Tale, l. 919.

Far liever by his dear hand had I die.
Tennyson, Geraint.

The phrase was also used impersonally, a dative taking the place of the nominative of the person:

Him had lever [var. him were lever] than all the world a lond,
So hunted him the tempest to and fro.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 2413.

To have on, to wear; be clothed with.

Styf botes our kynge had on.
Lytell Geste of Robyn Hode (Child's Ballads, VII. 77).

He saw there a man which had not on a wedding garment. Mat. xxii. 11.

Many a rustic Venus . . . wondered what Mary would have on when she was married.
H. B. Stowe, Minister's Wooing, xxix.

To have one's eye on, to have in mind.

I am very well satisfied the poet must have had his eye on the figure of this bird in ancient sculpture and painting, as indeed it was impossible to take it from the life.
Addison, Ancient Medals, ii.

To have rather, to hold, regard, or consider as preferable: a phrase equivalent to, and used like, to have liefer, and of much later origin, not being found, apparently, before the sixteenth century: followed by an infinitive with or (as now usually) without to, and now only with the preterit had. See to have liefer.

Poesie, which like Venus (but to better purpose), hath rather be troubled in the net with Mars, than enjoy the homelie quiet of Vulcan.
Sir P. Sidney, Apol. for Poetrie (ed. Arber), p. 61.

I had rather to be married to a death's head with a bone in his mouth than to either of these. Shak., M. of V., i. 2.

I had much rather have my body hackt with wounds
Than t' have a hangman fillip me.
Dekker, Match me in London (Works, ed. 1873, IV. 106).

I had much rather be myself the slave,
And wear the bonds, than fasten them on him.
Cowper, Task, ii. 35.

This phrase, like the antecedent phrase to have liefer, was also sometimes used impersonally, with a dative instead of a nominative of the person.

Me rather had my heart might feel your love,
Than my unpleas'd eye see your courtesy.
Shak., Rich. II., iii. 3.

To have to do with. See do[1], v.=Syn. 1. Hold, Own, etc. See possess.

II. intrans. To be: used indefinitely in certain idiomatic expressions and phrases, mentioned below.—Had like, was likely; came near; was on the point: followed by an infinitive.

Where they should have made head with the whole army upon the Parthians, they sent him aid by small companies; and when they were slain, they sent him others also. So that by their beastliness and lack of consideration they had like to have made all the army fly.
North, tr. of Plutarch, p. 769.

Have after! † follow! let us pursue!

Hor. He waxes desperate with imagination.
Mar. Let's follow; 'tis not fit thus to obey him.
Hor. Have after:—To what issue will this come?
Shak., Hamlet, i. 4.

Have at, here's a blow for; here's a challenge for.

He that will caper with me for a thousand marks, let him lend me the money, and have at him.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., i. 2.

If you will needs fight, gentlemen,
And think to raise new riches by your valours,
Have at ye! I have little else to do now.
Fletcher (and another), Sea Voyage, i. 3.

Have at all†, a desperate risk: a phrase taken from the practice of gamblers. Nares.

Her dearest knight, whom she so just may call,
What with his debts, and what with have at all,
Lay hidden like a savage in his den,
For feare of bayliffes, sergeants, marshals men.
Good Newes and Bad Newes (1622).

Have done. See do[1], v.—Have with you, I will go along with you.

Stan. What, shall we toward the Tower? the day is spent.
Hast. Come, come, have with you. Shak., Rich. III., iii. 2.

Charles S. Stay, Careless, we want you: egad, you shall be auctioneer; so come along with us.
Careless. Oh, have with you, if that's the case.
Sheridan, School for Scandal, iii. 3.

To have done with. See do[1], v. i.—To have toward one†, to pledge one in drinking.

Str. Here's to thee, Leocrates.
Leoc. Have towards thee, Philotas.
Phil. To thee, Archippus.
W. Cartwright, Royal Slave (1651).

III. aux. An auxiliary forming, with the past participle of the principal verb, the compound tenses of verbs (including have), both transitive and intransitive, sometimes with another auxiliary: as, I have or had done it; he will have departed by that time; you should not have gone. In such cases the word have originally had its proper meaning as a transitive verb, and was so used at first only with another transitive verb, as denoting the possession of the object in the state indicated by the past participle of the latter verb; thus, I have received a letter means literally I possess a letter received. The construction was afterward extended to cases in which the possessor of the object and the performer of the action are not necessarily the same, as in I have written a letter, and to intransitive verbs. In the same way the Latin habere, to have, has come to be used as an auxiliary or merely a formative element in the conjugation of the verb in the Romance languages.

havek†, n. A Middle English form of hawk[1].

haveld (hā'veld), n. [=ODan. havelde = Norw. havella, a sea-duck: see Harelda.] The Icelandic name of the long-tailed duck. See Harelda.

Hawaiian (hä-wī'yan), a. and n. [< Hawaii (see def.), a native name, + -an.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the island of Hawaii or the Sandwich Islands, a group of islands in the North Pacific about 2,100 miles west-southwest of San Francisco.

II. n. 1. A native or citizen of Hawaii.—2. The language of Hawaii.

hawane, n. The fruit of the palm Pritchardia Gaudichaudii.

hawbuck (hâ'buk), n. [Appar. < haw[1], hedge, + buck[2].] An unmannerly lout; a clown. [Prov. Eng.]

Bless my heart! excuse me, Sir Richard—to sit down and leave you standing! 'Slife, sir, sorrow is making a hawbuck of me. Kingsley, Westward Ho, v.

hawcubite† (hâ'kū-bīt), n. [A slang name, combining the equiv. mohawk, q. v., with Jacobite, another term exciting public interest at the time mentioned in the def.] One of a band of dissolute young men in London who swaggered about the streets at night during the closing years of the seventeenth century, insulting passers, breaking windows, etc.; a mohawk.

hawebake†, n. [ME.: see def.] A word of uncertain meaning, found only in the following passage. From its apparent form, it is supposed to signify the baked berry of the hawthorn—that is, coarse fare. It appears in the manuscripts sometimes as one word, sometimes as two words.

I recche noght a bene,
Though I come after him with hawebake;
I speke in prose, and lete him rymes make.
Chaucer, Prol. to Man of Law's Tale, l. 95.

hawfinch (hâ'finch), n. [< haw[1] + finch[1].] The hawthorn-grosbeak, Coccothraustes vulgaris, a common European fringilline bird, about 6 inches long, with a very stout, turgid bill, the ends of the inner secondaries obliquely curved and truncated, and the plumage much variegated.

Hawfinch (Coccothraustes vulgaris).

See also cut under Coccothraustes. The name is extended to sundry related American grosbeaks, as the evening grosbeak, Hesperophona vespertina, the rose-breasted grosbeak, Zamelodia or Habia ludoviciana, etc.

haw-haw[1] (hâ'hâ'), interj. [A heavier form of ha-ha[1], q. v.] An utterance accompanying loud, coarse laughter.

haw-haw[1] (hâ'hâ'), v. i. [< haw-haw[1], interj.] To laugh loudly and heavily; guffaw.

I sat down in front of the General, and we haw-haw'd, I tell you, for more than half an hour.
Seba Smith, Major Downing's Letters, p. 189.

haw-haw[1] (hâ'hâ'), n. [< haw-haw[1], interj.] A guffaw; loud, coarse laughter.

He laughed not very often, and when he did, with a sudden, loud haw-haw, hearty, but somehow joyless, like an echo from a rock. R. L. Stevenson, Pastoral.

haw-haw[2] (hâ-hâ'), n. Same as ha-ha[2].

hawk[1] (hâk), n. [< ME. hauk, a contraction ★(as in lord, etc.) of reg. ME. havek, havec, havok (see havoc, havock), < AS. hafoc, hafuc, haafoc = OS. habhoc (in comp. proper names) = Fries. hauk = D. havik = MLG. havek, LG. hawek, havk = OHG. habuch, habich, MHG. habich, habech, hebech, G. habicht = Icel. haukr = Sw. hök = Dan. høg, a hawk; perhaps, with suffix as in Goth. ahaks, a dove, OHG. kranuh, G. kranich, a crane, from the root haf* of AS. hebban, E. heave, in its early sense of 'take,' 'seize,' as in L. capere (cf. L. accipiter, a hawk, usually derived from capere; but see accipiter).] 1. A diurnal bird of prey which does not habitually feed upon carrion: contrasted with owl and with vulture. (a) In a strict technical sense, any species of the subfamily Accipitrinæ or either of the genera Accipiter and Astur, having rounded wings which extend, when folded, about two thirds the length of the tail; the tail long and square or little rounded; the shank comparatively long and naked or little feathered; and the beak not toothed. Such are the sparrow-hawk, Accipiter nisus of Europe, the European goshawk, Astur palumbarius, and many others, found in all parts of the world. They are of medium and small size, the goshawks being among the largest, and prey for the most part on humble quarry, which they capture by chasing or raking after it, not by pouncing upon it. In this sense hawk is contrasted with falcon, eagle, kite, buzzard, etc. See Accipitrinæ, and cut under Astur. (b) Any diurnal bird of prey of the family Falconidæ, including eagles, buzzards, kites, etc. (c) Any bird used in falconry: as, a noble or ignoble hawk. See falcon.

He went on haukynge by the ryver syde
And let his haukes flee.
Lytell Geste of Robyn Hode (Child's Ballads, V. 101).

Between two hawks, which flies the higher pitch;
Between two dogs, which hath the deeper mouth; . . .
I have perhaps some shallow spirit of judgment.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., ii. 4.

"What colour were his hawks?" she says,
"What colour were his hounds?"
Young Johnstone (Child's Ballads, II. 295).

The wild hawk stood with the down on his beak,
And stared, with his foot on the prey.
Tennyson, The Poet's Song.

2. With a specifying term, some bird that hawks for its prey on the wing. Thus, in the United States, the goatsuckers of the genus Chordeiles are commonly called night-hawks. The night-jar, Caprimulgus europæus, is locally called dor-, gnat-, moth-, night-, and screech-hawk; and the swift is sometimes called hawk-swallow. See cut under goatsucker.—Black hawk, the American rough-legged hawk or black buzzard, Archibuteo lagopus sancti-johannis, in its melanistic phase. See cut under Archibuteo.—Hawk's glove. See glove.—Hawk's lure, in her. See lure.—Ignoble hawks, those hawks which have no tooth and raise after the quarry. They are Accipitrinæ.—Make-hawk, a trained and steady hawk flown with young birds to teach them to take the quarry.—Noble hawks, those hawks which have a toothed beak and plunge down upon or stoop to the quarry, as any falcon; the Falconinæ.—Passage hawk, a hawk captured when on its migration. See peregrine.—Red hawk, in falconry, a hawk of the first year, in its young plumage.—Sharp-shinned hawk, the American Accipiter fuscus, a small true hawk with extremely slender shanks, corresponding to that which is called sparrow-hawk in England. [U. S.]—To know a hawk from a hand-saw. See hand-saw. (See also fish-hawk, hen-hawk, marsh-hawk, pigeon-hawk, singing-hawk, sparrow-hawk, squirrel-hawk.) = Syn. Hawk, Falcon. Hawk is the most general and indefinite name of a bird of prey. It seems to have at first distinguished the birds so designated from carrion-feeding kinds and from those that prey by night (vultures and owls), and then to have been applied to those which could be trained—that is, used in the sport of hawking or falconry. Its nearest synonym is falcon; and since all hawks were formerly placed in one genus, Falco, hawk and falcon became interchangeable book-names for most members of the family Falconidæ. But, again, the hawks used in falconry were of two series, respectively designated noble and ignoble, corresponding to two technical subfamilies of Falconidæ. The name falcon became, therefore, technically restricted to the former of these series, the subfamily Falconinæ, while hawk was ★coincidently applied to the other, Accipitrinæ, alone.

hawk[1] (hâk), v. i. [< hawk[1], n.] 1. To hunt birds or small animals by means of hawks or falcons trained for the purpose; practise hawking; engage in falconry.

A little river . . . much frequented by fowle, and rigorously preserved for the Grand Signiors pleasure; who ordinarily hawks thereon. Sandys, Travailes, p. 29.

An a man have not skill in the hawking and hunting languages now a dayes, I'll not give a rush for him.
B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, i. 1.

2. To fly in the manner of the hawk; soar; take prey in the air.

Now hawks aloft, now skims along the flood.
Dryden.

When the swallows are seen hawking very high, it is a good indication; the insects upon which they feed venture up there only in the most auspicious weather.
J. Burroughs, The Century, XXV. 675.

To hawk at, to fly at; attack on the wing.

Lord L. 'Tis my wonder
Two animals should hawk at all discourse thus.
B. Jonson, New Inn, ii. 2.

I had rather see a wren hawk at a fly,
Than this decision.
Fletcher and another, Two Noble Kinsmen, v. 3.

hawk[2] (hâk), v. t. [Due to the older noun, hawker[2], q. v.; so peddle, from peddler. Cf. huck[2].] To offer for sale by outcry in a street or other public place, or from door to door; convey through town or country for sale: as, to hawk brooms or ballads.

His works were hawked in every street. Swift.

Thou goest still amongst them, seeing if, peradventure, thou can'st hawk a volume or two. Lamb, All Fools' Day.

I hear thee not at all, or hoarse
As when a hawker hawks his wares.
Tennyson, The Blackbird.

I come not of the race
That hawk their sorrows in the market-place.
Lowell, To my Fire.

hawk[3] (hâk), v. [Formerly also hauk; imitative, like Dan. harke, Sw. harka, W. hochi, hawk. Cf. also cough, and words there cited.] I. intrans. To make an effort to raise phlegm from the throat.

Touch. Come, sit, sit, and a song. . . .
1 Page. Shall we clap into 't roundly, without hawking, or spitting, or saying we are hoarse?
Shak., As you Like it, v. 3.

If he shou'd come before I wou'd have him, I'll come before him, and cough and hauk soundly, that you may not be surpriz'd. Wycherley, Gentleman Dancing-Master, v. 1.

II. trans. To raise by hawking: as, to hawk up phlegm.

hawk[3] (hâk), n. [< hawk[3], v.] An effort to raise phlegm from the throat.

hawk[4] (hâk), n. [Origin uncertain; perhaps a particular use of hawk[1] (?).] In building, a small quadrangular board with a handle underneath, used by plasterers to hold the mortar.

hawk-bell (hâk'bel), n. A small bell made to be attached to the leg of a hawk: used in falconry. These bells are of the form of a sleigh-bell, and are fastened on the hawk by the varvels or rings.

hawkbill (hâk'bil), n. 1. The caret, or hawk-billed sea-turtle, Eretmochelys imbricata. It is from this turtle that tortoise-shell is obtained. Also called hawk's-bill. See cut under Eretmochelys.—2. A pair of pliers with curved nose, used to hold pieces in soldering them with a blowpipe.

hawk-billed (hâk'bild), a. Having a bill or beak like or likened to a hawk's: as, a hawk-billed turtle.

hawk-bit (hâk'bit), n. A plant of the genus Leontodon, of the family Cichoriaceæ, related to the hawkweed and dandelion. The best-known species is L. autumnale, called the fall dandelion, which has become naturalized in the United States from Europe. (See Leontodon.) The name has also been improperly applied to the species of Hieracium, in place of hawkweed.

hawk-boy (hâk'boi), n. An assistant to a plasterer, who supplies him with plaster or mortar, placing it upon the hawk.

hawk-eagle (hâk'ē″gl), n. A bird of the genus Spizaëtus; one of certain crested hawks. There are numerous species, the most typical of which are South American, as S. ornatus, S. bellicosus, etc.

hawked† (hâkt), a. Crooked; curving like a hawk's bill.

Flat noses seem comely unto the Moor, an aquiline or hawked one unto the Persians.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., vi. 11.

hawker[1] (hâ'kėr), n. [< ME. hawkere*, < AS. hafecere (once) (= MLG. heveker), a hawker, falconer, < hafoc, hafec, hawk: see hawk[1] and -er[1].] 1. One who hawks, or pursues the sport of hawking; a falconer.

Haukers and hunters, dronkards, . . . having no other god but their belly. Harmar, tr. of Beza's Sermons, p. 334.

hawse[1] (hâz), n. [Earlier spelling halse: see halse[2].] 1. That part of a vessel's bow where the holes for her cables to pass through are cut: now used chiefly in phrases describing the condition of a vessel's chains when she is moored with both starboard and port anchors down. Thus, the hawse is clear when both chains lead direct to their respective anchors; when the ship brings a strain on both chains, one on each bow, the hawse is said to be open, and if the chains are crossed or twisted together, the hawse is said to be foul.

2. The space between the ship and her anchors: as, he was anchored in our hawse; the brig fell foul of our hawse, etc.

"There are mischief-makers behind." "Ay? just you tell me who they are; I'll teach them to come across my hawse." C. Reade, Love me Little, ix.

"Sail ho!" was cried again, and we made another sail, broad on our weather bow, and steering athwart our hawse. R. H. Dana, Jr., Before the Mast, p. 18.

Athwart hawse. See athwart.—Cross in the hawse. See cross[1], n.—Elbow in the hawse. See elbow.—To freshen the hawse, to veer out or heave in a short length of cable (a few feet) in order that a new portion may receive the chafe of the hawse-pipe: an expression formerly employed when hemp cables were in use.—To moor with an open hawse, to lay out the anchors in a line at right angles with the prevailing wind.

hawse[2]†, v. t. [Early mod. E., also written halse; < OF. haulser, hausser, raise, heave up, lift up, advance, earlier OF. haucer, haucier, hauchier, F. hausser, raise, lift, = Pr. ausar, alsar = Sp. alzar, raise, lift, etc. (alzar velas, set the sails), = It. alzare, raise, lift, etc. (alzare le vele, set the sails), < L. as if altiare*, < altus, high: see haut[1], alt, altitude, etc.; and cf. hausse. In the naut. sense (in quot. from Grafton), referred by some to Icel. hālsa (segl), 'clue up' (a sail) (see halse[2]), but this is a different thing from 'hoisting' sail, for which the Icel. terms are vinda, draga, setja upp (segl), etc. Not connected with hoise or hoist, q. v.] To raise.

Euery thing was hawsed aboue the mesure; amerceuiētes were turned into fines, fines into ransomes.
Sir T. More, Works, p. 62.

★ hawthorn (hâ'thôrn), n. [< ME. hawethorn, hagthorn, < AS. hægthorn, ONorth. hagathorn (= D. haagdoorn = MHG. hagedorn, G. hagedorn, hagdorn, hagendorn = Icel. hagthorn = Sw. Norw. hagtorn), < AS. haga, E. haw, a hedged inclosure, + thorn, thorn: see haw[1] and thorn. Cf. haythorn. Hence the proper name Hawthorn, Hawthorne, Hathorn.] A thorny shrub or small tree, Cratægus Oxyacantha, much used in hedges. It is found in the wild state throughout most of Europe, in northern Africa, and western Asia. It has been introduced into the United States: a hedge was planted with it by George Washington at Mount Vernon. It has stiff branches bearing strong thorns and deeply lobed or cut leaves. The fruit is the haw. The name is also applied to the genus Cratægus in general. See Cratægus. Also hathorn, haythorn, and hedge-thorn.

Hawthorn (Cratægus Oxyacantha).
1, 2, branches with flowers and fruit; a, b, flower and fruit on larger scale; c, leaf.

The hawthorn whitens; and the juicy groves
Put forth their buds. Thomson, Spring, l. 90.

The hawthorn bush, with seats beneath the shade,
For talking age and whisp'ring lovers made.
Goldsmith, Des. Vil., l. 13.

Hawthorn china, a variety of Chinese porcelain. The decoration represents the flowering branches of a plum-tree, reserved in white, the ground of dark blue, red, black, etc., being filled in around it. Sometimes the ground is of solid color, occasionally mottled.—Hawthorn pattern. (a) A common decoration of Bow porcelain. (b) A decorative pattern used in some Oriental wares. See Hawthorn china.

hawthorn-grosbeak (hâ'thôrn-grōs″bēk), n. The hawfinch.

hawthorn-tree (hâ'thôrn-trē), n. Same as hawthorn.

It was a maide of my countrè,
As she came by a hathorne-tre,
As full of flowers as might be seen,
She merveld to se the tree so grene.
The Hawthorn Tree (Child's Ballads, I. 312).

★ hay[1] (hā), n. [< ME. hay, hey, heiz, hay, also growing grass, < AS. hīg, ONorth. hēg, heig, hoeg, hay, also growing grass, = D. hooi = OHG. hewi, houwe, MHG. hōu, hou, houwe, G. heu (hau, obs.) = Icel. hey = Sw. Dan. hö, hay, = Goth. hawi, hay, grass; prob. orig. grass cut or to be cut, < AS. hēawan, E. hew, etc., cut: see hew[1].] Grass that has been cut; especially, grass cut and dried for use as fodder.

He smote the stede, and rode in a-monge hem, and made of hem soche martire that thei lay vpon hepes in the feilde, as hey in a medowe. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 199.

Make us a bed o' green rushes,
And cover it o'er wi' green hay.
Lizzie Lindsay (Child's Ballads, IV. 71).

When merry milkmaids click the latch,
And rarely smells the new-mown hay.
Tennyson, The Owl.

Between hay and grass, too late for one thing or source of supply, and too soon for another. [Colloq., U. S.]—Camel's hay. Same as camel-grass.—Neither hay nor grass, not exactly one thing or the other. [Colloq., U. S.]—Tame hay, hay made usually from foreign grasses, such as timothy, or from other forage-plants, as clover, lucerne, etc., which have been specially sown in meadows for the purpose. [Western U. S.]—To look for a needle in a bottle of hay. See bottle[3].—To make hay. (a) To cut and cure grass for fodder.

He assisted the farmers occasionally in the lighter labors of their farms; helped to make hay; mended the fences; took the horses to water. Irving, Sleepy Hollow.

(b) To throw things into confusion; scatter everything about in disorder.

O, father, how you are making hay of my things!
Miss Edgeworth, Rose, Thistle, and Shamrock, i. 2.

Furniture, crockery, fender, fire-irons lay in one vast heap of broken confusion in the corner of the room. . . . The fellows were mad with fighting too. I wish they hadn't come here and made hay afterwards.
H. Kingsley, Ravenshoe, vii.

To make hay while the sun shines, to seize the favorable opportunity, as must be done with reference to sunshine in hay-making.—Wild hay, hay made from the native or indigenous grasses of any country. [Western U. S.]

hay[1] (hā), v. [< hay[1], n.] I. trans. 1. To make hay of; convert into hay.

The bunch-grass matures in the field, and is hayed uncut.
Amer. Commonwealths, Oregon, p. 300.

2. To feed with hay; give hay to.

After some hours the postillion stopped before a house on the Swedish bank to hay his horses
B. Taylor Northern Travel, p. 168.

II. intrans. To cut and dry or cure grass for use as fodder.

hay[2]† (hā), n. [< ME. haye, heye, < AS. hege, a hedge, fence, < haga, a hedge, > E. haw[1]: see haw[1] and hedge.] 1. A hedge.

As fast I bisiede and wolde fayne
Have passed the hay, if I myght
Have geten ynne. Rom. of the Rose, l. 2971.

Thise holtis and thise hayis,
That han in wynter dede ben and drye, Revesten hem in greene, when that May is.
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 351.

2. A net set round the haunt of an animal.

It were not meet to send a huntsman out Into the woods with net, with gin or hay.
John Dennys (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 164).

Subsequently, in 1503, a penalty of the same amount was imposed upon any person keeping deer hays, or buck-stalls, unless he had a park, chase, or forest.
S. Dowell, Taxes in England, III. 271.

3. An inclosure; a haw.—4. [Cf. heydeguy.] A round country-dance; a dance in a ring.

Hayes, jigges, and roundelayes.
Martin's Month's Minde (1589). (Halliwell.)

With their winding hays, Active and antic dances, to delight
Your frolic eyes.
Chapman, Widow's Tears, iv. 1.

To dance the hay, to dance in a ring; hence, to move about briskly.

Shall we goe daunce the hay?
Never pipe could ever play Better shepheard's roundelay.
England's Helicon, p. 228. (Halliwell.)

I will play on the tabor to the worthies, and let them dance the hay. Shak., L. L. L., v. 1.

Mary is busied about many things, is dancing the hays between three houses. Walpole, Letters, II. 122.

hay[2]† (hā), v. i. [< hay[2], n., 2.] To lay snares for rabbits.

Prithee, content thyself.
We shall scout here, as though we went a-haying.
Beau. and Fl., Coxcomb, i. 3.

hay[3] (hā), interj. Same as hey[1].

hay[4]† (hā). [It. hai, you have it, 2d pers. sing. pres. ind. of avere, < L. habere, have: see habit, have. Cf. L. habet, he has it, an exclamation used when a gladiator was wounded.] In fencing: (a) An exclamation used when one's opponent is hit.

O, it must be done like lightning, hay!
B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, iv. 5.

(b) A home thrust.

He fights as you sing prick-song, keeps time, distance, and proportion. . . . Ah, the immortal passado! the punto reverso! the hay! Shak., R. and J., ii. 4.

haya (hā'yä), n. [Named for J. Hay, its discoverer.] An arrow-poison of northern Africa. It seems to have a local analgetic effect, somewhat like that of cocaine, when absorbed from a mucous surface or injected hypodermically. There is evidence that its action depends at least in part upon the presence in it of the bark or other parts of Erythrophleum Guineense.

hay-asthma (hā'ast″mą), n. Same as hay-fever.

I escaped from the hay-asthma with a visit of one month.
Southey, Letters.

hay-bacillus (hā'ba-sil″us), n. Bacillus subtilis: so called because it is abundantly obtained from infusions of hay. See Bacillus, 3.

hay-band (hā'band), n. A band with which a bundle of hay is bound.

hay-bird (hā'bėrd), n. 1. A small bird, as a warbler or flycatcher, which uses hay in building its nest. The name is variously applied, as to the whitethroat, Sylvia cinerea, the European blackcap, S. atricapilla, and other species of the same genus in its most restricted sense; to the willow-warbler, Phylloscopus trochilus, the wood-warbler, P. sibilatrix, and chiffchaff, P. rufus; to the spotted flycatcher, Muscicapa grisola, etc. [Eng.]

2. The pectoral sandpiper, or grass-snipe, Tringa maculata. [New Jersey, U. S.]

haybote (hā'bōt), n. [< hay[2], hedge, + boot[1], ME. bote, fine, reparation.] In Eng. law: (a) A fine for damaging or breaking fences. (b) Formerly, an allowance of wood to a tenant for repairing hedges or fences; hedgebote.

hay-cap (hā'kap), n. A canvas cover or hood placed over a cock of hay to protect it from rain.

hay-car (hā'kär), n. On American railroads, a box-car for carrying baled hay. Car-Builder's Dict.

hay-cart (hā'kärt), n. A hay-wagon or -wain.

We met, however, with great numbers of travellers, mostly farmers with laden hay-carts.
B. Taylor, Northern Travel, p. 412.

haycock (hā'kok), n. A small conical pile or heap of hay thrown up in a hay-field while the hay is being cured or is awaiting removal to a barn.

If the earlier season lead To the tann'd haycock in the mead.
Milton, L'Allegro, l. 90.

As they rake the green-appearing ground,
And drive the dusky wave along the mead,
The russet hay-cock rises thick behind,
In order gay. Thomson, Summer, l. 367.

hay-cromet†, n. A hay-rake. Davies.

hay-cutter (hā'kut″ėr), n. A machine for cutting hay into pieces for use as food for cattle.

haydeguy†, n. [Also heydeguy, hydegy, etc., pl. haydeguies, etc., whence sing. heydeguise, etc., in first form hay the gy, appar. 'hay of Guy': see hay[2], n., 4.] A form of hay or dance, also called heydeguise and heyday-guise, q. v.

haydenite (hā′dn-īt), n. [Named after Dr. H. H. Hayden (1769–1844), a dentist, who discovered it near Baltimore in Maryland.] A variety of the zeolite chabazite.

hay-elevator (hā′el″ē-vā-tor), n. A mechanical hay-fork or hay-lifting and -conveying apparatus, used to lift a quantity of hay from a wagon and place it in a loft.

hayesin (hā′zin), n. [Named after A. A. Hayes (1806–82), an American chemist.] A hydrous calcium borate related to ulexite.

hay-fever (hā′fē″vèr), n. A feverish attack, coming on in the summer, with inflammation of the mucous membrane of the nose and eyes, followed by bronchitis and asthma. It is caused, in susceptible persons, by the pollen of various grasses, especially of the ragweed. Also called summer fever, summer catarrh, hay-cold, hay-asthma, autumnal catarrh, pollen-fever, pollen-catarrh, and (early forms) rose-cold and June cold.

hay-field (hā′fēld), n. A field where grass designed to be made into hay is grown; a field where grass is being made into hay.

There from the sun-burnt hayfield homeward creeps hay-fork (hā′fôrk), n. A fork used for turning over hay to dry, or in lifting it, as into a cart, on to a rick, etc.
★ The loaded wain. Cowper, Task, i. 295.

hay-hook (hā′hůk), n. 1. A hand-tool for pulling hay from the side of a stack or mow.—2. In her., a rare bearing representing a large hook with a sort of square socket at the upper end. The point is sometimes finished with a head, as of a dog.

haying (hā′ing), n. [Verbal n. of hay[1], v.] The process of making hay; the work of cutting, curing, and storing grass.

hay-jack (hā′jak), n. A name of several warblers, as of species of Sylvia and Phylloscopus, which build nests of hay; a hay-bird. [Local, Eng.]

This style of nest-building [with the sides and bottom like open basketwork] seems to be common to all the species of the genus Sylvia, as now restricted, and in many districts has obtained for the builders the name of Hay-Jack, quite without reference to the kind of bird which puts the nests together. Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 553.

Black-headed hay-jack, Sylvia atricapilla, the blackcap.

hay-knife (hā′nīf), n. A long knife with the blade set at right angles to the handle, or a spade-like cutting-tool with a blade, foot-rest, and curved handle, used to cut hay from the ★ side of a haystack or haymow.

hay-loader (hā′lō″dèr), n. A device attached to a hay-rack or hay-wagon, for gathering up the hay from windrows or from haycocks and loading it upon the wagon. The most simple form is a crane fastened to the body of a wagon, and having a large hay-fork suspended from its arm. A more complicated machine includes a hay-rake trailing behind the wagon, and an elevator for raising the hay gathered by the rake and depositing it upon the wagon.

hay-loft (hā′lôft), n. In a stable or barn, a storing-place for hay.

hay-maiden, hay-maids (hā′mā″dn, -mādz), n. [In poet. allusion to girls in the hay-field.] The ground-ivy, Glecoma hederacea. [Eng.]

haymaker (hā′mā″kèr), n. 1. One who cuts and dries grass for use as fodder; specifically, in England, one who follows the mowers and tosses the grass over to dry it.

The conversation turned commonly on the incidents of the summer; how the hay-makers overtook the mowers, or how the rain kept the labour back.
Hone's Year Book, Oct. 8.

2. An apparatus for drying and curing hay. It consists of a long inclined shoot, through which fresh-cut grass is passed by means of a conveyer, and in which it meets a volume of hot air from a coke-furnace. It resembles the more simple fruit-driers.

3. pl. A kind of country-dance. Also called haymakers' jig.

hay-market (hā′mär″ket), n. A place for the sale of hay.

haymow (hā′mou), n. A mow or mass of hay stored in a barn.

haynselynst, n. pl. See hanselines.

hay-plant (hā′plant), n. An umbelliferous plant, Prangos pabularia, which grows in Tibet and adjacent mountainous countries, and is there highly valued as a forage-plant. Its value was first made known to Europeans by Moorcroft, and attempts have been made to introduce it into Europe, but generally without success. It has been thought to be the "Silphium" mentioned by Arrian in his account of the wars of Alexander the Great.

hay-press (hā′pres), n. A press for making loose hay into bales for convenience of storage and transportation; a baling-press.

hay-rack (hā′rak), n. A light framework of wood placed on an open wagon for the purpose of carrying bulky material, such as hay or straw.

The deputy sheriff and then his prisoner had to climb over a hayrack and thence down to the ground.
E. Eggleston, The Graysons, xvi.

hay-rake (hā′rāk), n. 1. A hand-rake used in raking hay.—2. A machine for raking hay into windrows; a horse-rake.

hayrick (hā′rik), n. A haystack.

The stable, sheds, and other outbuildings, with the hayricks and the pens for such cattle as we bring in during winter, are near the house.
T. Roosevelt, The Century, XXXV. 655.

hayrift, n. See hairif.

hay-scent (hā′sent), n. A fern, Dryopteris Oreopteris: so called on account of the fragrance of its fronds. It is common in Europe, and occurs rarely on the Pacific coast from Alaska to Oregon. See scented fern.

hay-seed (hā′sēd), n. 1. Grass-seed. [Colloq.]—2. The redseed, brit, etc., upon which mackerel, menhaden, and other fish largely feed. [New Eng.]—3. A countryman; a rustic. [Slang, U. S.]

haysoget, n. An obsolete variant of haysuck.

hay-spreader (hā′spred″èr), n. An apparatus for spreading out hay to expose it to the sun and the air.

haystack (hā′stak), n. [= Dan. höstak = Sw. höstack.] A large stack or pile of hay, made in the open air as a means of storing or preserving the hay. It is finished above in conical form, or in the form of a ridged roof, and the sides are generally made to project somewhat for better protection from rain.

Set fire on barns and haystacks in the night.
Shak., Tit. And., v. 1.

Haystack boiler, an old form of steam-boiler, somewhat resembling a haystack in form.—To look for a needle in a haystack, to seek for what it is almost impossible ★ to find.

How in the world will we manage to find you afterwards? After we get into the thick of the bresh, it'll be like lookin' for a needle in the biggest sort of a haystack.
W. M. Baker, New Timothy, p. 200.

haysuck (hā′suk), n. [E. dial. also hazock, hazeck, hay-jack, isaac, etc. (and haysucker), < ME. haisugge, heisugge, heysoge, < AS. hegesugge (mentioned once, in a list of birds, next to the wren, glossed "cicada, vicetula": see below), < hege, E. hay[2], hedge, + sugge, sugga,* a certain bird, glossed "ficetula," "ficitula," i. e., L. ficedula, the fig-pecker, beccafico, garden-warbler. The connection of AS. sugga with sūgan, sūcan, suck, is not obvious.] 1. The hedge-sparrow, Accentor modularis.

Thou [the cuckoo] mortherere of the heysoge on the braunche,
That broughte the forth.
Chaucer, Parliament of Fowls, l. 612.

hay-tea (hā′tē), n. The juice of hay extracted by boiling, and used as food for cattle.

hay-tedder (hā′ted″èr), n. A machine for scattering hay so as to expose it to the sun and air. It consists of a pair of wheels supporting a reel, which carries bars set with curved tines pointing outward. The reel is rotated by a pinion connected with a spur-wheel in the hub of one of the wheels.

haythorn (hā′thôrn), n. [< AS. hægthorn; same as hawthorn, which prop. represents ONorth. hagathorn: see hawthorn.] Same as hawthorn.

Haytian (hā′ti-an), a. and n. [< Hayti (see def.) + -an.] I. a. 1. Of or pertaining to Hayti or San Domingo, a large island of the West Indies lying east of Cuba.—2. Pertaining to the republic of Hayti, comprising the western part of this island.

II. n. A native or citizen of Hayti.

hay-tit (hā′tit), n. 1. The whitethroat, Sylvia cinerea: so called from the hay used in its nest. [Oxfordshire, Eng.]—2. The sedge-warbler, Acrocephalus phragmitis: so called from the materials of its nest. [Oxfordshire, Eng.]

haytorite (hā′tor-īt), n. [< Haytor (see def.) + -ite[2].] A pseudomorphous mineral occurring in crystals having the form of datolite but consisting of chalcedony. It is from the Haytor iron-mines in Devonshire, England.

haywardt (hā′wârd), n. [Early mod. E. also heyward; < ME. heyward, heyeward, heiward, also, through OF. influence, haward, < AS. hæigweard (rare), for hægweard,* < haga (in comp. hæg-, cf. hawthorn, haythorn), haw, hedge, inclosure, + weard, keeper. Hence the proper names Hayward, Heyward, Haward, and also Howard (ME. Howard, var. of Haward), which is not, as often said, a contraction of hogward* (cf. Hoggart, which represents hogherd, equiv. to swineherd).] An official whose duty was to guard the common herd or cattle of a town and to prevent them from breaking the hedges or fences of inclosed grounds; in New England, a similar official whose special duty was to impound strays.

Haue an horne and be haywarde, and liggen oute a nyghtes,
And kepe my corn in my croft fro pykers and theeues.
Piers Plowman (C), vi. 16.

The meanest sort of men, as shepheards, heywards and such like. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 20.

The hayward in England was the watcher of bounds, but his office in Massachusetts resembled that of the impounder and common driver more than it did that of the hedge warden of the mother country. E. Channing.

The hay-ward, who watched over the common pasture when enclosed for grass-growing, was paid by a piece of cornland at its side. J. R. Green, Conq. of Eng., p. 316.

hayz (hā′iz), n. [Ar.] In astrol., an accidental fortitude, consisting in the situation of a masculine diurnal planet in a masculine sign above the horizon in the daytime, or of a feminine nocturnal planet in a feminine sign below the horizon in the night-time. The planet is properly hazard (haz′ärd), n. [Formerly also hasard; < ME. hasard, hazard, a game of chance, < OF. hasard, hazard, a game at dice, the six at dice, adventure, F. hasard, hazard, = OIt. zara, a game at dice, also a hazard or a nick at dice, It. (after F.) azzardo, hazard, risk, danger, < Sp. azar, an unforeseen disaster, unexpected accident, an unfortunate card or throw at dice, hazard, formerly also the ace at dice, = Pg. azar, ill luck, a cast at dice losing all; said to be < Ar. al-zār, the die, < al, the, + zār (in vulgar speech), a die. Some refer the term to Hasart or Asart, the name of a castle in Palestine, during the siege of which the game is said to have been invented.] 1. The leading game at dice. The instruments are a box and two dice. The players are a caster and any number of setters. The setter stakes his money upon the table; the caster accepts the bet if he chooses, and must cover the setter's money if required. The setter can bar any throw. The caster first calls a main—that is, he calls any of the numbers 5, 6, 7, 8, or 9. He then throws his chance. If this is 2, 3, 11, or 12, it is called crabs and he loses, unless the main were 7 and he throws 11, or the main were 6 or 8 and he throws 12. In these cases, and also if he throws the main, his throw is called nick, and he wins. If he throws neither crabs nor nick, he must continue to throw until he again throws the main or his chance; if he throws the former first, the setter wins, if the latter the caster wins. Owing to the complicated chances, a good player at hazard has a great advantage over a novice.

In Flaundres whylom was a companye
Of yonge folk that haunteden folye,
As ryot, hasard, stewes and tavernes.
Chaucer, Pardoner's Tale, l. 3.

Early at business, and at hazard late;
Mad at a fox-chase, wise at a debate.
Pope, Moral Essays, i. 73.

2. A fortuitous event; chance; accident.

I will stand the hazard of the die.
Shak., Rich. III., v. 4.

Fortune
(The blind foe to all beauty that is good) Bandied you from one hazard to another.
Beau. and Fl., Knight of Malta, v. 1.

Two plants taken by hazard were protected under separate nets. Darwin, Cross and Self Fertilisation, p. 339.

3. Risk; peril; exposure to danger; liability to do or to receive harm: as, the hazards of the sea; he did it at the hazard of his reputation.

But Fame said, take heed how you loose me, for if you do, you will run a great hazard never to meet me again, there's no retrieving of me. Howell, Letters, ii. 14.

The tragedies of former times,
Hazards and strange escapes.
Wordsworth, Prelude, viii.

4†. One of the holes in the sides of a billiard-table. Bailey, 1731. Hence—5. A stroke in billiards: known as losing hazard when the player pockets his own ball off another, and as winning hazard when he pockets the object-ball. [Eng.]

The object of the player . . . is to drive one or other of the balls in one or other of the pockets. . . . [This stroke] is known as a hazard. Encyc. Brit., III. 675.

6. Something risked or staked.

I do not doubt . . .
To . . . bring your latter hazard back again.
Shak., M. of V., i. 1.

7. In tennis and some similar games, that side of the court into which the ball is served. See tennis.

Another when at the racket court he had a ball struck into his hazard, he would ever and anon cry out, Estes vous là avec vos ours? Howell, Forraine Travell (1642), § 3.

When we have match'd our rackets to these balls,
We will in France, by God's grace, play a set Shall strike his father's crown into the hazard.
Shak., Hen. V., i. 2.

8. In golf, a bunker, water, path, road, railway, fence, or ditch.—Chicken hazard, a game of chance with very small stakes.—To run the hazard, to do something when the consequences are not foreseen and not within the powers of calculation; risk; take the chance. = Syn. Venture, etc. See risk, n.

hazard (haz′ärd), v. [= F. hasarder, venture; from the noun.] I. trans. 1. To take the chance of; venture to do, undertake, etc.

A cunning thief . . . would hazard the winning both of first and last. Shak., Cymbeline, i. 5.

Mr. Darcy would never have hazarded such a proposal, if he had not been well assured of his cousin's corroboration. Jane Austen, Pride and Prejudice, p. 177.

2. To take the risk or danger of; run the risk of incurring or bringing to pass: as, to hazard the loss of reputation or of a battle.

Nor is the benefit proposed to be obtained by it in any manner equal to the evil hazarded. Clarke, Works, I. li.

I know that by telling it I hazard a mortal enmity.
Theodore Parker, Historic Americans.

3. To imperil; expose to danger or loss: as, to hazard life for a friend; to hazard an estate recklessly.

I hold it better far
To keep the course we run, than, seeking change, Hazard our lives, our heirs, and the realms.
Webster and Dekker, Sir Thomas Wyat, p. 18.

4. To incur the danger involved in; venture.

I must hazard the production of the bald fact, . . . though it should prove an Egyptian skull at our banquet. Emerson, Friendship.

5. To expose to the risk of; put in danger of: with to. [Rare.]

He hazards his neck to the halter. Fuller.

=Syn. To jeopard, peril, imperil, endanger. See danger, and risk, n.

II. intrans. To try the chance; adventure; run the risk or danger.

Yet you may scape to the camp; we'll hazard with you. Fletcher, Valentinian, iv. 4.

Pause a day or two Before you hazard. Shak., M. of V., iii. 2.

hazardable (haz′är-da-bl), a. [< hazard + -able.] 1. Liable to hazard or chance; exposed to danger.

How to keep the corps seven dayes from corruption by anointing and washing, without exenteration, were an hazardable peece of art, in our choisest practise. Sir T. Browne, Urn-Burial, iii.

For Cooper's Dictionary, I will send it you as soon as I can; but it is so difficult and hazardable . . . as I cannot tell how to convey that, or anything else to thee. Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 410.

2. Capable of being hazarded or risked.

hazarder (haz′är-dėr), n. [Early mod. E. also hasardour; < ME. hasardour, < OF. hasardour, hasardeor, < hasard, hazard: see hazard, n.] A player at dice or cards; a gamester.

It is repreve and contrarie of honour
For to ben holde a commune hasardour.
Chaucer, Pardoner's Tale, l. 134.

Trist nout to ys wonder world that lastit bot a wile:
For it is not bot [only] wiles of wo, a hasardour that wil the [thee] gile.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 234.

hazardize†, n. [< hazard + -ize, -ise, as in gormandise, n., cowardice, etc.] A hazardous situation or enterprise; danger.

Spenser, F. Q., II. xii. 19.

hazardous (haz′är-dus), a. [< OF. hasardeux = It. azzardoso, hazardous; as hazard + -ous.] 1. Full of or exposing to hazard or peril, or danger of loss or evil; dangerous; risky.

I understand you have been in sundry hot and hazardous Encounters, because of those many Scars and Cuts you wear about you. Howell, Letters, iv. 40.

Perhaps thou [Christ] linger'st, in deep thought detain'd
Of the enterprise so hazardous and high.
Milton, P. R., iii. 228.

E'en daylight has its dangers; and the walk Through pathless wastes . . .
Is hazardous and bold. Cowper, Task, iv. 575.

2†. Reckless; daring; inclined to run risks.

Lycurgus was in his nature hazardous, and, by the lucky passing through many dangers, grown confident in himself. Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, iii.

Hazardous insurance, an insurance effected at a high premium on buildings or goods more than ordinarily liable to catch fire, as on wooden houses, theaters, oil- or varnish-works, petroleum, etc. When the risk is considered to be very great, such insurances are called extra-hazardous. = Syn. Perilous, unsafe, precarious, uncertain, bold, daring.

hazardously (haz′är-dus-li), adv. In a hazardous manner. Bailey, 1727, Supp.

O glotonie, luxurie and hasardrye.
Chaucer, Pardoner's Tale, l. 435.

Take a Toppe, yif thou wolt pleye,
And not at the hasardrye.
Vernon MS., fol. 310, col. 1.

Some fell to daunce; some fel to hazardry.
Spenser, F. Q., III. i. 57.

2. Rashness; temerity.

Hasty wroth, and heedlesse hazardry,
Doe breede repentaunce late, and lasting infamy.
Spenser, F. Q., II. v. 13.

hazard-table (haz′ärd-tā′bl), n. A table at which games of chance are played, especially ★with dice.

haze[1] (hāz), n. [Formerly also hase; the earliest instances (namely, of haze, v., and hazy, a.: see quot.) are of the latter part of the 17th century. Origin unknown; there is nothing to connect the word with AS. hasu, haso, gray (applied to the dove, eagle, wolf, to smoke, to garments, etc., but not to the weather), = Icel. höss, gray (applied to the eagle, wolf, the hair of the head, etc., but not to the weather).] The aggregation of a countless multitude of extremely minute and even ultra-microscopic particles in the air, individually invisible, but producing in the aggregate an opaqueness of the atmosphere. Unlike fog, haze is commonly observed when the lower air is in a state of unusual dryness, sometimes appearing in horizontal strata at an average altitude of about 1,500 feet, and again often diffused through the air up to a much greater height and having no definite locus. In the common form that occurs when the upper air is in a state of incipient cloudiness, the particles are very minute droplets of water with or without an admixture of smoke or dust; in other cases, the particles consist of organic or inorganic matter carried to high altitudes by convective and other ascending currents. The former has been termed water-haze, and usually appears gray or bluish in reflected light, and yellow, orange, or red in transmitted light; the latter is called dust-haze, and may be distinguished by its buff tint. = Syn. Mist, Fog, etc. See rain, n.

haze[1] (hāz), v. i.; pret. and pp. hazed, ppr. hazing. [< haze[1], n.] 1†. To drizzle.

It hazes, it misles, or rains small rain.
Ray, Collection of North. Eng. Words (ed. 1691).

2. To be or become foggy or hazy. [Rare.]

haze[2] (hāz), v.; pret. and pp. hazed, ppr. hazing. [Formerly also hase; < OF. haser, irritate, vex, annoy, insult (Godefroy).] I. trans. 1. To harass with labor; punish with unnecessary work, as a seaman.

Every shifting of the studding-sails was only to haze the crew. R. H. Dana, Jr., Before the Mast, p. 50.

2. To play mischievous or abusive tricks on; try the pluck or temper of, especially by physical persecution, as lower-class students in a college or new-comers in an establishment of any kind.

'Tis the Sophomores rushing the Freshmen to haze.
Poem before Iadma, quoted in College Words, p. 251.

II. intrans. To frolic; lark. [Colloq., U. S.]

Hazin' round with Charity Bunker and the rest of the gals. Wise, Tales for the Marines.

hazeck (hā′zek), n. Same as haysuck. [Prov. ★Eng.]

hazel (hā′zl), n. and a. [Also hazle, early mod. E. hasel, hasil, < ME. hasel, hesil, < AS. hæsel = D. hazel(aar) = OHG. hasala, f., hasal, m., MHG. G. hasel, f., = Icel. hasl, m., hesli, n., = Sw. Dan. hassel = L. corulus, corylus (for cosulus*) = W. coll, hazel. The form suggests a connection with hare[1], OHG. haso, G. hase; but this is uncertain.] I. n. A plant of the genus Corylus, consisting of shrubs or small trees belonging to the Fagaceæ, or beech family: giving name to the tribe Coryleæ, to which the hornbeams also belong. The European hazel, Corylus Avellana, may become a small tree, and its wood has valuable qualities. The American hazel, C. Americana, is a bush, usually growing in dense thickets from which it excludes nearly all other vegetation. The beaked hazel is C. rostrata, the more northern of the American species. Impressions of leaves have been found in a fossil state a, female catkin; b, female flower; c, male catkin; d, male flower.

which cannot be distinguished from the leaves of C. Americana and C. rostrata. These impressions occur in what is known to geologists as the Fort Union group, of Upper Cretaceous or Lower Tertiary age, in the lower Yellowstone valley in Montana. The type is therefore very ancient. See Corylus.

Their bowes are of tough Hasill, the strings of Leather, arrowes of Canes or Hasill, headed with stones or hornes, and artificially feathered. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 762.

The younger people making holiday . . .
Went nutting to the hazels.
Tennyson, Enoch Arden.

II. a. [Attrib. use of the noun. The older adj. is hazelen.] 1. Made of or belonging to the hazel.

They hung me up by the heels, and beat me with hazel-sticks, as if they would have baked me, and have cozened somebody with me for venison. Beau. and Fl., King and No King, iii. 2.

2. Of a light-brown color, like the hazelnut.

Thou wilt quarrel with a man for cracking nuts, having no other reason but because thou hast hazel eyes. Shak., R. and J., iii. 1.

hazel-crottles (hā′zl-krot′lz), n. A species of lichen, Sticta pulmonaria, used in dyeing yarn and woolen goods. It is also a tonic and an astringent, and has been used for flavoring beer, for making diet-drinks or jellies for invalids, and by the Swedish peasants for epidemic catarrh in cattle and sheep. Also called hazel-rag or hazel-raw. See Sticta. [North. Eng.]

hazel-earth (hā′zl-ėrth), n. Soil suitable for the hazel; fertile loam. [Eng.]

hazelent, a. [< ME. haslen*, heslyn, < AS. hæslen, < hæsel, hazel: see hazel and -en[2].] Pertaining to or composed of hazel.

Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 2504.

hazeless (hāz′les), a. [< haze[1] + -less.] Without haze; free from haze.

hazel-grouse (hā′zl-grous), n. A name of the European ruffed grouse, Bonasa betulina, from its frequenting thickets of hazel.

hazel-hen (hā′zl-hen), n. Same as hazel-grouse.

St. Beanus protected the cranes and hazel-hens which built their nests upon the Ulster mountains. C. Elton, Origins of Eng. Hist., p. 298.

hazelly (hā′zl-i), a. [< hazel + -ly[1] or -y[1].] Of the color of the hazelnut; of a light brown. ★[Rare.]

hazelnut (hā′zl-nut), n. [< ME. haselnote, < AS. hæselhnutu (= D. hazelnoot = MLG. haselnote = OHG. hasalnuz, G. haselnuss = Dan. haselnöd), < hæsel, hazel, + hnutu, nut.] 1. The nut of the hazel. It consists of a hard globose or ovoid pericarp inclosing a single pendulous seed composed of two equal, thick, fleshy hemispherical cotyledons with a very short superior radicle surrounded by a membranaceous testa, the whole inclosed in two large and more or less fleshy coherent bracts with foliaceous summits, in Corylus rostrata prolonged into a beak. The nuts are sometimes solitary, but usually more or less clustered. The nutritious and edible part, or "meat," of the nut is the fleshy cotyledons, which are very agreeably flavored. Hazelnut-oil is used in mixing paints and perfumes. It is also taken for coughs.

(a) Fossil and (b) Recent Leaf of Hazel (Corylus Americana).

Ther ben summe of the gretnesse of a Bene, and summe als grete as an Haselle Note. Mandeville, Travels, p. 158.

2. The plant which bears the hazelnut. See hazel.

hazel-oil (hā′zl-oil), n. A severe beating, as with hazel rods. [Prov. Eng.]

hazel-rag, hazel-raw (hā′zl-rag, -rȧ), n. Same as hazel-crottles.

hazel-tree (hā′zl-trē), n. 1. Same as hazel. —2. A tree, Gevuina Avellana, of the natural family Proteaceæ. It is found in Chile and the Chonos archipelago west of Patagonia. It is a very ornamental tree, 30 feet in height, with snow-white flowers and coral-red fruit, the latter ripening at the same time with the opening of the former. It is an evergreen tree, with tough elastic wood, which is used in the construction of boats.

hazelwort (hā′zl-wȩrt), n. Asarum Europæum, the asarabacca. See Asarum. [Eng.]

hazer (hā′zėr), n. One who hazes.

The hazers in college are the men who have been bred upon dime novels and the prize-ring — in spirit, at least, if not in fact — to whom the training and instincts of the gentleman are unknown.
G. W. Curtis, Harper's Mag., LXXVI. 636.

haziness (hā′zi-nes), n. The state of being hazy.

hazing (hā′zing), n. [Verbal n. of haze[2], v.] The act or practice of harassing or abusing a new-comer, as a student at college or a sailor at sea, by practical jokes or tricks.

The petty bullying of hazing, and the whole system of college tyranny, is a most contemptible denial of fair play.
G. W. Curtis, Harper's Mag., LXXVI. 635.

hazle[1], n. and a. See hazel.

hazle[2]† (hā′zl), v. t. [< OF. hasler, haler, sunburn, F. hâler, sunburn, < OF. hasle, F. hâle, sunburning, the scorching heat of a summer sun.] To make dry; parch up.

That happy wind . . . did hazle and dry up the forlorn dregs and slime of Noah's deluge. D. Rogers, Naaman.

hazle[3] (hā′zl), n. [Perhaps named from its color, < hazle[1], hazel. Cf. hasel-gebirge, an important group in Austria.] In coal-mining, a tough mixture of sandstone and shale. Gresley. [North. Eng.]

hazock (hā′zȯk), n. Same as haysuck.

hazy (hā′zi), a. [Also hawsey, heysey, hazey. As if haze[1] + -y[1], but found earlier than the verb.] 1. Opaque with haze; obscured by light fog or smoke; dull; misty: used with reference to the state of the atmosphere, or to atmospheric effects, as in a picture.

Indeed the sky was, in general, so cloudy, and the weather so thick and hazy, that he had very little benefit of sun or moon. Cook, Voyages, III. i. 4.

Like hidden poets lie the hazy streams.
T. B. Read, Indian Summer.

2. Lacking distinctness; obscure; vague; confused: applied to thought and expression: as, a hazy reasoner; a hazy proposition.

He was as hazy about the Hypostatic Union as are many laymen about the Pragmatic Sanction.
Scribner's Mag., III. 739.

H. B. M. An abbreviation of His (or Her) Britannic Majesty.

H-branch (āch′branch), n. A double-branch pipe or T-joint united with a four-way joint, used to connect two parallel pipes with a pipe at right angles.

H-Branch.

H. C. An abbreviation of House of Commons.

hdkf. A commercial contraction of handkerchief.

H-drill (āch′dril), n. A special form of rock-drill having an end the section of which resembles the letter H. See cut under drill.

he[1] (hē), pron. and n.; now only in the masc., nom. he, poss. his, obj. (dat. and acc.) him, pl. (from another source) nom. they, poss. their, obj. (dat. and acc.) them. [The pron. of the 3d person, now commonly recognized only in the masc. sing., the pl. being supplied by another word, and the associated fem. (poss. and obj.) her and the neut. it being commonly treated as separate words; but orig. complete in all genders and cases, presenting a typical form, and retaining still the most numerous characteristics of the ancient pronominal inflection, and for that reason, and in order to explain its involved forms clearly, exhibited here with some fullness. The native and other Teut. forms are given in detail below in separate divisions; the typical form is the nom. sing. masc. he, < ME. he, < AS. hē = OS. he, hi, hie = OFries. hi = MLG. he, LG. he, hei = D. hij = Goth. his* (found only in the masc. dat. himma, acc. hina, neut. acc. hita) = Scand. (with a suffixed demonstrative particle), Icel. hann=Sw. Dan. han, he (Icel. hinn, Sw. Dan. hinn, hin, that, the other) (for other Teut. forms, see below); Teut. hi*, perhaps allied to L. hic (< √ hi* + -c, -ce, a demonstrative suffix), this, this one, and to Gr. κεῖνος, ἐκεῖνος, that one, ἐκεῖ, there. A different root, not found in AS. and E. (being appar. merged at an early period in that of he), appears in OS. masc. gen. is, etc., neut. nom. it (gen. is) = OHG. MHG. G. masc. nom. er, OHG. MHG. neut. ez, G. es, it, = Goth. masc. is (gen. is, dat. imma, acc. ina), fem. gen. izos, etc., neut. ita (gen. is, etc.) = L. is, fem. ea, neut. id, he, she, it, that, = Skt. i, this, that: an Indo-Eur. demonstrative pronominal root appearing also in various inflectional and deriv. suffixes. From the same Teut. pronominal root hi* are derived here[1], hen[2] (obs.), hence, hethen[2] (obs.), hither. The fem. and pl. forms of he began to fall away in the early part of the ME. period, being replaced in part by forms from other stems: see she and they. The aspirate in he, her, him is commonly suppressed in ordinary pronunciation after an accented monosyllable or dissyllable, a suppression which prevails throughout in the case of it, orig. hit, but is not generally acknowledged in regard to the other forms except in intentional representations of colloquial or dialectal speech, as, I told 'im so, see if 'e's in, take 'em away, etc. In formal speech the aspirate is more carefully given.] I. personal pron. A personal pronoun of the third person, the form he being nominative singular masculine. It stands for a noun or another pronoun previously expressed, or in place of such a word not expressed when pointed out by the situation. The various forms of he, including those of Middle English with their Anglo-Saxon originals and their cognates, are here given according to gender and case, with quotations. Idiomatic uses applicable to all forms are then treated without regard to case.

A. Masc. sing. (a) Nom. he. [Colloq. or dial. also e, also ha, a (see a[6]), < ME. he, heo, ha, ho, a, e, < AS. hē = OS. he, hi, hie = OFries. hi, he = MLG. he, LG. he, hei = D. hij = Goth. his* (= Icel. hann = Sw. Dan. han): see further in etym. above.]

Ac wel worth Pouerte! for he may walke vnrobbed

Piers Plowman (C), xiv. 1.

Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall. 1 Cor. x. 12.

If thou beest he — But, O, how fallen! how changed
From him who in the happy realms of light, Clothed with transcendent brightness, didst outshine Myriads, though bright! Milton, P. L., i. 84.

He who from zone to zone
Guides through the boundless sky thy certain flight.
Bryant, To a Waterfowl.

(b) Poss. (gen.) his (hiz). [Colloq. or dial. also is, < ME. his, hys, is, ys, < AS. his = OFries. his (= OS., etc., is, from another root: see etym. above).] Of him: now always merely possessive, and preceding the noun, but originally also used objectively with certain verbs. By a confusion of the genitive suffix -es, -is with this possessive form of the personal pronoun, the suffix came in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries to be often written separately as his: as, Artaxerxes his crown, etc. For this use, see under his[2]. For the neuter his, see C (b).

The sone for the syres synne sholde not be the werse.
Piers Plowman (C), xi. 237.

(c) Obj. (dat.) him. [Colloq. or dial. also im, < ME. him, hym, < AS. him, hym = OFries. him = D. hem (= MLG. im, em, LG. em = OHG. imo, MHG. ime, im, G. ihm = Goth. imma, from another root: see etym. above).] This form, originally only dative, is also used as accusative, having displaced the original form for the accusative. See (d). For the neuter him, see C (c).

Deth delt him [dat.] a dent, and drof him [acc.] to the erthe.
Piers Plowman (A), xii. 104.

Whosoever hath, to him shall be given. Mat. xiii. 12.

They gave him to drink vinegar mingled with gall.
Mat. xxvii. 34.

They had no such lawe, but they had another, that the King of Persia might doe what him liked.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 354.

The story I had of him is literally true, and well known to be so in the country wherein the circumstances were transacted. Steele, Tatler, No. 94.

[For the proper objective him is often incorrectly used he in certain constructions where a familiar sequence seems, at the moment, to require that form.

I cannot think of any character below the flatterer, except he that envies him. Steele, Tatler, No. 208.

Conversely, him is often used, colloquially, for he in the predicate: as, it is him; like "it is me" for "it is I." See *I*2.] (d) Obj. (acc.) him. [A substitution of the dative form him, or an accom. to him of the earlier form, ME. hin, hine, < AS. hine = OFries. hini, hine (also him, hem) (cf. OS. ina = OHG. ina, MHG. ine, G. in, G. ihn = Goth. ina, from another root: see etym. above).] See (c) above.

Lowell, Harvard Anniversary.

(b) Poss. its, formerly his. [The poss. form its is first recorded in print in 1598. It is formed from it by the addition of the common possessive (genitive) suffix -s, of nouns, the nom. and obj. form it being also used for a time in the possessive without a suffix. The substitution arose when the orig. neut. poss. his, which had the same form as the masc. poss. his, began to be regarded as masc. only, thus giving it, when used properly as neut., the appearance of a personification. Earlier mod. E. his, hys, < ME. his, hys, < AS. his, in form like the masc. his: see A (b).]

Crashaw, Epigram (trans.) (1634).

(c) Obj. (dat.) it. [This is a substitution for the orig. him, the nom. and acc. it being so frequent (by reason of the numerous idiomatic uses of the word) that the dative gave way to the accusative, while in the masc. and fem. the accusative gave way to the dative. Early mod. E. him, < ME. him, hym, < AS. him, etc., in forms like the masc.: see A (c).]

We haue no lymes to labore with; vr lord we hit thonken.
Piers Plowman (A), vii. 117.

Thou art inclined to sleep; 'tis a good dulness,
And give it way. Shak., Tempest, i. 2.

(d) Obj. (acc.) it. [< ME. it, hit, et, < AS. hit, etc., in forms like the nom. See (a) above.]

He [God] is thre persones departable; ich proue hit by mankynde. Piers Plowman (C), xix. 216.

But vnto him that brouhte yt yee hit take Whenne yee haue done.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 5.

Ah, my liege Lord! forgive it unto mee,
If ought against thine honour I have tolde.
Spenser, Muiopotmos, l. 102.

[This neuter it is now generally treated as a separate word, having many idiomatic uses of its own. See it.]

D. Masc., fem., and neut. pl. [Obsolete or colloquial (see (c), (d) below), the form they, of different origin, being used in literary English.] (a) Nom. hė̆t, hit. [ME. he, heo, hio, hi, hie, ha, hue, etc., < AS. hī, hīe, hig, heó, hió = OFries. hia (in other Teut. forms from a different root, represented by she).] They: displaced in modern English by they (which see).

Alle beon he blithe
That to my song lythe.
King Horn (E. E. T. S.), l. 1.

And nuste wat folk it was, to hem he sende hys sonde,
To wyte, wether he [they] wolde pes, other heo nolde non.
Rob. of Gloucester, p. 16.

Toward Mantrible ridden hi.
Sir Ferumbras (ed. Ellis), ii. 394.

Thenne cam Pilatus with muche peuple . . .
To seo hou douhtiliche Deth sholde do and deme here beyer [of both of them] ryght.
Piers Plowman (C), xxi. 36.

(c) Obj. (dat.) hem†, em†, 'em. [Common in early mod. E., in which it came to be regarded as a contr. of the equiv. them, and was therefore in the 17th century often printed 'hem, 'em; in present use only colloq., written 'em (see 'em); < ME. hem, ham, hom, heom, hemen, < AS. him, heom = OFries. hiam, him, himmen, etc. (cf. Goth. im, from another root: see etym. above).] Them. See they.

And [he] precheth to the poeple seynt Poules wordes, . . .
And with gladde wille doth hem gode.
Piers Plowman (B), viii. 93.

That ys to say, alle thynges that ye wylle that men do to zow, do ze the same to hemen.
MS. Rawl. Poet. 145. (Halliwell.)

(d) Obj. (acc.) hem†, em†, 'em. [< ME. hem, hom, etc.; a substitution for the orig. he, hi, etc. (same form as the nom.), the dative having displaced the accusative here as in the singular (see A (d)). See (c) above.] Them. See they.

He could coin or counterfeit
New words, with little or no wit; . . .
And when with hasty noise he spoke 'em,
The ignorant for current took 'em.
S. Butler, Hudibras, I. i. 113.

His friends — as Angels I received 'em,
His foes — the Devil had suborn'd 'em.
Tennyson, Queen Mary, i. 5.

In early use and in modern dialectal speech he is often found with reference to inanimate objects where present regular usage requires it. In early use this is generally due to the agreement required by the grammatical gender; in modern use it is due rather to personification or to mere mixture. An actual change of hit or it to he is not to be supposed.

From South to North he [England] ys long eigte hondred myle. Rob. of Gloucester, p. 2.

A staffe of sixe verses is very pleasant to the eare, and also serveth for a greater complement then the inferiour staves, which maketh him more commonly to be used.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 55.

The possessive may be used without a noun following, the feminine her, like our and your, then taking, in modern use, an additional genitive suffix -s, as in his, namely, hers.

This was his desir and hire also.
Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 221.

And what his fortune wanted, hers could mend.
Dryden.

A thing always becomes his at last who says it best, and thus makes it his own.
Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 41.

For the reflexive and emphatic form of he, see himself.

II. demonstr. pron. This one; that one.

Manye a man that may nat stonde a pul,
It likyth him at wrastelyng for to be,
And demen yit, wher [whether] he do bet or he.
Chaucer, Parliament of Fowls, l. 166.

III. n. 1. A male person; a man: correlative to she, a woman. [Now only humorous.]

Here I stand to answer thee,
Or any he the proudest of thy sort.
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., ii. 2.

One that dares step as far to gain my freedom
As any he that breathes.
Fletcher, Double Marriage, i. 1.

2. A male animal; a beast, bird, or fish of the male sex: correlative to she, a female animal. Hence much used attributively or as an adjective prefix, signifying 'male,' with names of animals, he and she thus prefixed supplying the place in English of the distinctive suffixes common in other tongues and used to some extent in Anglo-Saxon (compare fox, fixen, vixen): as, a he-bear, he-cat, he-goat, correlative to she-bear, etc. The use occurs first in Middle English, when the regular suffixes of gender, distinct in Anglo-Saxon, fell away or became confused. These prefixes are sometimes also used contemptuously with reference to persons.

They haue many hee and shee-Saints, in great veneration, with long legends of their liues.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 444.

All the he and she scoundrels of the capital, writhed and twisted together, rush by you.
Thackeray, Paris Sketch Book, On Some Fashionable [French Novels.

he[2] (hē), interj. A sound made in calling, laughing, etc.: as, He! he! an archers' word of call.

head (hed), n. and a. [The spelling ea indicates the orig. long vowel; early mod. E. also heed, hed; < ME. hed (i. e., hēd), hede, heed, contr. of earlier heved, hevid, heaved, haved, < AS. heáfod (gen. heáfdes), the head (lit. and fig.), = OS. hōbhid = OFries. hāved, hāfd, hād = D. hoofd = MLG. hōvet, LG. hōvet, hoofd = OHG. houbit, MHG. houbet, houpt, also höubet, G. haupt (dial. haid, häd, heed, after LG.) = Icel. höfudh = Sw. hufvud = Dan. hoved = Goth. haubith, the head (prob. connected with AS. hūfe, ME. houve, howe, Sc. how, a hood, = MLG. LG. huve = OHG. hūba, MHG. hūbe, G. haube, a cap, coif, hood, = Icel. hūfa = Dan. hue = Sw. hufva, a cap, hood, bonnet); prob. = L. căput, head (> ult. E. chief, capital[1], cape[2], etc.). The Gr. κεφαλή, the head, agrees with the rare and poet. AS. hafala, hafela, also written heafela, heafola, the head; but this is appar. not connected with heáfod, head: cf. Skt. kapāla, a cup, the skull.] I. n. 1. The upper part or division of the human body, consisting of the more or less rounded skull and its integuments and contents, the organs of sight, hearing, taste, etc., with the mouth and its parts, and joined to the trunk by the neck; in an extended sense, the corresponding part of any animal's body; the front, fore, or top part or oral end of an animal, in any way distinguished from the rest of the body, as by being borne upon a neck; the end opposite the tail. In all vertebrates except the lancelets, which have no skull or brain, the head is a prominent part. In arthropods, as insects and crustaceans, the head is an anterior part of the body in some way distinguished from the thorax, as by the coalescence of a number of the primitively distinct somites of the body into one segment, and the conversion of the appendages of these confluent somites into mouth-parts and organs of special sense; though the outward separation between head and thorax is often obscure or null. (See cephalothorax.) In the great group of worms, or anarthropodous anneloid animals, the head is simply the oral as opposed to the aboral end of the body. In molluscous animals a head is frequently recognizable by its mouth, tentacles, etc.; but in many there is no such distinction, these being called in consequence acephalous or headless. Still lower in the scale, the term head can be applied only, if at all, to the oral end of an animal. (See cranium and skull.) In certain Vermes the head is the whole mature individual excepting its generative buds, joints, or strobila: as, the head of a tapeworm.

Hou longe ssolle hor luther [lither] heued above hor ssoldren be? Rob. of Gloucester, l. 126.

Both wife and barnes opon him fell
And lay opon the cors criand, Heuid to heuid and hand to hand.
Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 71.

There was wont to ben the heed of seynt John Baptist, enclosed in the Walle.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 107.

It was one of those heads which Guido has often painted — mild, pale, penetrating.
Sterne, Sentimental Journey, p. 8.

2. Mental faculty regarded as seated in the head; intelligence; understanding; will or resolution; inclination; mind.

For what thorw werre and wrake and wycked hyfdes,
May no preiour pees make in no place, hit semeth.
Piers Plowman (C), xviii. 85.

Would Chloe know if you're alive or dead?
She bids her footman put it in her head.
Pope, Moral Essays, ii. 178.

When in ordinary discourse we say a man has a fine head, a long head, or a good head, we express ourselves metaphorically, and speak in relation to his understanding. Addison, The Hood.

Of this siege M. Viollet-le-Duc gives a long and minute account, which the visitor who has a head for such things may follow, with the brochure in hand, on the fortifications themselves. H. James, Jr., Little Tour, p. 149.

3. An individual animal or person; especially, an animal or a person considered as merely one of a number: as, to charge so much a head. [In this use after a number the plural is head.]

A company of giddy heads will take upon them to define how many shall be saved. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 626.

Thirty thousand head of swine. Addison.

The red deer, which toward the beginning of this century amounted to about five hundred head.

6. A part of a thing regarded as in some degree resembling the human head in position, form, or importance. (a) The top, especially when distinguished in some way from the rest of the thing: as, the head of a pin, of a spear, of a nail, of a mast.

He hied him to the head of the house,
To the house top of Fyvie.
Andrew Lammie (Child's Ballads, II. 196).

As much as the full moon doth [overshine] the cinders of the element, which show like pins' heads to her.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iv. 3.

(b) The top or upper part of a plant the leaves of which form a single more or less compact mass: as, a head of grain or of lettuce.

The wheat and barley which they sowed last winter are already in full head.
B. Taylor, Lands of the Saracen, p. 49.

(c) In bot., a more or less globular cluster of sessile or nearly sessile flowers centripetal in development, as in the plane-tree, button-bush, clover, etc. By the shortening of the pedicel the umbel becomes a head, as in Eryngium, Sanicula, etc. In the Asteraceæ the flowers are collected into a head, but they are then situated on a conical, flat, or even concave receptacle. Gray calls such a head the anthodium, from the resemblance of the whole head to a single flower. In the Characeæ Sachs applies the term head (köpfchen) to a peculiar hyaline cell situated at the central end of each of the eight manubria. See head-cell, and cut under anthoclinium. (d) The main point or part; that which constitutes the most conspicuous or most important feature.

True, I have married her;
The very head and front of my offending
Hath this extent, no more. Shak., Othello, i. 3.

(e) The fore part; hence, the foremost place; the most prominent or honorable position: as, the head of a ship (which includes the bows on both sides); the head of a procession, of a column of troops, or of a class; the head of the table; the head of a profession.

After 7 miles riding, passing thro' a wood heretofore sacred to Juno, we came to Monteflascone, the head of the Falisci. Evelyn, Diary, Nov. 4, 1644.

(n) A special part of a tool, instrument, etc., having some analogy with the human head, as the upper or steel part of an anvil; the riser, sprue, or sullage-piece of a casting; the obverse of a coin; the capital of a column; the striking part of a hammer, in contradistinction to the helve, and the pole as distinguished from the claw or peen; the poppet of a lathe; the lathe-stock in which is the live spindle, as distinguished from the tail-stock, which contains the dead spindle; the top edge of a book; the top of a door, etc. (o) A bundle of flax measuring probably 2 feet in length, and weighing a few pounds. In Dorsetshire a head of hemp weighs 4 pounds. According to the statute of Edward I. called Tractatus de ponderibus et mensuris, a head of linen is 10 yards: "Cheef de fustiano constat ex tredecim ulnis: caput findonis ex decem ulnis." (p) In whaling: (1) The upper end of a piece of blubber in boarding; the square end cut off from the main piece, and separately hauled in. (2) That part of a whale which includes the white-horse, junk, and case, as of a sperm-whale, or the whalebone and some blubber of a baleen-whale. (q) In tortoise-shell manuf., the larger plates, taken collectively, of the upper shell of the caret or hawk's-bill turtle, usually thirteen in number. (r) In musical notation, the principal part of a note — that is, that part which indicates by its position on the staff the pitch of the tone: as,  : distinguished from the stem or tail. (See note.) Heads are either open, as in semibreves and minims, or solid, as in crotchets, quavers, etc. (s) In various stringed musical instruments of the lute and viol families, that part of the instrument above the neck where the tuning-pegs are inserted. It is usually carved ornamentally, especially in the older instruments. See lute, viol, guitar, etc. (t) In musical instruments of the drum family, the stretched membrane covering one or both of the ends, by striking which the tone is produced. The tension of the head and thus the pitch of the tone are governed by a ring around the edge, which may be raised or lowered, relaxing or tightening the membrane. See drum, tambourine.

7. In hydros., the height of water above a given level, as in a pond or reservoir, considered as a measure of its energy or force of fall: also reckoned in terms of the pressure of the water per square inch at the given level: as, a reservoir with forty feet head of water. See fall.

A mill driven by a fall of water, whose virtual head is ten feet. Grier, Mechanics' Dict.

8. In pneumatics, the difference of pressure on a unit of base existing between two fluid columns of different densities communicating at their bases: estimated as the height of a column of the denser fluid whose pressure on a unit of its base is equal to the difference: as, the head which determines the velocity of flow in a chimney.—9. In steam- and gas-engin., the pressure of a confined volume of steam or gas upon a unit of the interior surface of a confining vessel, estimated in terms either of weight or of the height of a column of water or mercury which would exert the same pressure upon a unit of area of its base: as, a full head of steam.—10. A culmination or crisis; height; force; strength; pitch. Compare def. 6 (i).

headache (hed′āk), n. [Formerly head-ach, ★head-ake, hedake, hedache, < ME. hedake, heaved-eche, < AS. heáfodece, < heáfod, head, + ece, ache: see ache[1].] 1. A pain in the cranial part of the head, apparently somewhat deep-seated as compared with the sensation produced by a superficial irritation of the scalp. Apart from trauma, headaches may be produced in various ways, and they are classified mainly by their causes. The following groups may be distinguished: (a) Headaches depending on abnormal states of the blood, as in anemia; or when waste products accumulate in the blood through the inefficiency of the excretory organs, as in Bright's disease; or when the lungs, through pulmonary or cardiac fault or the closeness of rooms, fail to replace carbon dioxid with oxygen and to remove the other impurities which they should remove; or when poisons are taken into the system, as in coal-gas poisoning; or when there is absorption of poisons formed in the alimentary tract (as in constipation), or unusual fermentative processes go on in that tract; or when poisons are formed in the blood or solid tissues, as in zymotic diseases or in lithemic states. (b) Headaches dependent on exhaustion, such as those from overwork or excess of any kind, forming a part of a general neurasthenia, or after epileptic attacks. Hysterical headaches may perhaps be included here. (c) Headaches dependent on peripheral irritation, as from the alimentary canal, from the nose or pharynx, from the sexual apparatus, or from eye-strain incident to errors in refraction or insufficiencies of the muscles moving the eyeball. Some of these belong doubtless quite as properly to the preceding class. (d) Headaches dependent on hyperemia or ischemia of the brain and its envelops. The effect of change of posture on the intensity of most headaches seems to indicate that congestion or the reverse has a capacity for provoking pain in the head. But this class is one of uncertain limits. (e) Headaches from overheating, as from exposure to the sun. The headache of zymotic fevers seems to be due in part to the fever (pyrexia). (f) Megrim. (g) Headaches from gross lesions, as tumor, meningitis, or hemorrhage.

2. The corn-poppy, Papaver Rhœas, the odor of which is said to cause headache. Also called head-wark. healsome (hēl'sum), a. A dialectal (Scotch) variant of wholesome.

health (helth), n. [< ME. helth, < AS. hælth, health, healing, cure (= OHG. heilida, health) (more commonly hælu, hælo, health, safety, salvation: see heal[1], n.), < hāl, whole, hale: see whole, hale[2], hail[2], heal[1]. The word is thus an abstract noun from whole, not from heal.] 1. Soundness of body; that condition of a living organism and of its various parts and functions which conduces to efficient and prolonged life; a normal bodily condition. Health implies also, physiologically, the ability to produce offspring fitted to live long and to perform efficiently the ordinary functions of their species.

It is as "the outward sign of freedom, the realisation of the universal will," that health may be set at once as sign and as goal of the harmonious operation of the whole system—as sign and as goal of a realisation of life. J. H. Stirling, Secret of Hegel, II. 554.

2. In an extended use, the general condition of the body with reference to the degree of soundness and vigor, whether normal or impaired: as, good health; ill health; how is your health?

That health of the body is best which is ablest to endure all alterations and extremities. Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii. 270.

3. Natural vigor of the faculties; moral or intellectual soundness.

We have left undone those things which we ought to have done; And we have done those things which we ought not to have done: And there is no health in us. Book of Common Prayer, General Confession.

That thy way may be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations. Ps. lxvii. 2.

The tongue of the wise is health. Prov. xii. 18.

5. A salutation or a toast; an invocation of health and happiness for another: as, to drink a health to one.

Thou worthy lord
Of that unworthy wife that greeteth thee, Health to thy person! Shak., Lucrece, l. 1305.

Lady Margerie was the first ladye
That drank to him the wine O;
And aye as the healths gaed round and round,
"Laddy, your love is mine O." Sweet Willie and Lady Margerie (Child's Ballads, II. 53).

Well—come, give us a bottle of good wine, and we'll drink the lads' health. Sheridan, School for Scandal, ii. 3.

Bill of health. See bill[3].—Board of health, a board of commissioners appointed by the government of a State, city, or town, to make regulations for preventing the spread of contagious or infectious diseases, to promote or regulate sanitary conditions in particular cases, and in other ways to care for the public health. The United States public health and Marine Hospital service, a bureau of the treasury department, exercises the functions of a national health board, on the invitation of the State authorities, in cases of epidemic invasion, and also controls quarantine at many ports.—Figure of health. See figure.—Health laws, statutes regulating the general sanitary conditions by the organization of boards of health.

healthful (helth'fûl), a. [< health + -ful.] 1. Full of or in the enjoyment of health; free from disease; healthy: as, a healthful body or a healthful condition. [In this sense healthy is more common.]

I have learned since, that he . . . has a mother, between seventy and eighty, who walks, every Sunday, eight miles to hearing, as they call it, and back again.
Cowper, Works, VII. 38.

Hard of hearing. See hard.—Hearing in presence, in the Court of Session of Scotland, a formal hearing of counsel before all the judges.—Organs of hearing, the auditory apparatus; the ear and associate structures, adapted to receive vibrations of the air, called sound-waves. These organs consist, in the higher animals, essentially of the end-organs of a special nerve, bathed in a fluid usually containing some hard body or otolith, and receiving and being excited to molecular motion by impacts of sound-waves conducted to the nervous parts through special passages closed by a membrane, furnished in many cases with a special set of auditory ossicles, and usually communicating with the pharynx through a vestige of the first postoral visceral cleft. See ear[1].

hearingless (hēr'ing-les), a. [< hearing + -less.] Deaf.

hearken, hearkener. See harken, harkener.

haront, n. An obsolete spelling of heron.

hearsal†, n. [By apheresis for rehearsal.] Rehearsal. Spenser.

hearsay (hēr'sā), n. and a. [= D. (het) hooren zeggen = MLG. hōr-seggen = G. hörensagen; < hear + inf. say[1]. The verb phrase, chiefly in the pret., occurs in ME. (herd sain) and AS. (hȳrde secgan).] I. n. Information communicated by another; report; common talk; rumor; gossip.

Not having had, as yet, an opportunity of looking at the Salisbury codex, I can judge of it only from hearsay.
Rock, Church of our Fathers i. 6.

Sometimes a rumor, a hearsay, an inarticulate whisper, Came with its airy hand to point and beckon her forward.
Longfellow, Evangeline, ii. 1.

Let a prejudice be bequeathed, carried in the air, adopted by hearsay, . . . however it may come, these minds will give it habitation.
George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, vi. 12.

II. a. Of or pertaining to or depending upon hearsay, or the talk of others; told or given at second hand.

Liable to be imposed upon by the hearsay relations of credulity. Goldsmith, Pref. to Brookes's Nat. Hist.

She blamed herself for telling hearsay tales.
Tennyson, Merlin and Vivien.

Hearsay evidence, evidence at second hand; testimony the relevancy of which does not consist in what the witness giving it himself perceived, but in what he derived by information from another person. It is generally excluded as objectionable, because its credibility cannot be estimated from the credit to be given to the witness, but depends on the veracity or competency of the third person, not before the court. Thus, if a witness testifies that a bystander told him that the prisoner struck the deceased, this is hearsay, for its credibility depends on the bystander, and he should be produced; but if he testifies that the accused admitted to him that he had struck the deceased, or, before the blow, told him he intended to strike it, or testifies that he heard the outcry of the deceased on being struck, it is not hearsay. Exceptions to the rule are made in respect to some forms of tradition as to facts of family history, and boundaries, and dying declarations (which see, under declaration).

In some cases (as in proof of any general customs, or matters of common tradition or repute), the courts admit of hearsay evidence, or an account of what persons deceased have declared in their life-time.
Blackstone, Com., III. xxiii.

hearse[1] (hėrs), n. [As a historical term, referring to obsolete senses, and as a term of fortification (< F. herse), spelled herse (see herse[1]); early mod. E. only herse, < ME. herse, hers, herce, a frame for lights in a church service or at a funeral, a funeral pageant, a bier, a pall, also a dead body (the sense of 'carriage for conveying the dead' being more modern), the frame being so called from its likeness to a harrow, < OF. herce, a harrow, also a grated portcullis (ML. hercia, hersia), F. herse, a harrow, a portcullis (herse[1], 1), triangular candlestick, = It. erpice, a harrow, < L. hirpex (hirpic-), also spelled irpex, a harrow: a rustic word, perhaps a corruption of Gr. ἅρπαξ, a kind of grappling-iron (also a rake?), akin to ἁρπάγη, a rake: see Harpax.] 1†. A canopy, usually of openwork or trellis, set over a bier, or more rarely over a permanent tomb, and used especially to support candles which were lighted at times of ceremony. A medieval iron hearse, said to be unique, stands in the aisle of Tanfield church, Durham, England, over a tomb of the Marmion family.

In the Vestrye ther ys an herse that stonde full of Chalys . . . wher in ys closyd many grett Reliquies.
Torkington, Diarie of Eng. Travell, p. 9.

2. A bier; a bier with a coffin.

Set down your honourable load,
If honour may be shrouded in a hearse.
Shak., Rich. III., i. 2.

Hugh Bishop of Lincoln lying very sick, he not only went to visit him; but being dead, was one of the three Kings . . . that carried his Herse upon their Shoulders.
Baker, Chronicles, p. 74.

Decked with flowers, a simple hearse
To the churchyard forth they bear.
Longfellow, Blind Girl of Castèl-Cuillè, iii.

3. A carriage for conveying a dead person to the grave. The usual modern form has an oblong-roofed body, often with glass sides, and a door at the back for the insertion of the coffin.

4†. A temporary monument erected over a grave. —5†. A dirge or threnody, or a solemn recital or chant.

For the faire Damzel from the holy herse
Her love-sicke hart to other thoughts did steale.
Spenser, F. Q., III. ii. 48.

6. In her., a charge resembling a portcullis or a harrow.

hearse[1] (hėrs), v. t.; pret. and pp. hearsed, ppr. hearsing. [< hearse[1], n.] To put on or in a hearse.

Would she were hearsed at my foot, and the ducats in her coffin. Shak., M. of V., iii. 1.

O, answer me.
Let me not burst in ignorance! but tell,
Why thy canoniz'd bones, hearsed in death,
Have burst their cerements! Shak., Hamlet, i. 4.

hearse[2] (hėrs), a. A Scotch form of hoarse.

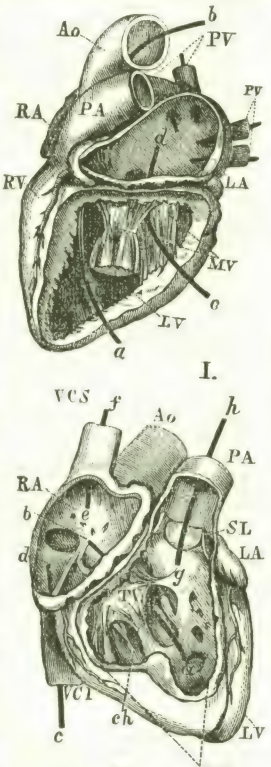
hearse-cloth (hėrs'klôth), n. [< ME. herse-cloth, < herse, hearse, + cloth.] A pall; a cloth to cover a corpse when laid upon a bier.

The grave, meanwhile, was shrouded with a funeral pall or hearse-cloth; and wax tapers, more or less in number, were set lighted all about it.
Rock, Church of our Fathers, III. i. 100.

hearse-like (hėrs'līk), a. Suitable to a hearse, and hence to a funeral.



If you listen to David's harp, you shall hear as many hearse-like airs as carols. Bacon, Adversity (ed. 1887).

heart (härt), n. [Early mod. E. also hart, harte; < ME. hart, harte, herte, < AS. heorte (gen. heortan), f., = OS. herta = OFries. herte, hirte = OD. herte, hert, D. hart = MLG. herte, LG. hert = OHG. herza, MHG. herze, G. herz (gen. herzens), neut., = Icel. hjarta = Sw. hjerta = Dan. hjerte = Goth. hairtō (gen. hairtōns), f., = Ir. cridhe = Gael. cridhe, cri, heart, = W. craidd, center, = Corn. kreiz = Bret. kreizen = L. cor (cord-), neut., = Gr. καρδία, also κραδία, f., also κῆρ, neut., = OBulg. srŭdĭtse, Bulg. srŭdtse = Slov. E. cardiac, cardialgia, etc., pericardium, etc.] 1. The principal organ of the circulation of the blood in man and other animals; the physiological center of the blood-vascular system. It is a hollow muscular or otherwise contractile organ which receives blood in its interior, and by contractions or pulsations drives it out again, and thus keeps up the circulation of this fluid. In its simplest form, as in the early embryo of a vertebrate and in many invertebrate animals, it is simply an expanded part or expansion in the course of a blood-vessel, capable of beating, pulsating, or alternately dilating and contracting, and so acting upon the contained fluid mechanically. (See cuts under Astacidæ and Balanoglossus.) In the process of development one or both orifices of this bulb are furnished with a valve permitting the flow of blood in one direction and preventing it in the other; and the bulb is partly divided by a constriction across it, one of the resulting parts being specially devoted to the reception of blood, as from a vein, and its transmission only into the other part, which then by contraction urges it onward, as into an artery. This is the structure of the two-chambered or bilocular heart of the lower vertebrates, in which the receiving-chamber is the auricle, the distributing-chamber is the ventricle, and the communication between them is the auriculoventricular opening. In a more complex form the bilocular heart is partly divided into right and left halves by a constriction or partition which separates the single auricle into two, the result being the three-chambered or trilocular heart, in which one auricle, the right, receives venous blood from the body at large, the left auricle receives aërated or arterial blood from gills or lungs, and each auricle pours its blood through its own auriculoventricular orifice into a common and single ventricle, which then sends a current of mixed venous and arterial blood to all parts of the body. Such is the type of the reptilian heart; though the right and left auricles are in fact incompletely separated from each other, retaining an interauricular opening, which in the embryos of birds and mammals is known as the foramen ovale. Finally, the entire separation of the auricles, and complete division of a common ventricular cavity into a right and a left ventricle by an interventricular septum or partition, result in the perfectly four-chambered or quadrilocular heart of all adult vertebrates above reptiles. Here the right and left sides of the heart, each consisting of an auricle and a ventricle, are entirely separate, so that no mixture of venous and arterial currents is possible. (See circulation of the blood, under circulation.) The ventricles are larger and more muscular than the auricles, since the former have to drive the blood through the body, while the auricles have only to inject it into the ventricles. All the orifices of the heart are more or less completely guarded by sets of valves. The right auriculoventricular valves are called tricuspid; the left, mitral: in both cases from their form in the human heart, in which three membranous valves on the right side and two on the left are operated by delicate fibrous cords (the chordæ tendineæ) and certain muscular processes from the ventricular walls (the columnæ carneæ). The orifices of the aorta and of the pulmonary artery are alike guarded by three crescentic valves, called, from their shape, the semilunar valves. The orifices by which veins enter either auricle either are or are not provided with valves, in different cases, or in different animals. The contraction of the muscular walls of the heart as a whole, or of any one of its chambers, is the systole; the corresponding and alternating dilatation of its cavities, or any one of them, is the diastole; the two movements together complete a cardiac cycle. In vertebrates the heart is situated in the thorax, between the lungs, and enveloped in a serous membrane, the pericardium, which is generally a closed sac with one layer, the visceral or cardiac pericardium, or epicardium, investing the whole surface of the organ and the roots of the great vessels which spring from it, and the other, the parietal layer, reflected over the surface of adjacent structures. The primitive position of the heart is always median; but in the course of its development from the embryo it generally becomes tilted over to one side, the left, as is usual in the higher vertebrates, where the point or apex of the organ lies considerably to the left, and the whole organ becomes unsymmetrical both in its own shape and in its relative position. In general the form of the heart is conoidal, with the base (the auricles) upward or forward, and the apex (the ventricles) downward or backward and sinistral. In man the heart is about 5 inches long, 3½ inches in greatest width, and 2 inches in greatest depth; it weighs 10 or 12 ounces in the male, and 8 or 10 in the female. It lies obliquely in the chest, with its broad fixed base uppermost, a little backward and to the right; its free apex downward, forward, and to the left, so that its beating may be seen or felt at a point an inch or less to the inner side of, and about an inch and a half below, the left nipple, between the fifth and sixth ribs. All the cavities of the heart are lined with a thin smooth membrane, the endocardium, which also invests the valves and is directly continuous with the lining of all the vessels which enter or leave the heart. Its substance, the myocardium, is almost entirely muscular; the muscle is a peculiar striated one, of a deep-red color; its fibers are intricately disposed in two sets, auricular and ventricular, separated by fibrous rings which surround the auriculoventricular orifices. It is supplied with blood for its own nourishment by the right and left coronary arteries, the first branches of the aorta; they are accompanied by cardiac veins. Its nerves are derived from the cardiac plexuses, formed by the pneumogastric and sympathetic nerves. Its action is involuntary. In all other mammals, and in birds, the heart is substantially the same as in man, with differences in relative size, in shape, and in the detail of its openings and valves; but in the acranial vertebrates, the lancelets, it is rudimentary. See also cuts under circulation, embryo, lung, and thorax.

Human Heart Dissected.

I. Left side, left auricle and ventricle laid open: LA, left auricle; LV, left ventricle; ab, a style passed through left ventricle into aorta, Ao; cd, style passed from left ventricle into left auricle, through left auriculoventricular opening, guarded by MV, the mitral valve; PV, PV, four pulmonary veins entering left auricle from the lungs; PA, pulmonary artery issuing from right ventricle, not opened, RV; RA, right auricle, scarcely seen. II. Right side, right auricle and ventricle laid open: VCS, superior vena cava; VCI, inferior vena cava, these both entering right auricle, as shown by styles fe, cd; RV, right ventricle, with PA, pulmonary artery, issuing from RV in course of the style gh, guarded by SL, the semilunar valves, at base of the artery; ab, style passed from RV into RA, through right auriculoventricular opening, guarded by TV, tricuspid valve; LA, LV, left auricle and left ventricle, scarcely seen; Ao, aorta.

Why do I yield to that suggestion
Whose horrid image doth unfix my hair,
And make my seated heart knock at my ribs,
Against the use of nature? Shak., Macbeth, i. 3.

2. The human heart or breast considered as the seat of all or of some of the mental faculties; hence, in common figurative use, these faculties themselves. (a) The emotions and affections, especially moral capacity or disposition, as for love or hatred, benevolence or malevolence, pity or scorn, courage or fear, faith or distrust, etc.

Men clepen it Mount Joye; for it zevethe joye to Pilgrymes hertes, be cause that there men seen first Jerusalem. Mandeville, Travels, p. 94.

The whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint. Isa. i. 5.

All offences, my lord, come from the heart; never came any from mine that might offend your majesty. Shak., Hen. V., iv. 8.

Kind hearts are more than coronets,
And simple faith than Norman blood.
Tennyson, Lady Clara Vere de Vere.

(b) The intellectual faculties; especially, inmost or most private thought; innermost opinions or convictions; genuine or intense desire or sentiment: as, she despised him in her heart; the heart of a man is unsearchable; the devices of the heart; to set one's heart upon something.

Merlin thought wele in his herte that so sholde it not go. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 609.

What his heart thinks his tongue speaks.
Shak., Much Ado, iii. 2.

(c) Good feeling; love; kindness; sensibility: as, she is all heart; he is all head and no heart; to gain one's heart; to give the heart to God.

Miss Carolina Wilhelmina Amelia Skeggs has my warm heart. Goldsmith, Vicar, xii.

That vivacious versatility
Which many people take for want of heart.
Byron, Don Juan, xvi. 97.

Evil is wrought by want of thought,
As well as want of heart.
Hood, The Lady's Dream.

(d) Courage; spirit; determination; firmness of will; capacity for perseverance or endurance: as, to take heart; his heart failed him.

ffor no man of lowe berthe durst not vndirtake no soche dedes, but yef it come of high herte.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 222.

Jock o' the Side (Child's Ballads, VI. 85).

"Sir," said the least, "I am almost beat out of heart."
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, ii., The Hill Difficulty.

Being so clouded with his grief and love,
Small heart was his after the Holy Quest.
Tennyson, Holy Grail.

(e) The breast, as covering the heart, considered as the seat of affection.

Then let me hold thee to my heart,
And ev'ry care resign.
Goldsmith, Hermit, l. 39.

Round my true heart thine arms entwine.
Tennyson, Miller's Daughter.

3. The inner part of anything; the middle or center: as, the heart of a country or a town.

For it is the Herte and the myddes of all the World.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 2.

A goodly apple rotten at the heart.
Shak., M. of V., i. 3.

Ye mr durst not put to sea, till he saw his men begine to recover, and ye hart of winter over.
Bradford, Plymouth Plantation, p. 100.

The year 1740, still grim with cold into the heart of summer, bids fair to have a late poor harvest.
Carlyle, Frederick the Great, III. 7.

4. The chief, vital, or most essential part; the vigorous or efficacious part; the core.

The very heart of kindness. Shak., T. of A., i. 1.

Veracity is the heart of morality. Huxley, Universities.

5. A person, especially a brave or affectionate person: used as a term of encouragement, praise, or endearment.

Ah, dear heart, that I were now but one half hour with you. J. Bradford, Letters (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 110.

Cheerly, my hearts. Shak., R. and J., i. 5.

6. Strength; power of producing; vigor; fertility: as, to keep the land in heart. [Obsolescent.]

That the spent earth may gather heart again. Dryden.

Care must be taken not to plough ground out of heart, because if 'tis in heart, it may be improved by marl again. Mortimer.

7. Something that has the shape or form of a heart; especially, a roundish or an oval figure or object having an obtuse point at one end and a corresponding indentation or depression at the other, regarded as representing the figure of a heart; especially, such a figure on a playing-card.

"This token, which I have worn so long," said Faith, laying her tremulous finger on the Heart, "is the assurance that you may." Hawthorne.

8. One of a suit of playing-cards marked with such a figure.

Clubs, Diamonds, Hearts, in wild disorder seen,
With throngs promiscuous strow the level green.
Pope, R. of the L., iii. 79.

9. pl. A game of cards played with the full pack by four persons. There are no partners and no trump. The object of the players is to avoid taking in any hearts in the tricks that they win. At the end of the hand each player must pay into the pool a counter for every heart he has taken in, and the player who has taken no hearts wins it all. If all have taken some hearts, the pool remains until the next hand.

10. Naut., a block of hard wood in the shape of a heart for the lanyards of stays to reeve through.—11. In bot., the core of a tree; the solid central part without sap or albumen. See heart-wood.—At heart, in real character or disposition; at bottom; substantially; really: as, he is good at heart.

Thackeray, Vanity Fair, li.

To wear one's heart upon one's sleeve, to expose one's disposition, feelings, or intentions to every one.

'Tis not long after
But I will wear my heart upon my sleeve
For daws to peck at. Shak., Othello, i. 1.

heart (härt), v. [< ME. herten; < heart, n. Cf. hearten. Cf. courage, v., encourage, ult. < L. cor = E. heart.] I. trans. 1. To give heart to; encourage; hearten. [Obsolescent.]

Thoche tarying ouer tyme turnys hom [them] to ioy,
And hertis hom highly to hold [consider] you for faint.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 4597.

I will be treble-sinew'd, hearted, breathed,
And fight maliciously. Shak., A. and C., iii. 11.

2. In masonry, to build, as the interior of a rubble wall, solidly with stone and mortar. Imp. Dict.

II. intrans. To form a close, compact head, as a plant; especially, to have the central part of the head close and compact: as, some varieties of cabbage heart well.

heartache (härt'āk), n. [ME. not found; cf. AS. heort-ece, hiorot-ece, in lit. sense, < heorte, heart, + ece, pain, ache.] 1. Pain in or of the heart. [Rare.]—2. Sorrow; anguish of the mind.

By a sleepe, to say we end
The Heart-ake, and the thousand Naturall shockes
That Flesh is heyre too.
Shak., Hamlet (folio 1623), ii. 2.

If ever I felt the full force of an honest heart-ache, it was the moment I saw her.
Sterne, Tristram Shandy, ix. 24.

heart-beat (härt'bēt), n. 1. A pulsation of the heart, including one complete systole and diastole, corresponding to that motion in the arteries called the pulse.

The heart-beats became more rapid.
Medical News, LII. 267.

Hence—2. Figuratively, a thought; an emotion, especially one that is tender or sad; a pang; a throb or throe of feeling.

All the land was full of people, . . .
Speaking many tongues, yet feeling
But one heart-beat in their bosoms.
Longfellow, Hiawatha, xxi.

> To be in love, where scorn is bought with groans, > Coy looks with heart-sore sighs. Shak., T. G. of V., i. 1.

II.† n. Soreness of the heart; grief.

> His onely hart-sore and his onely foe.
> Spenser, F. Q., II. i. 2.

heart-spoon (härt'spön), n. [< ME. hertespon; < heart + spoon.] 1†. The depression in the breast-bone; also, the breast-bone.

> Ther shyveren shaftes upon sheeldes thikke;
> He feeleth thurgh the herte-spoon the prikke.
> Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 1748.
> I will whet my dagger on his heart-spone that refuses to pledge me! Scott, Kenilworth, xx.

2. The navel. [Prov. Eng.]

heart-steel (härt'stēl), n. Same as heart-shell.

heart-stirring (härt'stėr″ing), a. Arousing or moving the heart; inspiriting; exhilarating.

heartstrings (härt'stringz), n. pl. Nerves or tendons supposed to brace and sustain the heart; hence, strongest affections; most intense feelings of any kind.

> If I do prove her haggard,
> Though that her jesses were my dear heart-strings,
> I'd whistle her off, and let her down the wind.
> Shak., Othello, iii. 3.
> So may thy heart-strings hold thy heart, as thou
> This more than heart of mine.
> J. Beaumont, Psyche, ii. 77.

To break the heartstrings of. See break.

heart-struck (härt'struk), a. 1. Struck to the heart; shocked with fear or grief; dismayed.

> Adam at the news
> Heart-struck, with chilling gripe of sorrow stood.
> Milton, P. L., xi. 264.

2. Fixed in the heart; ineradicable.

> Kent. But who is with him?
> Gent. None but the fool; who labours to out-jest
> His heart-struck injuries. Shak., Lear, iii. 1.

heart-swelling (härt'swel″ing), a. Causing the heart to swell; rankling in the heart.

> Through proud ambition and heart-swelling hate.
> Spenser.

heart-trefoil (härt'trē″foil), n. The spotted medic, Medicago Arabica: so called both from its obcordate leaflets and from the somewhat heart-shaped purple or flesh-colored spot on each leaflet. Also called heart-clover, heart-leaf.

heart-urchin (härt'ėr″chin), n. A heart-shaped sea-urchin; any spatangoid. Also called mermaid's-head.

heart-wheel (härt'hwēl), n. Same as heart-cam.

heart-whole (härt'hōl), a. 1. Not in love, or not deeply affected by that passion.

> Cupid hath clapped him o' the shoulder; but I'll warrant him heart-whole. Shak., As you Like it, iv. 1.

2. Having unbroken spirits or good courage. [Prov. Eng.]

> Ay, he is weak; but yet he's heart-whole.
> Fletcher, Humorous Lieutenant, iii. 5.

★ heart-wood (härt'wůd), n. The central wood in the trunk of an exogenous tree; duramen.

> The innermost layers of heart-wood contain 1½ per cent. of pitch. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXVIII. 680.

hearty (här'ti), a. and n. [Early mod. E. harty; < ME. herty, accom. of older ME. hertly, hertely, heartly: see heartly, a.] I. a. 1. Influenced by or proceeding from the heart; heartfelt; sincere; zealous: as, to be hearty in support of a project; a hearty welcome; a hearty laugh.

> I shal aske theym forgevnes in as herty wyse as I can.
> English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 415.
> David was a "man after God's own heart," so termed because his affection was hearty towards God.
> Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v. 1.
>
> Our salutations were very hearty on both sides.
> Addison, Spectator, No. 269.

2. Full of health; exhibiting strength; sound; strong; healthy: as, a hearty man.

> Oak, and the like true hearty timber, being strong in all positions, may be better trusted in cross and transverse work. Sir H. Wotton, Elem. of Architecture.
> I'm devilish glad to see you, my lad; why, my prince of charioteers, you look as hearty! Sheridan, The Rivals, i. 1.
>
> "How is Bessie? You are married to Bessie?" "Yes, miss; my wife is very hearty, thank you."
> Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xxi.

3. Adapted for, affording, using, or requiring strong or abundant nourishment: as, hearty food; a hearty dinner; a hearty eater or appetite.

> The journey and the sermon enabled them . . . to do ample justice to Rachel's cold fowl, ham, pasty, and cake; and again and again she pressed them to be hearty.
> Glenfergus, I. 335. (Jamieson.)
>
> So Philomedé . . . stoops at once,
> And makes her hearty meal upon a dunce.
> Pope, Moral Essays, ii. 86.

4†. Bold; courageous.

> Withoutyn the helpe and the hondes of herty Achilles.
> Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 8854.
> Esay, that hearty prophet, confirmeth the same.
> Latimer, Works (Parker Soc.), I. 356.

As the old Roman Soldiers were forbidden marriage while they received pay, lest their domestick interests should abate their courage, so the Celibate of the Clergy was strictly enjoyned to make them more usefull and hearty for this design. Stillingfleet, Sermons, II. ii.

=Syn. 1. Hearty, Cordial, Sincere; real, unfeigned, unaffected, heartfelt, earnest, ardent, eager. Hearty means having the heart in a thing, warmly interested in favor of something, and acting so as to show this feeling; proceeding straight from the heart, and manifested outwardly. Cordial is rather applied to feelings cherished or felt in the heart, heartfelt, or the outward expression of such feelings: as, cordial love; cordial hatred; cordial desires. Sincere means devoid of deceit or pretense, implying that the sentiments and the outward expression of them are in consonance.

> How many a message would he send,
> With hearty prayers that I should mend. Swift.
>
> He, . . . with looks of cordial love, > Hung over her enamour'd. Milton, P. L., v. 12.
>
> Weak persons cannot be sincere.
> La Rochefoucauld (trans.).

2. Active, vigorous, robust, hale.

II. n. A seaman's familiar form of address: as, come here, my hearties.

heart-yarn (härt'yärn), n. A soft yarn in the center of a rope.

hearty-hale† (här'ti-hāl), a. Good for the heart.

> Sound Savorie, and Bazil hartie-hale.
> Spenser, Muiopotmos, l. 198.

★ heat (hēt), n. [< ME. heete, hete, < AS. hǣtu, hǣto, also hǣte (= OS. hēt = OFries. hēte = OHG. heizi = Sw. heta = Dan. hede), heat, < hāt, hot: see hot[1]. The D. LG. hitte = OHG. hizza, MHG. G. hitze = Icel. hiti, heat, and Goth. heitō, fever, are from the same ult. root.] 1. A sensation of the kind produced by close proximity to fire. The sensation of heat is commonly described as opposite in character to that of cold; but, strictly considered, this opposition lies not so much in these sensations themselves as in their causes and associations. Like cold, the sensation of heat probably resides only in special points of the skin, the points sensitive to heat being different in location from those which are sensitive to cold.

2. That condition of a material body which is capable of producing the sensation of heat; in physics, the corresponding specific form of energy, consisting in an agitation of the molecules of matter, and measured by the total kinetic energy of such agitation. See energy, 7.

Heat was formerly believed to be caused by an indestructible material fluid, called caloric. It is now known to be not a substance, but the energy of molecular motion, consisting, in the case of a gas, of nearly uniform rectilinear motions, with sudden changes of direction and velocity when the molecules come near enough to one another; in the case of a liquid, of irregular wanderings of its molecules; and in the case of a solid, of orbital or oscillatory motions. This motion entirely ceases only at the absolute zero point. The effects of absorbed heat upon a body are: (1) Increase of temperature—that is, increase of the energy of motion of the molecules. To a limited extent this can be measured by the senses, but more accurately by thermometers (see thermometer), the thermopile, etc. (2) Change of volume (see expansion). This is usually an increase, but in certain cases, as that of water between 0° and 4° C., heat causes diminution of volume. (3) Change of state, as of a solid to a liquid (see fusion and liquefaction), or of a liquid to a gas (see vaporization). Thus, to transform ice at 0° C. into water (melt it), or water at 100° C. into vapor or steam, a large amount of heat is required. This heat disappears as sensible heat, and is said to become latent. Latent heat, however, is a misleading term, for it is not true that heat is latent as such, but only that so much heat-energy has been expended in changing the position of the molecules and overcoming their mutual attractions. If the process is reversed, this latent heat becomes sensible, as, for example, when steam is condensed in a steam-radiator. Heat also produces electrical effects, such as changes in electrical conductivity and of the dielectric constant of bodies; magnetic effects, such as changes in the permeability of iron and in the strength of magnets; optical effects, as in thermoluminescence; and numerous chemical effects (see electricity). Heat may be transmitted from one place to another—(1) By convection (see convection), when the hot body is itself moved, as in heating by hot air conveyed in flues, or by hot water carried in pipes. (2) By conduction (see conduction), where the heat travels slowly through the mass of the body, as when one end of an iron bar is thrust into the fire and the other end gradually becomes heated. In this case it is the molecular motion of the iron which is propagated. (3) By radiation (see radiation). When heat was believed to be a substance, the radiation of heat was explained, in a manner analogous to the abandoned emission theory of light (see light), as the actual transfer of the heat-fluid itself; now, however, radiant heat is known to be the energy of heat transferred to the luminiferous ether (see ether[1]), which fills all space and also pervades all bodies. The hot body sets the ether-particles in vibration, and this vibratory motion, in the form of waves, travels in all directions and with a velocity of about 186,000 miles per second. If these waves impinge upon a body, part of their energy may be absorbed, or, in other words, the molecules of the body may themselves be set in motion by the ether-waves. There is no essential difference between radiant heat and light, both being forms of radiant energy (see energy), the ether-waves differing intrinsically among themselves in wave-length only, and thus producing different effects, heating, luminous, and chemical, in the bodies upon which they impinge, according to the nature of these bodies. The rays whose heating effect is generally the greatest are of greater wave-length than those which most affect the eye (light-rays), and have longer periods of vibration. Like light-rays, they may be reflected, refracted, diffracted, and polarized. The quantity of heat of a body, or the amount of heat-energy which a body gains or loses in passing through a given range of temperature, is measured in thermal units (see heat-unit)—that is, by the quantity of water which it would raise through 1° C. (or 1° F.); it is given by the product of its weight into the number expressing the range in temperature multiplied by the specific heat. In ordinary speech heat and temperature are not distinguished. See temperature.

> Heat is a very brisk agitation of the insensible parts of the object, which produces in us that sensation from whence we denominate the object hot: so what in our sensation is heat, in the object is nothing but motion.
> Locke, Elem. of Nat. Phil., xi.
> Since heat can be produced, it cannot be a substance; and since whenever mechanical energy is lost by friction there is a production of heat, . . . we conclude that heat is a form of energy.
> Clerk Maxwell, Matter and Motion, xciii.
>
> In the strictest modern scientific language . . . the word heat is used to denote something communicable from one body or piece of matter to another.
> Sir William Thomson, Encyc. Brit., XI. 555.

3. In ordinary use, a sensibly high temperature, as the warmth of the sun, or of the body.

> Men of Nubye ben Cristene: but thei ben blake as the Mowres, for grete Hete of the Sonne.
> Mandeville, Travels, p. 46.
>
> Thei were sette vnder the hawethorn in the shadowe by the broke, and let theire horse pasture down the medowes while the heete was so grete, for it was a-boute mydday. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 522.
>
> When she walketh apace for her pleasure, or to catch her a heate in the colde mornings.
> Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 248.

4. A heating, as of a piece of iron to be wrought by a blacksmith, or of a mass of metal to be melted in a furnace; an exposure to intense heat.

A heat, it may be noted, is the time occupied between charging the pig-iron and drawing the last ball of malleable iron from the furnace, and is generally of about 1½ hour in duration.
W. H. Greenwood, Steel and Iron, p. 266.

The forging of a tool should be formed in as few heats as possible, for steel deteriorates by repeated heating.
J. Rose, Practical Machinist, p. 220.

A field bakery of this kind can deliver 17,928 loaves of bread for nine heats, each loaf forming two rations.
Sci. Amer., N. S., LVIII. 246.

Hence—5. Violent action; high activity; intense and uninterrupted effort: as, to do a thing at a heat.

With many a cruel hete
Gan Troylus upon his helm to bete.
Chaucer, Troilus, v. 1761.

ffell was the fight, foynyng of speires,
Miche harme, in that hete, happit to falle.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 10287.

Dryden, I suspect, was not much given to correction, and indeed one of the great charms of his best writing is that everything seems struck off at a heat, as by a superior man in the best mood of his talk.
Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 64.

Especially—(a) A single course in a horse-race or other contest.

On the ninth of October next will be run for upon Coleshill Heath, in Warwickshire, a plate of six guineas value, 3 heats, by any horse, mare, or gelding, that hath not won above the value of 5£.
Adv. quoted in Spectator, No. 173.

As for "Manfred," the two first acts are the best; the third so so; but I was blown with the first and second heats.
Byron, To Murray.

(b) A division of a race or contest when the contestants are too numerous to run at once, the race being finally decided by the winners (or winners and seconds, or others) of each division running a final race or heat.

6. Indication of high temperature, as the condition or color of the body or part of the body; redness; high color; flush.

It has raised animosities in their hearts, and heats in their faces.
Addison.

A sudden flush of wrathful heat
Fired all the pale face of the Queen.
Tennyson, Guinevere.

7. Vehemence; rage; violence; excitement; animation; fervency; ardor; zeal: as, the heat of battle or of argument; the heat of passion or of eloquence.

'Tis strange
That you should deal so peevishly: beshrew you,
You have put me in a heat.
Fletcher, Humorous Lieutenant, iii. 2.

These Indians of Guam did speak of her [an Acapulco ship] being in sight of the Island while we lay there, which put our Men in a great heat to go out after her.
Dampier, Voyages, I. 303.

8. Sexual desire or excitement in animals, especially in the female, corresponding to rut in the male; the period or duration of such excitement: as, to be in heat.—Absorption of heat. See absorption.—Animal heat. See animal.—Atomic or molecular heats of bodies. See atomic.—Black heat, the condition of metal heated, but not enough to affect its color.—Black-red heat, the condition of metal heated so as to begin to be luminous by daylight.—Blood-red heat. See blood-red.—Bottom heat, heat at or rising from the bottom; specifically, in hort., heat communicated beneath the roots of plants, as by fermenting and decomposing substances placed under them, or by running flues or pipes under them.—Capacity for heat. See capacity.—Dark heat. See def. 2 and dark[1].—Dead heat, in racing, a heat in which the contestants cross the line at exactly the same time, neither one winning.—Diffusion of heat. See diffusion.—Distribution of heat. See distribution.—Evection of heat. See evection.—Heat of combination, the quantity of heat which is evolved or absorbed by the chemical combination of two or more substances, its value being computed usually for the case where such weights of the substances as are represented by their chemical formulas unite with each other.—Latent heat. See def. 2.—Mechanical or dynamic equivalent of heat. See equivalent.—Prickly heat, an eruption of minute papules attended with a prickly itching; lichen tropicus; loosely, any papular eruption.—Red heat, white heat. (a) States of metals and, to a limited extent, of some non-metallic substances, as carbon, at high but not definitely ascertained temperatures, in which they radiate a reddish or (when heated still higher) a much whiter light. These are especially noticeable in practice in the case of iron, which at a "full red heat" becomes thoroughly malleable, and at a white heat assumes a more or less pasty condition (which continues through a large range of temperature), and can be welded. Hence—(b) A state of strong and one of overpowering feeling; states of strong and of most intense passion, eagerness, or other emotion.—Sensible heat. See def. 2.—Specific heat, the number of heat-units required to raise the unit of mass of a given substance through 1° of temperature. For solids and liquids water is taken as the standard—that is, its specific heat is unity. For gases either water or air is taken. The specific heat measures the heat-capacity of different bodies, or the amount of heat they absorb or give out in passing through a certain range of temperature. (See calorimetry.) The product of the specific heats of the different elements into their atomic weights is found to be nearly a constant quantity (about 6); this product is called the atomic heat.

The Specific Heat of a body is the ratio of the quantity of heat required to raise that body one degree to the quantity required to raise an equal weight of water one degree.
Clerk Maxwell, Heat, p. 66.

The heat of the day, the period of highest temperature of the day; the part of the day when the temperature is oppressive.—Welding heat, in metal., that heat at which iron begins to burn with vivid sparks.—White heat. See red heat, above.

See heat, n., 2.

And wher the watir was hett to wassh the ffete of Cristis Discipulis.
Torkington, Diarie of Eng. Travell, p. 36.

Arth. Lo, by my troth, the instrument is cold,
And would not harm me.
Hub. I can heat it, boy.
Shak., K. John, iv. 1.

Nebuchadnezzar . . . commanded that they should heat the furnace seven times more than it was wont to be heat.
Dan. iii. 19 (ed. 1611).

2. To make feverish; stimulate; excite: as, to heat the blood.

2 Lord. Thou art going to Lord Timon's feast.
Apem. Ay; to see meat fill knaves, and wine heat fools.
Shak., T. of A., i. 1.

Where bright Sol, that heat
Their bloods, doth never rise or set.
B. Jonson, Masque of Blackness.

3. To warm with emotion, passion, or desire; rouse into action; animate; encourage.

That on me hette, that othir dede me colde.
Chaucer, Parliament of Fowls, l. 145.

A noble emulation heats your breast.
Dryden.

Milton had heated his imagination with the Fight of the Gods in Homer, before he entered upon this Engagement of the Angels.
Addison, Spectator, No. 333.

4†. To run a heat over, as in a race.

You may ride us,
With one soft kiss, a thousand furlongs, ere
With spur we heat an acre.
Shak., W. T., i. 2.

II. intrans. To grow warm or hot; come to a heated condition, from the effect either of something external or of chemical action, as in fermentation or decomposition.

The first machines constructed heated too much.
S. P. Thompson, Dynamo-Elect. Mach., p. 113.

heat-apoplexy (hēt′ap″o̤-plek-si), n. Sunstroke.

heat-economizer (hēt′o̤-kon″o̤-mī-zėr), n. A device by which the steam in a steam-engine or the hot air in an air-engine is cooled, causing it to impart its heat to a metallic body, which stores up the heat and imparts it in turn to the next charge of steam or air, thus materially reducing the waste of heat; a regenerator.

heat-engine (hēt′en″jin), n. An engine which ★transforms heat into mechanical work.

heater (hē′tėr), n. One who or that which heats.

Camphire swallowed is, in the dose of a very few grains, a great heater of the blood.
Boyle, Works, V. 104.

Specifically—(a) A furnace, stove, or other device for heating, drying, or warming buildings, rooms, drying-houses, fruit-evaporators, or parts of machines, as the calendering-rolls of a paper-mill. (b) A small mass of cast-iron designed to be heated and then placed in a hollow flat-iron or in a coffee-pot, to heat the iron or keep the coffee hot. (c) In a sugar-making plant, a pan used for the first heating of the cane-juice or syrup; a heating-pan.

heater-car (hē′tėr-kär), n. A railroad-car constructed for the transportation in winter of fruits, vegetables, and other perishable products. Car-Builder's Dict.

heater-plate (hē′tėr-plāt), n. In an oil-lamp exposed to cold, a device to conduct the heat of the flame down to the oil-reservoir, in order to keep the oil from congealing. Car-Builder's Dict.

heater-shaped (hē′tėr-shāpt), a. Shaped like the heater of a smoothing-iron; triangular; having one of the sides straight and the two others, which are equal and the counterparts of each other, curved. See heater (b).

The small heater-shaped shield. Encyc. Brit., XI. 692.

heat-factor (hēt′fak″tor), n. The thermodynamic function; the integral of the heat expended divided by the absolute temperature. See entropy.

heat-fever (hēt′fē″vėr), n. Fever (pyrexia) caused by too great exposure to heat; thermic fever (a form of sunstroke).

heat-focus (hēt′fō″kus), n. See focus.

heath (hēth), n. [< ME. hethe, heeth, heth, < ★AS. hǣth = OD. heyde = MLG. heide, hēde = OHG. heida, MHG. G. heide, a heath, also, as exclusively in D. heide, the plant so called, = Icel. heidr = Sw. hed = Dan. hede, a heath, = Goth. haithi, a heath, waste, = W. coed, a wood, = L. -cētum in bucetum, a pasture for cows (bos, a cow). The orig. sense is 'open, uncultivated land'; the plant is so named from growing on such land; cf. heather. Hence heathen, q. v.] 1. Open, uncultivated land; a desert tract of land; specifically, in Great Britain, an uncultivated tract of heathy or shrubby land, usually of a desolate character.

Some woods of oranges, and heaths of rosemary, will smell a great way in the sea.
Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 834.

Their stately growth, though bare,
Stands on the blasted heath.
Milton, P. L., i. 615.

O Caledonia! stern and wild,
Meet nurse for a poetic child!
Land of brown heath and shaggy wood.
Scott, L. of L. M., vi. 2.

Comes a vapour from the margin, blackening over heath and holt.
Tennyson, Locksley Hall.

2. A plant of the genus Erica, or, by extension, of the genus Calluna; any plant of the family Ericaceæ, called by Lindley heathworts. The species of Erica are widely distributed throughout Europe and the Mediterranean region, but are most abundant in South Africa, where they cover thousands of acres and constitute one of the principal forms of vegetation. The two best-known European species are E. cinerea, Scotch heather or fine-leafed heath, and E. Tetralix, the cross-leafed heath. (See cut under Ericaceæ.) The nearly allied genus Calluna, having only a single species, C. vulgaris, is more commonly called heather or ling. (See cut under Calluna.) In Great Britain heath or heather covers large tracts of waste land, and is used to thatch houses and to make brooms, and in some places for making beds. Sheep, goats, and cattle feed upon it, and bees extract a finely flavored honey from the flowers. The young shoots and flowers are said to have been formerly employed in the manufacture of beer. The species of southern Europe, Erica arborea, attains considerable size, and is called the tree-heath. From the wood of this species, and especially from that of another species of southern Europe, E. Mediterranea, are made most of the so-called brier-wood pipes, or brier tobacco-pipes. The moor-heaths belong to a section of the genus Erica called Gypsocallis by Salisbury and Don, who gave it generic rank. They are very beautiful plants, and inhabit moors and calcareous districts. The Cantabrian, Irish, or Saint Dabeoc's heath is a plant of a different genus of the heath family, Dabœcia Cantabrica (Vaccinium Cantabricum of Hudson, D. polifolia of Don). It is chiefly a native of Ireland, but is also found in western France, northern Spain, and the Azores. It is a dwarf, bushy, evergreen shrub, grows in dense tufts, and has racemes of purple flowers. It is also called Irish-whorts. The sea-heath, Frankenia lævis, is a low, heathlike shrub of the European coasts. See Frankenia.

3. One of several small butterflies of different genera. The large heath is Erinephile tithonus; the small, Cœnonympha pamphilus.

heath-bell (hēth′bel), n. The flower of the heath, especially of Erica Tetralix or E. cinerea. Also called heather-bell.

For heath-bell, with her purple bloom, Supplied the bonnet and the plume.
Scott, L. of the L., iii. 5.

heathberry (hēth′ber″i), n.; pl. heathberries (-iz). [ME. not found; AS. hǣthberige, bilberry (?), < hǣth, heath, + berige, berie, berry.] Same as crowberry.

heath-bird (hēth′bėrd), n. Same as heath-cock or heath-hen.

heath-clad (hēth′klad), a. Clothed or crowned with heath.

Sleeping on the heath-clad hill.
J. Cunningham, Day, A Pastoral.

heath-cock (hēth′kok), n. The male black grouse. See blackcock.—Black and spotted heath-cock. Same as Canada grouse (which see, under grouse).—Ruffed heath-cock. Same as ruffed grouse (which see, under grouse).

heath-corn (hēth′kôrn), n. The buckwheat, Fagopyrum Fagopyrum.

heathcup (hēth′kup), n. The plant Artanema fimbriatum, of the family Scrophulariaceæ, an erect herb with opposite leaves, native of Australia, and cultivated for its large fringed blue flowers, which are disposed in racemes at the ends of the branches.

heath-cypress (hēth′sī″pres), n. An alpine and subalpine species of club-moss, Lycopodium alpinum, found in suitable situations in Europe and North America: so called from its resembling a miniature cypress-tree, and growing on heathy ground.

heath-egger (hēth′eg″ėr), n. A bombycid moth, Lasiocampa callunæ.

heathen (hē′ᵺen or -ᵺhn), n. and a. [< ME. hethen, < AS. hǣthen, n. Neither in Christendome, nor yet in heathennest, None hath soe much gold as he.
Ballad of King Arthur (Child's Ballads, I. 234).

heathenry (hē′ᵺĕn-ri), n. [< heathen + -ry.] 1. Heathenish rites and practices; heathen systems of religion or morals; heathenism.

Are you so besotted with your philosophy, and your heathenry, and your laziness, and your contempt for God and man, that you will see your nation given up for a prey, and your wealth plundered by heathen dogs?
Kingsley, Hypatia, vi.

In most places, even in the heart of Meccah, I met with debris of heathenry, proscribed by Mohammed.
R. F. Burton, El-Medinah, p. 20.

2. The heathen; heathendom.

heathenship†, (hē′ᵺĕn-ship), n. [< heathen + -ship. Cf. MLG. heidenschop = OHG. heidinscaft, MHG. G. heidenschaft = Dan. hedenskab.] Heathenism.

But a higher importance attaches to a clause in the Northumbrian Priests' Laws, by which a person accused of the practice of any heathenship was bound to clear himself by the oath of compurgators, partly his kinsmen and partly native strangers. N. and Q., 7th ser., VI. 53.

heather (heᵺ′ėr), n. [Formerly also hether, hather, and (dial.) hadder; < heath, open country, + -er; equiv. to heath, used, without term., as the name of the plant.] 1. Heath: especially applied to Calluna vulgaris, the common heather. It differs from the other true heaths in possessing astringent properties, and is employed by both fullers and dyers. See cut under Calluna.

Heath is the generall or common name, whereof there is owne kind called hather, the other ling.
Norden, Surveiors Dialogue (1610).

They [Indian Brachmanni] lay upon the ground covered with skins, as the Redshanks doe on hadder, and dieted themselves sparingly. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 542.

Come o'er the heather, come round him gather.
Wha'll be King but Charlie?

Patches bright of bracken green,
And heather black, that waved so high,
It held the copse in rivalry.
Scott, L. of the L., v. 3.

2. The crowberry, Empetrum nigrum. [Rare.] —3. A tweed or similar fabric, usually 56 inches wide, woven of heather-wool, and presenting a color-effect like that of heather. Also called heather mixture.—Silver heather, a moss, Polytrichum commune. See Polytrichum.—To set the heather on fire, to kindle disturbance; bring smoldering disaffection to a blaze.

It's partly that whilk has set the heather on fire e'en now. Scott, Rob Roy, xxxv.

heather-ale†, (heᵺ′ėr-āl), n. A traditional drink said to have been brewed in North Britain from the bells of heather.

heather-bell (heᵺ′ėr-bel), n. Same as heath-bell.

'Tis sweet beneath the heather-bell
To live in autumn brown. Leyden, Keeldar.

heather-bleat, heather-bleater (heᵺ′ėr-blēt, -blē″tėr), n. [Sc. also (obs.) hetherblutter, hedderbluter; < heather (appar.) + bleat, bleater, in allusion to its cry. But the first element is an accom. of a different original, the word being variously otherwise manipulated as Sc. heron-bluter (as if involving heron), ern-bleater, earnbliter, yern-bliter, -bluter (as if involving *earn*3, eagle), E. dial. hammer-bleat (as if in allusion to hammering); the ME. forms not found; all ult. < AS. hæferblāᵺe, hæferblāta, early AS. (Kentish) hæbreblēte, once erroneously hæfenblæte, the name of a bird, glossing ML. bicoca and bugium (both words obscure: for bugium, see under fieldfare), lit. 'goat-bleater,' < AS. hæfer, a he-goat, buck (= L. caper: see *caper*1), + blātan, bleat: see bleat.] Same as ern-bleater.

heather-claw (heᵺ′ėr-klâ), n. A dew-claw.

heather-grass (heᵺ′ėr-gràs), n. A species of grass, Sieglingia decumbens, common throughout Europe, growing on spongy, wet, cold soils, and of little economic importance. Also called heath-grass.

heather-peeper (heᵺ′ėr-pē″pėr), n. The peet-weet or common sandpiper of Europe, Tringoides hypoleucus. [Local, Scotland.]

heather-wool (heᵺ′ėr-wůl), n. Wool or worsted yarn made for knitting and other fancy work, party-colored or mottled in various shades, and producing work of a mixed or speckled color thought to be like that of heather.

heathery1 (hē′ᵺėr-i), n.; pl. heatheries (-iz). [< heath + -ery.] A place where heaths grow; a house in which valuable heaths are cultivated.

heathery2 (heᵺ′ėr-i), a. Of, pertaining to, or resembling heather; abounding with heather; heathy.

The antler'd monarch of the waste
Sprang from his heathery couch in haste.
Scott, L. of the L., i. 2.

I found the house amid desolate heathery hills.
Emerson, English Traits, i.

heath-fowl (hēth′foul), n. The moor-fowl, Lagopus scoticus. Montagu.

heath-grass (hēth′gràs), n. Same as heather-grass.

heath-hen (hēth′hen), n. 1. The female heath-bird; the hen of the black grouse.

O'er the trackless waste
The heath-hen flutters, pious fraud! to lead
The hot pursuing spaniel far away.
Thomson, Spring, l. 700.

2. The eastern pinnated grouse, Tympanuchus cupido, now restricted to Martha's Vineyard and nearly extinct. [Rare or archaic.]

heath-honeysuckle (hēth′hun″i-suk-l), n. The name in Australia of a flowering shrub, Sirmuellera serrata, from the large amount of honey its flowers secrete.

heath-pea (hēth′pē), n. A tuber-bearing leguminous plant, Orobus tuberosus (Lathyrus macrorhizus). The tubers resemble peas, and are eaten boiled or baked. The plant is widely diffused throughout Europe. The name is said sometimes to be applied also to another vetch, Vicia sicula (Orobus atropurpureus).

heath-peat (hēth′pēt), n. Peat from the surface-soil of places abounding in heather.

heath-poult (hēth′pōlt), n. The pullet or young of the heath-bird.

heath-pout (hēth′pout), n. Same as heath-poult.

heath-snail (hēth′snāl), n. A kind of snail common in Great Britain, Helix ericetorum, ranging to the north of Scotland.

heath-throstle (hēth′thros″l), n. The ring-ouzel, Turdus torquatus. [Local, Eng.]

heathwort (hēth′wėrt), n. In Lindley's system, any plant of the heath family, Ericaceæ: used chiefly in the plural. See cut under Ericaceæ.

heathy (hē′thi), a. [< heath + *-y*1.] Of, pertaining to, or characteristic of heath; covered or abounding with heath; adapted to the growth of heath: as, heathy land.

From its hill of heathy brown
The muirland streamlet hastens down.
J. Baillie.

O happy pleasure! here to dwell
Beside thee in some heathy dell.
Wordsworth, To a Highland Girl.

heating (hē′ting), p. a. Promoting warmth or heat; having the quality of imparting heat; stimulating: as, a heating medicine or diet.

heating-back (hē′ting-bak), n. A chamber at the back of a forge in which the air-blast is heated.

heatingly (hē′ting-li), adv. In a heating manner; so as to make or become hot or heated.

heating-pan (hē′ting-pan), n. 1. A pan for heating flaxseed and other seed from which oil is expressed.—2. The first pan in which sugar-cane juice or sugar-maple sap is heated, preparatory to dipping or evaporating.

heating-surface (hē′ting-sėr″fās), n. Same as fire-surface.

heating-tube (hē′ting-tūb), n. A water-tube connecting at each end with a water-space, and directly exposed to the fire or hot gases.

heatless (hēt′les), a. [< heat + -less.] Destitute of heat; cold.

> My blood lost, and limbs stiff; my embraces > Like the cold stubborn bark, hoarie, and heatless.
> Fletcher, Mad Lover, iii.
> Where Mars is seen his ruddy rays to throw > Thro' heatless skies, that round him seem to glow.
> Hughes, Ecstasy, st. 8.

heat-potential (hēt′pō-ten″shal), n. The work performed by the disappearance of heat.

heat-regulator (hēt′reg″ū-lā-tor), n. A thermostat combined with some device for controlling the draft of a furnace and regulating the fire.

heat-spectrum (hēt′spek″trum), n. A spectrum considered not with reference to its effect upon the eye, but with reference to its intrinsic energy or heating power. Wherever there is a visible spectrum there is a heat-spectrum, and these two are really one and the same: only, when we speak of the visible spectrum we mean that part of the whole spectrum which affects the eye, considering each part to have an intensity proportional to that effect; while the heat-spectrum is the real spectrum in its whole extent, including both the luminous and non-luminous rays, its intensity being everywhere proportional to its heating power.

heat-spot (hēt′spot), n. 1. A freckle.—2. A spot on the surface of the body at which the sensation of heat can be produced.

> Recent researches . . . demonstrate the fact that the relative number and arrangement of heat-spots and cold-spots is different for different areas of the skin.
> ★ G. T. Ladd, Physiol. Psychology, p. 413.

heat-unit (hēt′ū″nit), n. The unit quantity of heat; the amount of heat required to raise 1 pound of water (also 1 kilogram, or 1 gram: see calory) through 1 degree of temperature. Thus, 1 pound of coal, upon combustion, yields about 13,500 heat-units—that is, heat enough to raise 13,500 pounds of water through 1° F.

> Heat-units per hour abstracted in ice-making.
> Sci. Amer. Supp., p. 8780.

heaume† (hōm), n. [OF., a helm: see *helm*2.] In medieval armor, a helm or helmet; specifically, a large helmet worn during the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, usually over an inner defense, such as the coif of mail, or the basinet. It rested upon the shoulders, the head in some cases being free to move within it, and was worn only in battle. Its great weight led to the adoption of the armet, which adapted itself to the form of the head, and allowed of movement in all directions.

a, Heaume with ailettes, end of 13th century; b, Heaume, end of 14th century. (From Viollet-le-Duc's "Dict. du Mobilier français.") heautomorphism (hē-â-tō-môr′fizm), n. [< Gr. ἑαυτοῦ, m., ἑαυτῆς, f., ἑαυτοῦ, n., a gen. form, of himself, herself, itself (contr. of ἑο αὐτοῦ, etc.: ἑο, later οὐ = L. sui, of himself, etc. (see sui generis); αὐτοῦ, gen. of αὐτός, self (see auto-)), + μορφή, form.] Automorphism.

> Heautomorphism, in default of science, is ever the first resource of explanation; i. e., we judge of others by ourselves.
> ★ Pop. Sci. Mo., XXX. 257.

heave (hēv), v.; pret. heaved or hove, pp. heaved, hove, formerly hoven, ppr. heaving. [< ME. heven, earlier hebben (pret. hof, hef, hæf, pl. hoven, heven, also weak pret. hevede, hefde, pp. hoven, heven, ihoven, also weak pp. heved), < AS. hebban (pres. hebbe, hæbbe, impv. hef, hefe, pret. hōf, pl. hōfen, pp. hafen, hæfen), raise, lift, = OS. hebbian = OFries. heva = D. heffen = MLG. heven = OHG. heffan, hevan, MHG. heven, heben, G. heben (pret. hob, pp. gehoben) = Icel. hefja = Sw. häfva = Dan. hæve = Goth. hafjan (pret. hōf, pl., in comp., hōfum, pp. hafans), raise, lift; a common Teut. strong verb, √ haf*, with pres. formative -ja (-ia), the sense 'lift' being developed from the orig. sense 'take, take hold of' (a sense appearing in the derivs. *haft*1, *heft*1, behoof, q. v., and in the L. cognate), = L. capere (pres. ind. capio, perf. cēpi, pp. captus), take, take hold of, seize (> ult. > They are the model of those men whose honours
> We heave our hands at when we hear recited.
> Beau. and Fl., Captain, i. 3.
>
> Rise, rise, and heave thy rosy head
> From thy coral-paven bed.
> Milton, Comus, l. 885.

The curious custom known as heaving: on Easter Monday the men heaved the women, i. e., lifted them off the ground and kissed them. Bickerdyke, p. 241.

Especially—2. To lift with obvious effort; raise with exertion, as something heavy or resistant.

> This shoulder was ordain'd so thick to heave;
> And heave it shall some weight, or break my back.
> Shak., 3 Hen. VI., v. 7.

3†. To lift (a child) at baptism; baptize; also, to be sponsor for.

> Bot no sawle may thithen pas, > Untyle it be als cleene als it fyrst was,
> When he was hofen at fount-stane,
> And hys crystendom thare had tane.
> Hampole, Handlyng Synne.

4. To weigh; heft. [Prov. Eng.]—5. To cause to swell or bulge upward; raise above the former or the surrounding level: often with up.

> The glittering finny swarms
> That heave our friths and crowd upon our shores.
> Thomson, Autumn, l. 923.
>
> Great gray hills heaved up round the horizon.
> Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, v.

6. To elevate or elate in condition or feeling, as by the operation of some potent agency or some moving influence; exalt; promote; raise suddenly or forcibly to a higher state.

> Therfore hefe vp your hertis; hast you to saile;
> Sette furthe to the se; sitte no lengur.
> Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 4603.
>
> Cicero's book, where Cato was heaved up > Equal with heaven. B. Jonson, Sejanus, iii. 1.

Tradition they say hath taught them that for the prevention of growing schisme the Bishop was heav'd above the Presbyter. Milton, Church-Government, i. 6.

Strong political excitement . . . heaves a whole nation on to a higher platform of intellect and morality.
W. Phillips, Speeches, p. 28.

7†. To increase.

> Qua folus lang wit uten turn,
> Oft his fote sal find a spurn;
> Reu his res than sal he sare,
> Or heuen his harme with foli mare.
> Quoted in Alliterative Poems, ed. Morris (Gloss.).

8. To bring up or forth with effort; raise from the breast or utter with the voice laboriously or painfully: as, to heave a sigh or a groan.

> She heav'd the name of father
> Pantingly forth. Shak., Lear, iv. 3.
>
> Heaves abroad his cares in one good sigh.
> Browning, Ring and Book, I. 45.

9. To throw upward and outward; cast or toss with force or effort; hurl or pitch, as with aim or purpose: as, to heave a stone; to heave the lead. [Chiefly naut. and colloq.]

> I escaped upon a butt of sack, which the sailors heaved overboard. Shak., Tempest, ii. 2.
>
> The ships at first grounded two or three miles from the shore, yet (through the Lord's great mercy) they were heaved by the seas near to the dry land.
> Winthrop, Hist. New England, II. 293.

10. In geol., to throw or lift out of its place: said of the intersection of two veins, or of that of a cross-course with another vein. When a displacement of one or the other is caused by the intersection, one vein is said to heave the other out of its regular position.

> A vein may be thrown out on meeting another vein, in a line which approaches either towards its inclination or its direction. The Cornish miners use two different terms to denote these two modes of rejection; for the first case they say the vein is heaved, for the second it is started.
> Ure, Dict., III. 300.

11. Naut., to draw or pull in any direction, as by means of a windlass or capstan: as, to heave a ship ahead (that is, to bring her forward, when not under sail, by means of a cable or other appliance); to heave up an anchor (to raise it from the bottom of the sea or elsewhere).—Hove apeak. See apeak.—To heave aback, to get (a ship) in such a position, by putting the helm down or hauling in the weather-braces, or both, that the wind acts on the forward surface of the sails.—To heave a cable short, to haul it in until the ship lies nearly over the anchor.—To heave a strain, to turn the capstan or windlass till the rope hove upon bears a strain with full force at the windlass.—To heave a vessel about, to put her on the other tack.—To heave a vessel down, to careen her for repairs by means of tackles from her masthead to the shore or to a hulk.

> The ship also was so leaky that I doubted it would be necessary to heave her down at Batavia, which was another reason for making the best of our way to that place.
> Cook, Voyages, II. iii. 7.

To heave in stays, in tacking, to bring (a ship's head) to the wind.—To heave out, to raise (the keel) out of the water by careening, in order to repair or clean it.—To heave the gorge. See gorge.—To heave the lead. See lead.—To heave the log, to ascertain a ship's rate of sailing by the log and glass. See log.—To heave taut, to turn a capstan, etc., till the rope or chain becomes strained.—To heave to, to bring the head of (a vessel) to the wind; stop the headway of.

> We passed through a large fleet of merchantmen hove-to under shelter of Cape de Gat.
> Lady Brassey, Voyage of Sunbeam, II. xxviii.

=Syn. 1 and 2. Hoist, Lift, etc. See raise.

II. intrans. 1. To be raised, thrown, or forced up; rise; swell up; bulge out.

> Where ground beares naturally store of chamocks, the cheese that is made off from such ground the dayry-women cannot keep from heaving.
> Aubrey's Wilts, MS. Royal Soc., p. 300. (Halliwell.)
>
> So high as heaved the tumid hills, so low > Down sunk a hollow bottom broad and deep.
> Milton, P. L., vii. 288.

It is of little use to expect clover as a permanent crop in wet soils, or those subject to heave by the annual winter frosts. New Amer. Farm Book, p. 132.

2. To rise and fall with alternate motions, as the waves of the sea, the lungs in difficult or painful breathing, the earth in an earthquake, etc.

> Dead calm in that noble breast
> Which heaves but with the heaving deep.
> Tennyson, In Memoriam, xi.

The minister's . . . mind was . . . tossed to and fro on that stormy deep of thought, heaving forever beneath the conflict of windy dogmas.
O. W. Holmes, Elsie Venner, xvii.

On the fourth [day] the wind fell, leaving the ship dismasted and heaving on vast billows.
R. L. Stevenson, Master of Ballantrae, ii.

3. To pant, as after severe exertion; labor.

> He heaves for breath, which, from his lungs supply'd, heaven (hev'n), n. [Early mod. E. also heven; < ME. heven, < AS. hēofon, heofen, hefon, earlier heben = OS. hebhan = MLG. heven, LG. hēben, hēwen, heaven; origin unknown. No connection with Icel. himinn = Goth. himins, heaven, the same, but with different suffix -in, as OS. himil = OFries. himul = D. hemel = OHG. MHG. himel, G. himmel (> Sw. Dan. himmel), heaven, also in OHG., D., Icel., etc., ceiling, canopy (so early AS. heben-hūs, glossed by L. lacunar, ceiling), pointing to a prob. orig. meaning 'covering,' represented by E. hame[1], q. v. The similarity of the two groups (AS. heofon, etc., and Goth. himins, etc.) is prob. accidental. Heaven is often erron. explained as orig. the pp. of heave, the sky being regarded as that which is 'heaved' up; but the AS. hafen, hæfen, pp. of hebban, heave, is very different phonetically from heofon, heaven, and the two words must be of different origin. This supposed relation of heaven to heave appears reversed and modified in the actual relation of lift, the air, the sky, with lift, raise.] 1. The expanse of space surrounding the earth, and appearing above and around us as a great arch or vault, in which the sun, moon, and stars seem to be set; the sky; the firmament; the celestial regions: often used in the plural.

Hit was neuer herd, as I hope, sith heuyn was o loft [aloft],
In any coste where ye come but ye were clene victorius.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 1101.

I never saw
The heavens so dim by day.
Shak., W. T., iii. 3.

Deepening thro' the silent spheres,
Heaven over Heaven rose the night.
Tennyson, Mariana in the South.

'Tis very sweet to look into the fair
And open face of heaven, to breathe a prayer Full in the smile of the blue firmament.
Keats, Sonnet.

2. Sky as typical of climate; a zone or region.

From vases in the hall
Flowers of all heavens, and lovelier than their names, Grew side by side. Tennyson, Princess, Prol.

3. The celestial abode of immortal beings; the place or state of existence of blessed spirits beyond the sphere of or after departure from the earthly life. In Christian theology heaven is regarded as the region or state of endless happiness enjoyed by angels and faithful departed spirits in the immediate presence of God. The Hebrews supposed three heavens—the air, the starry firmament, and the abode of God. The Cabalists described seven heavens, each rising in happiness above the other, the highest being the abode of God and the most exalted angels. Hence, to be in the seventh heaven is to be supremely happy. The heaven of the Mohammedans is remarkable for the sensual delights it has in store for the faithful. The ancient Greeks and Latins regarded heaven as the abode of the greater gods; and the spirits of the great and good were supposed to find their place of bliss in the Elysian Fields (which see, under Elysian).

But zit there is a place that men clepen the Scole of God, where he was wont to teche his Disciples, and tolde hem the Prevytees of Hevene.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 114.

And in the myddys of the Tower ys the place wher our blyssyd Savyor Crist Jhu ascendid vnto hevyn.
Torkington, Diarie of Eng. Travell, p. 30.

I knew a man in Christ . . . caught up to the third heaven. 2 Cor. xii. 2.

Above
Live the great gods in heaven and see What things shall be. Swinburne, Félise.

4. [cap.] The Supreme Being; God; Providence.

He cannot thrive,
Unless her prayers, whom Heaven delights to hear,
And loves to grant, reprieve him from the wrath
Of greatest justice. Shak., All's Well, iii. 4.

Dear Couz, said Hermes in a Fright,
For Heav'n sake keep your Darts: Good Night.
Prior, Mercury and Cupid.

Heaven is very kind in its way of putting questions to mortals. O. W. Holmes, Old Vol. of Life, p. 15.

5†. pl. The celestial powers; heavenly beings.

In love, the heavens themselves do guide the state.
Shak., M. W. of W., v. 5.

6. Supreme exaltation or felicity; consummate happiness; a state of bliss.

For if heuene be on this erthe and ese to any soule,
It is in cloistere or in scole be many skilles I fynde.
Piers Plowman (B), x. 300.

It is a heaven upon earth to have a man's mind move in charity, rest in Providence, and turn on the poles of truth. Bacon.

Stand up, and give me but a gentle look
And two kind words, and I shall be in heaven.
Beau. and Fl., King and No King, iii. 1.

Balm of heaven. See balm.—Crystalline heavens. See crystalline.—Good heavens! an exclamation of astonishment, remonstrance, or censure. [Colloq.]—Heaven of heavens, the highest heaven; the abode and seat of divinity.

So God has greatly purpos'd. Cowper, Task, vi. 818.

heave-offering (hēv'of″ėr-ing), n. In the Levitical law, a voluntary offering which when presented before the Lord was 'heaved' or elevated by the priest, and became the portion of the priests and their families. The term is also sometimes applied to offerings received for the priests but not actually heaved or elevated. Hence the Hebrew word terumah, which is rendered heave-offering 28 times, is elsewhere in the Old Testament rendered 'offering' (26 times), 'oblation' (23 times), 'gifts (once, Prov. xxix. 4), and 'is offered' (once, Ezek. xlviii. 12). It is used of the tenths of the tithes paid by the Levites to the priests (Num. xviii. 26–29), of offerings for the fabric, vessels, etc., of the tabernacle (Ex. xxv., xxxv., xxxvi., etc.), of territory reserved to the priests (Ezek. xlv. 1, xlviii. 8–21), of the offering of a half-shekel or didrachma of atonement-money once a year (Ex. xxx. 13–16: compare Mat. xvii. 24), etc.

Thou shalt sanctify the breast of the wave offering, and the shoulder of the heave offering, which is waved, and which is heaved up, of the ram of the consecration, even of that which is for Aaron, and of that which is for his sons. Ex. xxix. 27.

3. In some Gnostic systems, a group of superhuman beings, angels, or divine emanations; in the systems of Basilides and Valentinus, the sphere of the Demiurge, sublunary, and lower than the ogdoad, or a title of the Demiurge himself. The Gnostic uses of the word were apparently developed from the idea of the seven planets or planetary heavens, or that of gods, spirits, or angels personifying, indwelling, ruling, or creating them; then, in a collective sense, it came to mean the whole sublunary sphere, or its ruler.

In the next lower sphere [below the Ogdoad, in the system of Basilides], called the Hebdomad, or sphere of seven, is the second Archon, or Ruler, who is the God of the Jews, and who created all things below Him.
Bp. Chr. Wordsworth, Church History, I. 195.

Milton . . . has infused a great many Latinisms, as well as Græcisms, and sometimes Hebraisms, into the language of his poem. Addison, Spectator, No. 285.

2. The spirit and tendency regarded as especially characteristic of the Hebrew race, historically considered.

The uppermost idea with Hebraism is conduct and obedience. . . . Hebraism—and here is the source of its wonderful strength—has always been severely preoccupied with an awful sense of the impossibility of being at ease in Zion. . . . By alternations of Hebraism and Hellenism, of a man's intellectual and moral impulses, of the effort to see things as they really are, and the effort to win peace by self-conquest, the human spirit proceeds. . . . All which Protestantism . . . succeeded in clearly setting forth in words had the characters of Hebraism rather than of Hellenism. . . . Puritanism . . . was a reaction of Hebraism against Hellenism.
M. Arnold, Culture and Anarchy, iv.

Hebraist (hē'brā-ist), n. [< Hebra-ic + -ist.] 1. One versed in the Hebrew language and learning.—2. One imbued with the Hebraic spirit. See Hebraism, 2.

2. The language spoken by the Hebrews, one of the northern or Canaanitic divisions of the Semitic family of languages. It is the language of the books of the Old Testament, and became extinct as a vernacular tongue three or four centuries before the Christian era; but it is even now used for speaking and writing by well-educated Hebrews all over the world, and has an extensive modern literature.

And the Table aboven his Heved, that was a Fote and an half long, on the whiche the Title was writen, in Ebreu, Grece, and Latyn, that was of Olyve.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 10.

Ezra, pressing on their hands, raised himself, and uttered in Hebrew the confession of the Divine Unity, which for long generations has been on the lips of the dying Israelite. George Eliot, Daniel Deronda, lxx.

Epistle to the Hebrews, one of the books of the New Testament, addressed to Christians of Hebrew birth dwelling in Rome, or perhaps in Palestine or Alexandria. Its chief object is to present a parallel between the symbolism of the Old Testament dispensation and the life-work of Christ. The author is unknown—perhaps Barnabas, or less probably Apollos. The authorship has been often ascribed to the apostle Paul, but this view is contrary to the weight of authority of the early church, and is opposed by the mass of modern scholars. A probable date of composition is about A. D. 65. Abbreviated Heb.—Rabbinical or modern Hebrew, the language used by the rabbins in their writings. Its basis or body is the Hebrew and Chaldaic, with various alterations in the words of these two languages. They have borrowed freely from the Arabic, and the rest is composed of words chiefly from the Greek, some from the Latin, and others from the modern tongues.

II. a. Of or pertaining to the Hebrews; Hebraic: as, the Hebrew language or rites.

His thin cheek assumed a deadly hue,
And all the rose to one small spot withdrew:
They call'd it hectic; 'twas a fiery flush,
More fix'd and deeper than the maiden blush.
Crabbe, Works, I. 133.

2. Pertaining to or affected with such fever; feverish; consumptive: as, a hectic flush.

The hectick heate
Of Oswald's blood doubled their pulses' pace.
Sir W. Davenant, Gondibert, ii. 5.

But for some years before its author's death it dwindled away so much, and fell into such an hectic state, that the few friends of it feared its decease was very near.
I. D'Israeli, Calam. of Authors, I. 105.

Hectic infantile fever. See fever[1].

II. n. 1. A hectic fever; a wasting away, attended by heightened color.

Do it, England;
For like the hectic in my blood he rages,
And thou must cure me. Shak., Hamlet, iv. 3.

2. A hectic flush.

The poor Franciscan made no reply; a hectick of a moment pass'd across his cheek, but could not tarry—Nature seemed to have done with her resentments in him.
Sterne, Sentimental Journey, p. 10.

The coronal which autumn gives,
The brief, bright sign of ruin near,
The hectic of a dying year!
Whittier, Mogg Megone, ii.

hectical (hek'ti-kal), a. [< hectic + -al.] Same as hectic.

hectocotyle (hek'tō-kot-il), n. Same as hectocotylus, 2.

hectocotylization (hek-tō-kot″i-li-zā'shon), n. [< hectocotyliz(ed) + -ation.] The process or result of being hectocotylized; the state, quality, or condition of a hectocotylus: applied both to the modification of the arm of the male cephalopod, which converts it into a reproductive organ, and to the fertilization of the female by this means. Also spelled hectocotylisation.

hectocotylized (hek-tō-kot'i-līzd), a. [< hectocotylus + -ize + -ed[2].] 1. Changed into a hectocotylus, as an arm of certain cephalopods.

The male Cephalopods are distinguished from the females by the asymmetry of their arms, one or more of which, on one side, are peculiarly modified, or hectocotylized. Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 454.

2. Affected by a hectocotylus; impregnated, as a female cephalopod when she receives the detached male arm.

Also spelled hectocotylised.

hectocotylus (hek-tō-kot'i-lus), n. [NL. (Cuvier, def. 1), < Gr. ἑκατόν (contr.), a hundred, + κοτύλη, a small cup: see cotyle.] 1†. [cap.] In zoöl., a spurious genus of parasitic organisms, the same as the Trichocephalus of Delle Chiaje; in reality, the detached male arm of a cephalopod, attached to the female, and mistaken for a parasite.—2. In biol., the metamorphosed reproductive arm of certain of the male cephalopods, as the argonaut, which becomes detached and is deposited within the mantle-cavity of the female for the purpose of conveying the sperm-cells to her. Also hectocotyle. See cut under Argonautidæ.

hectogram, hectogramme (hek'tō-gram), n. [< F. hectogramme, < Gr. ἑκατόν (contr.), a hundred, + γράμμα, repr. F. gramme, E. gram: see gram[2].] In the metric system, a weight of 100 grams, or 1,543.2356 grains.

hectograph (hek'tō-gráf), n. [< Gr. ἑκατόν (contr.), a hundred, + γράφειν, write.] A copying process in which the writing or drawing to be copied is made on smooth paper in aniline ink, and is then pressed upon a slab coated with gelatin, to which a part of the ink is thus transferred, and from which a number of duplicate impressions can be made; also, the special appliances, collectively, by means of which this is done. Also spelled hektograph. [Trade-name.]

hectograph (hek'tō-gráf), v. t. [< hectograph, n.] To copy by means of a hectograph.

hectographic (hek-tō-graf'ik), a. [< hectograph + -ic.] Pertaining to or made with the hectograph.

hector (hek'tor), n. [< L. Hector, < Gr. Ἕκτωρ, in Homer's Iliad a brave Trojan warrior, prop. adj. ἕκτωρ, holding fast, an epithet of Zeus, of anchors, of a net, etc., < ἔχειν, hold: see hectic.] 1. A bully; a blustering, turbulent, noisy fellow.

Thus the hectors use to do, and to give the lye at adventure, when they have a mind to try a man's courage.
Marvell, Works, II. 109.

2. One who teases or vexes.

hector (hek'tor), v. [< hector, n.] I. trans. 1. To treat with insolence; threaten; bully.

Our King did openly say, the other day in the Privy Chamber, that he would not be hectored out of his right and preeminencys by the King of France, as great as he was. Pepys, Diary, II. 98.

2. To find fault with; fret at; chide; scold.

An honest man, when he came home at night, found another fellow domineering in his family, hectoring his servants, and calling for supper. Arbuthnot, John Bull.

They had hard times when they were little, . . . and were hectored and worried when they ought to have been taking some comfort. H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 245.

=Syn. To fret, worry, annoy, beset, provoke, irritate.

II. intrans. To play the bully; bluster; be turbulent or insolent.

But when huffing and hectoring must be looked upon as the only badges of gallantry and courage, what can recommend the exercise of patience against the disgrace of it? South, Works, X. iv.

Don Carlos made her chief director,
That she might o'er the servants hector. Swift.

Hectorian, Hectorean (hek-tō'ri-an, -rē-an), a. [< Hector (see def.) + -i-an, -e-an.] Relating or pertaining to or like Hector of Troy.

In vain I charg'd him soon to quit the plain,
And warn'd to shun Hectorean force in vain.
Pope, Iliad, xviii. 18.

hectorism (hek'tor-izm), n. [< hector + -ism.] The disposition or practice of a hector or bully. [Rare.]

hectorly† (hek'tor-li), a. [< hector + -ly[1].] Resembling a hector; blustering; insolent.

Those who seek glory from evil things, . . . from presumptuous transgression of God's law (hectorly profaneness and debauchery), . . . are not only vain-glorious, but impudent. Barrow, Works, III. xxxi.

hectostere (hek'tō-stēr), n. [< F. hectostère, < Gr. ἑκατόν (contr.), a hundred, + στερεός, solid, > F. stère, E. stere, as a measure of solidity.] In the metric system, a measure of solidity containing 100 cubic meters, and equivalent to 3,531.4 English cubic feet.

he'd. A contraction of (a) he had, and of (b) he would.

hedage (hed'āj), n. [A var. of hithage*, < hithe + -age.] A toll or custom formerly paid at the hithe or wharf for landing goods, etc., from which an exemption was granted by the king to particular persons and societies. Cowel.

heddle (hed'l), n. [Sc. also hiddle, obs. hedel, E. also heald; appar. of Scand. origin. Cf. Icel. hafald, the perpendicular thrums that hold the weft.] In weaving, a series of leashes, twines, cords, or wires vertically stretched, generally in pairs, between two horizontal bars or laths, looped about both bars, and joined in their middle part to form eyes for the reception of a warp-thread or yarn. Two heddles are used for plain weaving, their vertically opposite movements separating the warp-threads to form an opening or shed for the passage of the shuttle. In the United States harness consists of frame and heddles, and in English works on weaving leaf or set of heddles is frequently employed. Heddle is often loosely used in the singular to denote one of the pairs of leashes or cords.—Mail of the heddle, an eyelet or ring of glass or metal in an eye of a heddle.

heddle (hed'l), v. t.; pret. and pp. heddled, ppr. heddling. [< heddle, n.] To draw (warp-threads) systematically through the eyes of a eddle.

heddle-eye (hed'l-ī), n. The eye in a pair of leashes or cords of a heddle for receiving a warp-thread.

heddle-hook (hed'l-hůk), n. A hook, much resembling a crochet-hook, used in heddling. It is passed through the heddle-eye to engage the end of the warp-thread and draw the thread through the eye.

heddle-yarn (hed'l-yärn), n. Worsted yarn twisted and singed preparatory to its use in making heddles.

hede[1]†, n. and v. A Middle English form of head.

hede[2]†, v. A Middle English form of heed[1].

hedenbergite (hed'en-bėr-gīt), n. [After L. Hedenberg, a Swedish chemist.] A lime-iron variety of pyroxene, occurring in crystals and in lamellar masses of a black or blackish-green color at Tunaberg in Sweden, and elsewhere.

Hedeoma (hē-dē-ō'mą), n. [NL. (Persoon, 1805), said to be altered from Hedyosmum (which is used for another genus), < Gr. ἡδύς, sweet, + ὀσμή, smell.] A genus of chiefly low, herbaceous, aromatic plants, belonging to the family Menthaceæ, characterized by its axillary clusters of small bluish flowers, in which the corolla is scarcely exserted from the calyx, and only two of the stamens are perfect. It now embraces 25 species, exclusively confined to North and South America. The best-known species is H. pulegioides, the American pennyroyal, which has the pleasantly pungent odor and taste of the genus specially developed, and is in great repute as a remedy for colds and as an emmenagogue.

Pennyroyal (Hedeoma pulegioides).
a, flower; b, leaf.

heder†, adv. A Middle English variant of hither.

Hedera (hed'e-rą), n. [L. (Linnæus, 1753), also edera, ivy: see under get[1].] A genus of dicotyledonous choripetalous woody vines, climbing by rootlets, belonging to the family Araliaceæ and tribe Hedereæ. It is characterized by having the styles connate into a cone or short column, the leaves entire or lobed, the umbels paniculate, and the pedicels continuous with the flowers. The genus as thus limited contains but a single living species, H. Helix, the common ivy, now cultivated in all lands, but indigenous to most temperate and subtropical old-world regions of the northern hemisphere, from the Canary Islands to Japan. The Queensland ivy, Kissodendron Australianum, differs conspicuously in having pinnate leaves. The West Indian trees that have been placed in this genus by some authors are now referred to Schefflera; while the so-called Hedera of the Hawaiian Islands belongs more properly to the genus Cheirodendron. Besides the value of the ivy as an ornamental vine, it yields hederic acid, which has medicinal properties, and the berries are emetic. A decoction of the leaves dyes hair black. The genus is found in a fossil state from the Middle Cretaceous to the Quaternary of Europe, the arctic regions, and the United States, more than 20 fossil species having been described. H. Helix is common in the Quaternary deposits of Italy and France.

Hederaceæ (hed-ę-rā′sē-ē), n. pl. [NL., fem. pl. of L. hederaceus, ‹ hedera, ivy: see hederaceous.] A term first used by Linnæus in 1764 to include the genera Panax, Hedera, Vitis, etc.: made by Bartling in 1830, and by most later authors, equivalent to Araliaceæ.

hederaceous (hed-ę-rā′shius), a. [‹ L. hederaceus, of ivy, ivy-green, ‹ hedera, ivy: see Hedera.] 1. Pertaining to, resembling, composed of, or producing, ivy.—2. Belonging to the ivy family, that is, to the Hederæ of Bentham and Hooker.

hederal (hed′ę-ral), a. [‹ L. hedera, ivy, + -al.] Of or pertaining to ivy. Also hederic.

hederate† (hed′ę-rāt), v. t. [‹ L. hedera, ivy, + *-ate*2.] To adorn or crown with ivy, as a victor in the Olympian games.

He appeareth there neither laureated nor hederated poet. Fuller, Worthies, Yorkshire.

Hedereæ (hē-dē′rē-ē), n. pl. [NL., ‹ Hedera + -eæ.] That subdivision of the family of plants Araliaceæ to which the genus Hedera, the ivy, belongs: called by Bentham and Hooker (1862) a series, and embracing, besides Hedera, six other genera. The group is distinguished from the rest of the family by having the petals valvate and of the same number as the stamens, and the albumen of the seed wrinkled.

hederic (hē-der′ik), a. [‹ L. hedera, ivy, + -ic.] Same as hederal.

hederiferous (hed-ę-rif′ę-rus), a. [‹ L. hedera, ivy, + ferre = E. *bear*1.] Ivy-bearing; producing ivy.

hederine (hed′ę-rin), n. [‹ L. hedera, ivy, + *-ine*2.] A glucoside found in the seeds of the common ivy. It is intensely bitter, and appears to be closely allied to quinine in febrifugal qualities. U. S. Dispensatory, 1883.

hederose (hed′ę-rōs), a. [‹ L. hederosus, full of ivy, ‹ hedera, ivy.] Full of ivy; pertaining to ivy.

hederward†, adv. A Middle English form of hitherward.

hedge (hej), n. [‹ ME. hedge, hegge, ‹ AS. hecg*, not found except in the once-occurring dat. hegge, written for either hecge* or hege, but the probable source of the mod. form hedge (cf. E. edge, ‹ AS. ecg; E. wedge, ‹ AS. wecg, etc.), the common AS. form being the nearly related hege, › ME. heye, haye, E. *hay*2, q. v.; AS. hecg* = MD. hegghe, D. hegge, heg = MLG. hegge = OHG. hegga, hecka, MHG. G. hecke, a hedge; = Icel. heggr = Norw. hegg = Dan. hæg = Sw. hägg, a kind of tree, the bird-cherry (see heckberry, hedgeberry, hegberry, hagberry), appar. so called (like the hawthorn, q. v.) because used in hedges. Cf. Sw. häck, Dan. hæk, a hedge, prob. after G. The AS. hecg*, E. hedge, and AS. hege, E. *hay*2, are both from the more primitive form, AS. haga, E. haw: see *haw*1, *hay*2.] 1. A barrier or fence formed by bushes or small trees growing close together, such as thorn-bushes or beeches, and sometimes by woven twigs or wattling; also, a closely planted row of any kind of shrubbery, as evergreens, whether intended as a fence or not. See hedge-plant. The hedge is the prevalent kind of fence in England, but is comparatively rare in the United States. Hedges, especially roadside hedges, are often used by vagabonds as places of shelter or resort; hence hedge is often used in composition to denote something mean, low, rustic: as, a hedge-priest; a hedge-school.

The [thee] was saide in fitches floure
The seede to keepe of brere and houndes thorne.
ffor hegges made of it shall not be torne.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 81.

But Sir, we have taken with her such Beggars, such Rogues, such Vagabonds, and such Hedge-birds (since you call 'em so) as you never knew, or heard of, though now the Countries swarm with 'em under every Hedge, as if an innumerable army of 'em were lately disbanded without Pay. Hedge-birds said you? Hedge Lady-birds, Hedge Cavaliers, Hedge Souldier, Hedge Lawyer, Hedge Fidlers, Hedge Poet, Hedge Players, and a Hedge Priest among 'em. Such we have taken for the Principals.
Brome, Jovial Crew, v.

The cool shade of this sweet honeysuckle hedge.
I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 203.

I was forced to go to a little hedge place for my dinner.
Swift, Journal to Stella, xxix.

2. A structure made to lead fish into channels across which nets are spread.

They [the salmon] will force themselves through floodgates, or over weirs, or hedges, or stops in the water.
I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 123.

Dead hedge. See dead.—To breast up a hedge. See breast.

hedge (hej), v.; pret. and pp. hedged, ppr. hedging. [‹ ME. hedgen, heggen (= OD. heggehn), hedge, inclose; ‹ hedge, n.] I. trans. 1. To inclose or fence with a hedge; separate by a hedge: as, to hedge a field or garden.

There was a certain householder which planted a vineyard and hedged it round about. Mat. xxi. 33.

2. To obstruct with a hedge or any barrier; stop or restrain by any kind of obstruction.

I will hedge up thy way with thorns. Hos. ii. 6.

Nay, this shall not hedge us out: we'll hear you sing, certainly. Shak., T. and C., iii. 1.

3. To surround with something as a barrier or a border; compass about; hem in.

The first cours: brawne, with the borys hed, lying in a felde, hegge about with a scriptur sayng on this wyse: "Welcombe you bretheren godely in this hall!"
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 375.

England hedg'd in with the main. Shak., K. John, ii. 1.

We hedge ourselves round with conventional usages.
Channing, Perfect Life, p. 78.

[In the following passages hedge is peculiarly used, apparently by confusion with edge, v., in the sense of 'force or thrust' (intr. 'force or thrust one's self'), as into a place already full:

When I was hasty, thou delay'dst me longer;
I pr'ythee, let me hedge one moment more Into thy promise; for thy life preserved. Dryden.

When you are sent on an errand, be sure to hedge in some business of your own.
Swift, Advice to Servants (Directions to the Footman).]

4. In sporting, to protect by betting on both sides. See to hedge a bet, below.

Now do I suspect
I shall lose the race. . . . I'll hedge in My money presently. Shirley, Hyde Park, iv. 3.

To hedge a bet, to bet on both sides—that is, after having bet on one side, to bet also on the other side, thus guarding one's self against great loss, whatever the result may be.

He [Montano] first reduced betting into an art, and made White's the grand market for wagers. He is at length such an adept in this art that, whatever turn things take, he can never lose. This he has effected by what he has taught the world to call hedging a bet.
N. and Q., 6th ser., XII. 329.

II. intrans. 1. To hide as in a hedge; shift; skulk.

I, I, I myself sometimes, leaving the fear of heaven on the left hand, and hiding mine honour in my necessity, am fain to shuffle, to hedge, and to lurch.
Shak., M. W. of W., ii. 2.

2. In betting, to protect one's self from loss by cross-bets. See to hedge a bet, above.

Egremont . . . consulted his book; he meditated anxiously. Should he hedge? Disraeli, Sibyl, p. 7.

Hence—3. To provide a means of retreat or escape; avoid committing one's self irrevocably to anything.

Prophesy as much as you like, but always hedge. . . . Say what you will, but don't be too peremptory and dogmatic. O. W. Holmes, Old Vol. of Life, p. 12.

4†. To make or mend hedges.

Thresh and dig and hedg.
MS. Ashmole, 208. (Halliwell.) hedge-accentor (hej′ak-sen″tor), n. Same as hedge-sparrow, 1. See Accentor, 2 (a).

hedge-bedstraw (hej′bed″strâ), n. A plant, Galium Mollugo, growing in hedges. See bedstraw and Galium.

hedge-bells (hej′belz), n. 1. The hedge-bindweed, Convolvulus sepium. See cut under Convolvulus. Also called bell-bind.—2. The common bindweed, C. arvensis. [Rare.]

hedgeberry (hej′ber″i), n.; pl. hedgeberries (-iz). Same as hagberry, the bird-cherry: but in this form it seems more generally to mean the larger sweet bird-cherry, Prunus avium, which is closely related to the garden-cherry, P. Cerasus.

hedge-bill, hedging-bill (hej′bil, -ing-bil), n. A cutting-hook used in dressing hedges; a billhook.

Comes Master Dametas, with a hedging-bill in his hand.
Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, i.

hedge-binding (hej′bīn″ding), n. Something used to bind together the bushes composing a hedge.

He came and basted me with a hedge-binding.
Beau. and Fl., Knight of Burning Pestle, ii. 7.

hedge-bindweed (hej′bīnd″wēd), n. A perennial herbaceous vine, Convolvulus sepium, abundant in both Europe and America, growing along hedges and fences, over which it climbs. It was formerly separated from the true bindweed, C. arvensis, and placed in the genus Calystegia, on account of the large leafy bracts that surround the calyx; but this is no longer regarded as a generic distinction. See Convolvulus.

hedge-bird (hej′bėrd), n. A bird that seeks food and shelter in hedges. See haysuck.

hedge-born (hej′bôrn), a. Born under a hedge; hence, of low birth; rustic; obscure; mean.

A hedge-born swain
That doth presume to boast of gentle blood.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., iv. 1.

hedge-bote (hej′bōt), n. [‹ hedge + bote, ME. form of *boot*1, reparation, etc.: same as haybote.] In Eng. law, an allowance of wood to a tenant for repairing hedges.

Haye-bote or hedge-bote is wood for repairing of hays, hedges, or fences. Blackstone, Com., III. iii.

hedge-carpenter (hej′kär″pęn-tėr), n. A hedger. [Humorous.]

Pervading poverty and forlornness of the region in the best of seasons serve to repel the poets and philosophers who love to feast their eyes and rest their souls with pleasant things; and the shepherds, the hedge-carpenters, the parish-clerks, and the ditchers, usually have it all to themselves.
Harper's Mag., LXXVII., Literary Notes for Aug.

hedge-chafer (hej′chā″fėr), n. A cockchafer.

hedge-chanter (hej′chân″tėr), n. Same as hedge-sparrow, 1.

hedge-chicken (hej′chik″en), n. The whitethroat, Sylvia cinerea. C. Swainson.

hedge-creeper†, n. A wily, crafty vagabond and thief. Hollyband, Dict., 1593. (Halliwell.) hedge-fumitory† (hej′fū″mi-tǫ-ri), n. Probably the fumitory, Fumaria officinalis.

hedge-garlic (hej′gär″lik), n. A cruciferous plant, Alliaria Alliaria (Alliaria officinalis), having an odor resembling that of garlic. It has large, cordate, radical leaves, grows to the height of 2 feet, and bears an abundance of erect linear pods. It is common throughout Europe, and has been introduced into the United States near Washington, where it is rapidly spreading. Also called garlic-mustard and sauce-alone.

hedgehog (hej′hog), n. [‹ ME. heggehogge; ‹ hedge + *hog*1.] 1. In zoöl., an insectivorous animal of the family Erinaceidæ and genus Erinaceus, of which there are several species. The common European hedgehog, Erinaceus europæus, is about 9 inches long; the body is covered above with spines, and the animal can roll itself into a ball bristling in every direction. This it accomplishes by means of a very highly developed and specialized panniculus carnosus, or fleshy layer beneath the skin, which when the body is flexed acts as a sphincter, like the string which puckers the mouth of a bag. See cut under Erinaceus.

And whan he wenyth [thinketh] it be an hare, full oft it is an hegge hogge.
Juliana Berners, Treatyse of Fysshynge, fol. 1.

Thorny hedgehogs, be not seen.
Shak., M. N. D., ii. 3 (song).

2. One of several other animals characterized by numerous spines. (a) A Madagascan insectivorous animal of the family Centetidæ and any of the genera Centetes, Ericulus, and Hemicentetes. Otherwise known as tenrec. (b) An Australian monotrematous mammal of the family Echidnidæ. (c) The Canada porcupine, Erethizon. See ant-eater (a) (5), and cut under Echidnidæ. (d) A prickly fish of the genus Diodon, as D. hystrix, the porcupine-fish, more fully called sea-hedgehog. See cut under Diodon. (e) A sea-urchin.

3. In bot., a plant with echinate fruits. The name is used especially (often in the plural) for Medicago intertexta, a native of Italy and Greece, the pods of which are armed with short spines. It has also been given to Erinacea Erinacea (Anthyllis Erinacea of Linnæus), a leguminous plant growing in Spain; to Ranunculus arvensis, a northern species; to Panicastrella capitata, a grass of southern Europe; and to Hydnum Erinaceus (also called hedgehog-hydnum), a fungus with tough elastic pileus, and very long straight hymeneal spines, growing on the trunks of oak- and beech-trees. Also hedgehog-plant.

4. A kind of dredging-machine consisting of a series of spades fixed to the periphery of a cylinder, used for loosening mud, silt, etc., so that it may be carried off by the current.—5. In Scotch mining, a broken strand or wire of a rope torn out while in motion and drawn up into a bundle. N. and Q., 7th ser., VI. 322.—Hedgehog cone-flower. See cone-flower.

hedgehog-cactus (hej′hog-kak″tus), n. A cactus of the genus Echinocactus, of which about 400 species are known and a large number cultivated. They are all natives of America, from the western United States to Argentina. See cut under Echinocactus.

hedgehog-fruit (hej′hog-frōt), n. The fruit of an Australian tree, Echinocarpus australis, which belongs to the family Elæocarpaceæ, and attains the height of from 80 to 100 feet. The name is also used for the tree.

hedgehog-grass (hej′hog-grâs), n. An American grass, Cenchrus tribuloides, the spikelets of which are collected into burs. It grows in sandy soil, and is found from the great lakes to Florida. A more southern species, C. echinatus, is called the cockspur. There are 10 other species of the genus Cenchrus, chiefly tropical, to all of which the name is applicable. It has been given to Panicastrella capitata (see hedgehog, 3) and to various species of the genus Echinochloa. See bottle-brush grass, under bottle-brush, and cut under bur-grass. Also called bur-grass.

hedgehog-parsley (hej'hog-pärs″li), n. An umbelliferous plant, Caucalis daucoides, common on the continent of Europe, and also found in England. The carpels are ribbed, and bear four rows of hooked prickles on the back, forming a sort of bur. Also called bur-parsley.

hedgehog-plant (hej'hog-plant), n. Same as hedgehog, 3.

hedgehog-rat (hej'hog-rat), n. [Tr. NL. Echimys.] Any octodont rodent of the subfamily Echimyinæ, which includes the spiny rats and others: so called from the prickly pelage. See Echimyinæ, and cut under Echimys.

hedgehog-thistle (hej'hog-this″l), n. The prickly-pear, Opuntia: also a name of other cacti, as of Cereus, Echinocactus, etc.

hedge-hyssop (hej'his″op), n. 1. A plant of the genus Gratiola, especially G. officinalis, common in nearly all of Europe except the British isles. It was called by the early herbalists Gratia Dei, on account of its reputed healing virtues; and the generic name, as well as the name herb-of-grace, is derived from this. It is a bitter purgative and emetic, poisonous in large doses. It is said to have formed the basis for the famous nostrum for gout, the eau médicinale. It has now nearly gone out of use. The genus Gratiola belongs to the Scrophulariaceæ, or figwort family, and embraces about 25 species, more than half of which are found in North America. The plant has been found sparingly introduced in Georgia. The Peruvian or Victorian hedge-hyssop is G. Peruviana, a semi-aquatic species, remarkable for being indigenous to both South America and Australia.

2. In England, also the name of the lesser skullcap, Scutellaria minor, a labiate plant not often growing in hedges. Parkinson.

hedge-jug (hej'jug), n. The bottle-tit or long-tailed titmouse, Acredula rosea: named from the site and shape of its nest. [Local, Eng.]

hedge-knife (hej'nīf), n. An instrument for trimming hedges.

hedge-laurel (hej'lâ″rel), n. An Australian plant of the genus Pittosporum, especially P. eugenioides, P. rigidum, or P. tenuifolium, of New Zealand, cultivated in the botanic gardens of Melbourne, Brisbane, etc. They are ornamental evergreen shrubs or small trees, with somewhat showy white or yellowish flowers. See Pittosporum.

hedgemaids (hej'mādz), n. The ground-ivy, Glecoma hederacea. Also called haymaiden, haymaids.

hedge-marriage (hej'mar″āj), n. A secret or clandestine marriage; an irregular marriage performed by a hedge-parson or hedge-priest.

hedge-mike (hej'mīk), n. Same as hedge-sparrow, 1.

hedge-mushroom (hej'mush″röm), n. An edible mushroom, Agaricus arvensis, common in Europe. Also called horse-mushroom.

hedge-mustard (hej'mus″tärd), n. 1. A plant of the genus Sisymbrium, especially S. officinale, a stiff-branching European herb with sharply incised leaves and small yellow flowers, which was formerly much used in medicine as an expectorant and a diuretic. It is extensively naturalized in America. See Sisymbrium.—2. Less correctly, a plant of the genus Erysimum, particularly E. odoratum, common on the continent of Europe, but not found in England.

hedge-nettle (hej'net″l), n. In Great Britain, a common labiate plant, Stachys sylvatica, growing along hedges; in America, S. palustris or S. aspera, of similar habit; also, one of the more showy species in cultivation, as S. coccinea, the scarlet hedge-nettle. See Stachys.

hedge-note† (hej'nōt), n. A writing of no worth or dignity.

They left these hedge-notes for another sort of poem. Dryden.

hedge-parsley (hej'pärs″li), n. A common European umbelliferous plant, Torilis Anthriscus (Caucalis Anthriscus); also, any species of Caucalis except C. daucoides, which is called bur-parsley and hedgehog-parsley. They are unattractive weeds.

hedge-parson (hej'pär″sn), n. A mean or illiterate parson; one of a class of vagabond clergymen formerly existing in England.

A hedge-parson, or buckle-beggar, as that order of priesthood has been irreverently termed, sate on the Duke's left. Scott, Fortunes of Nigel, xvii.

hedge-peak (hej'pēk), n. The dogrose, Rosa canina, the strong prickles of which adapt it for hedges. Also hedge-speak.

The bullesse, hedg-peake, hips, and hawes, and sloes, Attend his appetite where e'r he goes.
Taylor, Works (1630).

I judge it is with men as it is with plants: take one that blossoms too soon, 'twill starve a sloe or hedg-peake.
Howard, Man of Newmarket.

hedgepig† (hej'pig), n. A hedgehog.

1 Witch. Thrice the brinded cat hath mew'd.
2 Witch. Thrice; and once the hedge-pig whin'd.
Shak., Macbeth, iv. 1.

hedge-pink (hej'pink), n. The soapwort, Saponaria officinalis.

hedge-plant (hej'plant), n. A plant used in or suitable for forming hedges.

Several years ago there was much discussion as to the use of white willow as a hedge-plant, but it is better fitted to form a windbreak. Amer. Cyc., VIII. 604.

hedge-planter (hej'plan″tėr), n. A frame for holding young hedge-plants in position while being set out in a furrow to form a hedge.

hedge-press† (hej'pres), n. A printing-press at which literature of a low kind was printed.

A person who, by his style and literature, seems to have been the corrector of a hedge-press in Little Britain, proceeded gradually to an author. Swift.

hedge-priest (hej'prēst), n. A hedge-parson; specifically, in Ireland, formerly, a priest who had been admitted to orders directly from a hedge-school, without preparation in theological studies at a regular college.

Therefore did som of them at Cambrige (whom I will not name openlie) cause hedge priestes sette out of the contrie to be made fellowes in the vniuersitie.
Ascham, The Scholemaster, p. 136.

There is five in the first show. . . .
The pedant, the braggart, the hedge-priest, the fool, and the boy. Shak., L. L. L., v. 2.

hedger (hej'ėr), n. [< hedge + *-er*1.] 1. One who makes or repairs hedges.

What time the labour'd ox
In his loose traces from the furrow came,
And the swink'd hedger at his supper sat.
Milton, Comus, l. 293.

2. In sporting, one who hedges.

hedge-rime (hej'rīm), n. Vulgar doggerel.

hedge-row (hej'rō), n. A row or series of shrubs or trees planted for inclosure, or for the separation of fields.

Some time walking, not unseen,
By hedge-row elms, on hillocks green.
Milton, L'Allegro, l. 58.

The fields . . . are divided by hedge-rows of myrtle.
Bp. Berkeley, To Pope.

hedge-school (hej'sköl), n. A school formerly kept beside a hedge, or in the open air, in Ireland; a poor, mean school.

You talk with contempt of a hedge-school. Did you never hear of a nate little spot in Greece called the Groves of Academus?
Carleton, Traits and Stories (The Hedge-School).

hedge-schoolmaster (hej'sköl″mâs-tėr), n. The master of a hedge-school.

Hedge-schoolmasters were as superior in literary knowledge and acquirements to the class of men who are now engaged in the education of the people as they were beneath them in moral and religious character.
Carleton, Traits and Stories (The Hedge-School).

hedge-scissors (hej'siz″ėrz), n. pl. A large crooked kind of scissors or shears for trimming hedges.

hedge-shrew (hej'shrö), n. The field-mouse.

The fire-fly and hedge-shrew and lob-worm, I pray,
How fare they? Browning, Pippa Passes, Epil.

hedge-sparrow (hej'spar″ō), n. 1. A small European warbler, Accentor modularis, resembling a sparrow in coloration and frequenting hedges. Also called hedge-accentor, hedge-chanter, hedge-chat, hedge-mike, hedge-spick, hedge-spurgie, and hedge-warbler. See Accentor, 2 (a).

The hedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo so long
That it had its head bit off by its young.
Shak., Lear, i. 4.

2†. An old book-name of the Jamaican guit-guit or rufous-throated tanager, Glossiptila ruficollis. G. Edwards.—3. Some other hedge-bird, supposed to be a sparrow.

hedge-speak (hej'spēk), n. Same as hedge-peak.

hedge-spick (hej'spik), n. Same as hedge-sparrow, 1.

hedge-spurgie (hej'spėr″ji), n. Same as hedge-sparrow, 1. [Scotch.]

hedge-taper (hej'tā″pėr), n. Same as hag-taper. See mullen.

hedge-thorn (hej'thôrn), n. See hawthorn.

hedge-vine (hej'vīn), n. The virgin's-bower of Europe, Clematis Vitalba.

hedge-violet (hej'vī″ō-let), n. The common European wood-violet, Viola sylvatica.

hedge-warbler (hej'wâr″blėr), n. Same as hedge-sparrow, 1.

hedge-writer† (hej'rī″tėr), n. A Grub-street writer or low author.

These hedge-writers . . . seldom speak a word against any of the late ministry, but they presently fall to compliment my lord treasurer and others in great places.
Swift, Remarks on Letter to the Seven Lords.

hedging (hej'ing), n. [Verbal n. of hedge, v.] The process or work of making or trimming hedges.

He [the agricultural laborer] will . . . proceed to his work direct, to the stables, or to the business of hedging and ditching. Escott, England, xi.

hedging-bill, n. See hedge-bill.

hedging-glove (hej'ing-gluv), n. A strong leather glove worn to protect the hand in trimming hedges.

hedonic (hē-don'ik), a. [< Gr. ἡδονικός, of or for pleasure, < ἡδονή, Dor. ἁδονά, delight, < ἥδεσθαι, intr., delight, enjoy oneself, connected with ἀνδάνειν, tr., please, delight, gratify, also with ἡδύς = Skt. svādu = L. suāvis = E. sweet, q. v.] 1. Pertaining to or consisting in pleasure.

The changes above mentioned in the hedonic effects of bitter tastes, sweet tastes, or the like, tend rather to prove the contrary. J. Ward, Encyc. Brit., XX. 68.

2. Of the nature of hedonism; regarding one's own enjoyment as the chief good.

hedonical (hē-don'i-kal), a. [< hedonic + -al.] Same as hedonic.

hedonics (hē-don'iks), n. [Pl. of hedonic: see -ics.] That branch of ethics which treats of the doctrine of pleasure; the science of active or positive pleasure or enjoyment.

hedonism (hē'dō-nizm), n. [< Gr. ἡδονή, delight, enjoyment, pleasure (see hedonic), + -ism.] The doctrine of Aristippus and the Cyrenaic school of Greek philosophers, that the pleasure of the moment is the only possible end, that one kind of pleasure is not to be preferred to another, and that a man should in the interest of pleasure govern his pleasures and not be governed by them; hence, that ethical doctrine which regards pleasure or happiness as the highest good. The term hedonism is regarded by some writers as defamatory, but others apply it to their own opinions. Egoistic hedonism considers only the pleasure of the individual; altruistic hedonism takes into account that of others.

The fundamental assumption of Hedonism, clearly stated, is that all feelings considered merely as feelings can be arranged in a certain scale of desirability, so that the desirability or pleasantness of each bears a definite ratio to that of all the others.
H. Sidgwick, Methods of Ethics (2d ed.), p. 115.

Hedonism I understand to abstract pleasure and pain from life, and to make of everything else a mere external means to the getting of one and the avoiding of the other. Hedonism holds, in short, that every other aspect of the world is absolutely worthless.
F. H. Bradley, Mind, XIII. 36.

hedonist (hē'dō-nist), n. [As hedon-ism + -ist.] 1. One of the Cyrenaic school of ancient Greek philosophers.—2. One who advocates or acts upon the theory of hedonism; one who regards pleasure as the chief good.

The Hedonist, understanding by the bettering of men an addition to the pleasures enjoyed by them, present and to come, has at any rate an obscure computation before him. T. H. Green, Prolegomena to Ethics, § 378.

hedonistic (hē-dō-nis'tik), a. [< hedonist + -ic.] Pertaining to hedonists or the doctrine of hedonism; of the nature of hedonism.

How vague and empty then the vague discussions concerning the hedonistic or altruistic primum mobile of individual conduct. Maudsley, Mind and Will, ii. 167.

Any hedonistic theory might be met by the assertion that life is essentially a painful experience, and pleasure unattainable. W. R. Sorley, Ethics of Naturalism, p. 258.

Hedriophthalma, hedriophthalmous (hed″ri-of-thal'mä, -mus). Same as Edriophthalma, edriophthalmous.

Hedwigia (hed-wij'i-ä), n. [NL. (Ehrhart, 1781), named after Johann Hedwig.] A genus of saxicolous mosses, characterized by a sessile, globular, smooth capsule with an obtuse operculum, without a peristome, and with a conical laciniate calyptra, the leaves without a costa and hyaline at the summit.

Hedwigiaceæ (hed-wij-i-ā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Hedwigia + -aceæ.] A family of mosses established by Bruch, Schimper, and Gümbel in 1845, embracing the genera Hedwigia, Hedwigidium, and Braunia.

Hedwigieæ (hed-wi-jī'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Hedwigia + -eæ.] A division of mosses made by Angström in 1846, embracing the genus Hedwigia only.

Hedycarya (hed-i-kar'i-ä), n. [NL. (Forster, 1775), < Gr. ἡδύς, sweet, + κάρυον, nut.] A genus of dicotyledonous apetalous plants, belonging to the family Monimiaceæ, characterized by the 7 to 10 small connivent lobes of the perianth and the numerous stamens with very short glandless filaments. The genus embraces about 6 species, inhabiting Australia, New Zealand, New Caledonia, Samoa, and the Fiji Islands. They are trees or shrubs with opposite entire or dentate coriaceous leaves, and axillary flowers in cymes or racemose panicles. The Australian species, H. angustifolia, is cultivated for ornament, under the name of native mulberry or smooth holly. It attains a height of 10 to 20 feet. The New Zealand species, H. arborea, is larger, and is called by the natives puripurikipili, kaiwhiria, or porokaiwhiri. Five fossil species have been described from the Miocene of Italy and Bohemia, the Oligocene of Styria, and the Eocene of Australia and New Zealand.

Hedychium (hē-dik'i-um), n. [NL. (Koenig, 1785), prob. in allusion to the snow-white fragrant flowers of some species, being appar. < Gr. ἡδύς, sweet, + χιών, snow.] A genus of monocotyledonous petaloid plants, belonging to the widely distributed family Zinziberaceæ, tribe Zinzibereæ, characterized by a terminal spike or thyrse of flowers with narrow elongated filaments and unappendaged connectives to the anthers. The plants grow from a horizontal tuberous rhizome; the stem is erect and leafy, the leaves clasping at the base. The flowers are generally large, showy, and fragrant. The fruit is a 3-celled capsule. The genus embraces about 25 species, all natives of tropical Asia. Many of the species are cultivated in greenhouses, sometimes under the English name garland-flower. The common garland-flower is H. coronarium. H. coccineum (the scarlet garland-flower), H. Gardnerianum, and other species embracing a great variety in color and appearance, are also cultivated.

Hedyle (hed'i-lē), n. [NL. (Guenée, 1857), < Gr. ἡδύλος, dim. of ἡδύς, sweet.] The only genus of Hedylinæ, with one species, H. heliconiaria, of Guiana, specifically named from its resemblance to butterflies of the genus Heliconia.

Hedylinæ (hed-i-lī'nē), n. pl. [NL. (Guenée, 1857), < Hedyle + -inæ.] A subfamily of Geometridæ, founded on the genus Hedyle. Also Hedylidæ, with family rank.

Hedyoteæ (hed-i-ot'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Hedyotis + -eæ.] A subtribe of plants, of the family Rubiaceæ, established by A. P. de Candolle in 1830, having the genus Hedyotis as the type. See Hedyotideæ.

Hedyotidæ (hed-i-ot'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Hedyotis + -idæ.] Lindley's name (1845) for the Hedyotideæ.

Hedyotideæ (hed″i-ō-tid'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Hedyotis (-id-) + -eæ.] A group of genera of rubiaceous plants, erected by Humboldt, Bonpland, and Kunth, about the year 1815, having Hedyotis as the type. It was adopted by Bentham and Hooker as the sixth tribe of the order, and by them limited to genera having valvate corolla-lobes, a 2- to 4-celled ovary, the ovules numerous in the cells, and a dry capsular or indehiscent fruit with small or minute seeds. They are chiefly herbs with opposite stipulate leaves.

Hedyotis (hed-i-ō'tis), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1753), so called from the smooth, tough, oval leaves, likened to ears, < Gr. ἡδύς, sweet, + οὖς (ὠτ-) = E. ear[1].] A genus of dicotyledonous sympetalous plants, belonging to the family Rubiaceæ, tribe Hedyotideæ, to which it gives its name: scarcely distinguishable botanically from Houstonia and Oldenlandia, but chiefly old-world shrubs or suffrutescent plants. There are about 80 species, chiefly natives of tropical Asia, with mostly narrow opposite leaves, persistent, often dissected setose stipules connate with the petioles in a sheath, and small white flowers in terminal or axillary cymes. Some botanists regard this genus as a section of Oldenlandia.

hedyphane (hed'i-fān), n. [So called in allusion to its glittering, < Gr. ἡδυφανής (equiv. to ἡδυφαής), sweetly shining, < ἡδύς, sweet, + φαίνεσθαι, shine, appear.] A mineral related to mimetite or lead arseniate, but having part of the lead replaced by calcium.

Hedysareæ (hed-i-sā'rē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Hedysarum + -eæ.] A tribe of plants, of the family Fabaceæ, established by A. P. de Candolle in 1825, and adopted by Bentham and Hooker: type Hedysarum. The plants are chiefly herbs or shrubs with odd-pinnate leaves, the flowers with 10 stamens, either diadelphous (9 + 1) or monadelphous, uniform versatile anthers, and indehiscent jointed pods, the divisions 1-seeded.

Hedysarum (hē-dis'a-rum), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1753, orig. in Tournefort, 1717), < Gr. ἡδύσαρον, a plant of the vetch kind, perhaps sainfoin, appar. < ἡδύς, = E. sweet, + σάρον, a broom, a besom. Sometimes erroneously explained as < ἡδύς + ἄρωμα, smell: see aroma.] A genus of plants, of the family Fabaceæ, and type of the tribe Hedysareæ, having many-jointed pods, the segments separating at maturity, and the vexillary stamen free. It embraces about sixty species, all of which are natives of the temperate regions of the northern hemisphere. They are perennial herbs or suffrutescent plants, rarely true shrubs, with odd-pinnate leaves, scarious stipules, and purple, white, or rarely yellow flowers in peduncled axillary racemes. The best-known species is H. coronarium, a native of southern Europe, and known in England as French honeysuckle, probably from its resemblance to the red clover, Trifolium pratense, which is often called honeysuckle or honeysuckle-clover in England. It is in repute as a forage-plant, and has been introduced into Australia under the name of soola-clover. H. Americanum is indigenous in the northeastern United States and northward.

Hedysarum Americanum.
a, flower; b, fruit.

hee[1]† (hē), pron. An obsolete spelling of he[1].

hee[2] (hē), a. An obsolete or dialectal variant of high.

heed[1] (hēd), v. [< ME. heden (pret. hedde), < AS. hēdan (pret. hēdde), heed, take care of, take charge of, take into possession (= OS. hōdian, huodian = OFries. hōda, hūda = D. hoeden, heed, guard, = MLG. hoden, huden = OHG. huoten, MHG. hüeten, G. hüten, guard, protect), < hōd*, f. But if a part of heaven's huge sphere Thou chuse thy pond'rous heft to beare.
Sir A. Gorges, tr. of Lucan (1614).

Constitoounts air hendy to help a man in,
But arterwards don't weigh the heft of a pin.
Lowell, Biglow Papers.

3. The greater or weightier part of anything; the bulk; the gist. [Colloq., U. S.]

Throwing the heft of the Pacific trade across the continent into the port of New York.
New York Herald, Feb. 5, 1849.

As Mr. Hallowell himself has intimated, the heft of his book is in the appendix. The American, VI. 103.

4†. Need; emergency. Nares.

We friendship faire and concord did despise,
And far appart from us we wisdom left,
Forsook each other at the greatest heft.
Mir. for Mags., p. 750.

5. Command; restraint. [Prov. Eng.]

heft[2] (heft), v. [< heft[2], n.] I. trans. 1. To heave up. [Prov. Eng.]—2. To try the weight of. [Obsolete or colloq.]

He was tall, was my Jack,
And as strong as a tree;
Thar's his gun on the rack,
Jest you heft it and see.
Bret Harte, Penelope.

II. intrans. To weigh. [Colloq., U. S.]

"I remember," said Mistress Ravel, "the Great Hog, up in Dunwich, that hefted nigh twenty score."
S. Judd, Margaret, ii. 5.

heft[3]† (heft). An early modern English preterit and past participle of heave.

Inflam'd with wrath, his raging blade he hefte.
Spenser, F. Q., I. xi. 39.

heft[4] (heft), n. [Sc., also written haft; < Icel. hefdh, possession, prescription, = Sw. häfd, culture, cultivation, improvement, = Dan. hævd, possession, prescription (Norw.), cultivation, manure; < Icel. hafa = Sw. hafva = Dan. have, have, hold, = E. have, q. v.] A dwelling; a place of residence. [Scotch.]

heft[4] (heft), v. [= Icel. hefdha, tr., take by prescription, = Sw. häfda = Dan. hævde, maintain, assert, uphold (Norw.), cultivate; from the noun.] I. intrans. To dwell. [Scotch.]

To Linshart, gin my hame ye speir, Where I hae heft near fifty year. Bp. Skinner.

II. trans. To familiarize with a place or an employment; attach or cause to become attached by long usage. [Scotch.]

Master Darsie, it may be as well that Alan and you do not meet till he is hefted, as it were, to his new calling.
Scott, Redgauntlet, letter ix.

I do believe I shall get hefted to my new situation.
★ Carlyle, in Froude.

heft[5] (heft), n. [G.] A number of sheets of paper sewed together and constituting a part of a book; also, a blank-book; a part of a work issued in parts.

The teaching is almost entirely by lectures, which the students usually take down in coverless note-books containing about twenty blank pages stitched together, modelled after the hefts of the German students and called by their German name. Nineteenth Century, XXIV. 925.

hefty (hef′ti), a. [< heft[2] + -y[1].] 1. Having considerable weight; rather heavy; hence, weighty; forcible: as, a hefty tool; a hefty argument. [Colloq., U. S.]—2. Easy to lift and handle. [Colloq., U. S.]

To my mind the first requisite in a book is that it should be readable, and to be readable it should be hefty, light, and of a form that can be easily held in the hand.
The American, IX. 232.

hegberry (heg′ber″i), n.; pl. hegberries (-iz). [See hagberry.] The bird-cherry, Prunus Padus or P. avium. [Prov. Eng.]

Hegelian (hē-gē′liạn), a. and n. [< Hegel (see Hegelianism) + -ian.] I. a. Of or pertaining to Hegel or his system of philosophy; propounded by Hegel: as, the Hegelian theory of universal history. See Hegelianism.

The Hegelian Logic is at once a Logic and a Metaphysic—i. e., it treats at once of the method and of the matter of knowledge, of the processes by which truth is discovered, and of the truth itself in its most universal aspects.
E. Caird, Hegel, p. 186.

II. n. One who accepts the philosophical opinions of Hegel; a follower of Hegel.

Hegelianise, v. t. See Hegelianize.

Hegelianism (hē-gē′liạn-izm), n. [< Hegelian + -ism.] The philosophical system of Georg Wilhelm Friedrich Hegel (1770–1831), which during the second quarter of the nineteenth century was the leading system of metaphysical thought in Germany. It purports to be a complete philosophy, undertaking to explain the whole universe of thought and being in its abstractest elements and minutest details. This it does by means of the Hegelian dialectic, a new logic, the real law of the movement of thought (not a mere form, like syllogistic), the scheme of which is thesis, antithesis, synthesis, the original tendency, the opposing tendency, and their unification in a new movement. By this law the conceptions of logic develop themselves in a long series. This law of the development of thought is assumed to be necessarily the law of the development of being, on the ground that thought and being are absolutely identical. Hegelianism is radically hostile to natural science, and especially to the Newtonian philosophy—that is, to all the methods and scientific results which have sprung from the "Principia." One of the characteristics of Hegelianism is its constant readiness to recognize continuity both as a fact and as acceptable to reason, which other metaphysical systems have often struggled to deny. Also Hegelism.

Hegelianize (hē-gē′liạn-iz), v. t.; pret. and pp. Hegelianized, ppr. Hegelianizing. [< Hegelian + -ize.] To render Hegelian. Also spelled Hegelianise.

The Hegelianising of Kant may be best illustrated from the section on the "Deduction of the Categories."
Mind, XII. 94.

Hegelism (hā′gel-izm), n. Same as Hegelianism.

hegemonic (hē-jē-mon′ik), a. [< Gr. ἡγεμονικός, < ἡγεμονία, leadership: see hegemony.] Ruling; predominant; principal.

hegemonical (hē-jē-mon′i-kạl), a. [< hegemonic + -al.] Same as hegemonic. [Rare.]

hegemony (hē′jē-mō-ni), n. [< Gr. ἡγεμονία, leadership, chief command, < ἡγεμών, a leader, guide, commander, chief, < ἡγεῖσθαι, lead, < ἄγειν, lead, = L. agere, drive, do, act: see agent, act.] Predominance; preponderance; leadership; specifically, headship or control exercised by one state over another or others, as through confederation or conquest: originally applied to such a relation often existing among the states of ancient Greece.

A hegemony, the political ascendency of some one city or community over a number of subject commonwealths.
Maine, Early Law and Custom, p. 131.

That Syracusan siege which decided the destinies of Greece, and by the fall of Athens raised Sparta, Macedonia, and finally Rome to the hegemony of the civilised world. J. A. Symonds, Italy and Greece, p. 178.

hegget, n. A Middle English form of hedge. Chaucer.

heggle (heg′l), v. i. A dialectal variant of haggle[2].

hegira, n. See hejira.

hegoleh, n. [Native name.] The madoqua antelope, Neotragus madoqua.

hegrie (heg′ri), n. [See heron.] The heron, Ardea cinerea. Also called skip-hegrie. [Shetland Islands.]

hegril's-skip (heg′rilz-skip), n. The heron, Ardea cinerea. [Shetland Islands.]

hegumen (hē-gū′men), n. [< Gr. ἡγούμενος, prop. ppr. of ἡγεῖσθαι, lead: see hegemony.] Same as hegumenos.

The catechetical discourse of S. Chrysostom on the Splendour-bearing Day is read by the Hegumen or Ecclesiarch, the brethren standing.
Greek Office for Easter Day, quoted in J. M. Neale's Eastern Church, i. 887.

hegumene (hē-gū′me-nē), n. [< Gr. ἡγουμένη, fem. of ἡγούμενος: see hegumen.] In the Gr. Ch., the head of a nunnery, corresponding, according to the size and importance of the house, to a Western abbess or prioress.

hegumeness (hē-gū′me-nes), n. Same as hegumene.

hegumenos (hē-gū′me-nos), n. [Gr. ἡγούμενος: see hegumen.] In the Gr. Ch., the head of a monastery. The rank of hegumenos corresponds to that of the abbot of a convent of the second class or of the prior of one of the first class in the Western Church. The head of a large monastery, or the superior-general of all the monasteries of a district, is called an archimandrite. Also hegoumenos and agoumenos.

I then dried my fingers on an embroidered towel, and sat down with the agoumenos and another officer of the monastery before a metal tray covered with various dainty dishes. R. Curzon, Monast. in the Levant, p. 261.

hegumeny (hē-gū′me-ni), n. [< Gr. ἡγουμενία, < ἡγούμενος, hegumenos: see hegumen.] In the Gr. Ch., the rank or office of hegumenos.

Heidelberg catechism. See catechism, 2.

heifer (hef′ėr), n. [Early mod. E. also haifer, and with orig. guttural heighfer, heckfer, heckfere, heckfar, heckfare, heckfor, heckford, heeforde, etc., corruptly hawgher (Caxton); E. dial. also transposed heifker; < ME. hayfare, hekfere, hekefere, < AS. heahfore, also heahfru (gen. heahfore, acc. heahfre), ONorth. pl. hehfaro, a heifer; an isolated word, appar. a compound, < heah-, heh-, + -fore, -fare, a supposed fem. form (compare D. vaars, also in comp. vaarkoe (D. koe = E. cow[1]) = MLG. verse = MHG. verse, G. färse, a heifer), < fearr, ONorth. far = MD. varre, D. var = OHG. farro, far, MHG. varre, var, G. farre = Icel. farri, a bullock (Teut. stem fars*); prob. allied to Gr. πόρις, πόρτις, a heifer: see farrow[2], a. But the formation is quite uncertain as to both elements. The AS. form is generally glossed by L. altile, or ML. altilium, a fatted calf (also applied to other fatted animals), < L. altilis, a., fatted, < alere, nourish, feed, suggesting that AS. heah- is heáh, high, an awkward translation, meaning 'high-fed,' of L. altilis, or simply of the related L. altus, high, lit. 'grown,' < alere, nourish, feed: see alt, altitude, etc., and old. The peculiar ME. forms would seem to favor a connection with D. hokkeling, G. hockling, a yearling calf, appar. < D. hok, a stall, pen, + dim. -ling; but the variations are evidently due to the fact that the real formation was disguised and unknown.] 1. A young cow that has not had a calf.

Israel, whom God calleth Jeshurun, and compareth to an heifer fed in large and fruitful pastures, going always at full bit, grew fat and wanton.
Bp. Sanderson, Works, III. 194.

A Lowing Heifer, Loveliest of the Herd, Stood feeding by.
Congreve, On the Taking of Namure.

2. A young female terrapin, Malaclemmys palustris, measuring 5 or 6 inches along the lower shell. See cow terrapin, under terrapin. [A trade use.]

heigh (hī), interj. [Also written hey and hi, Sc. hegh, hech, an aspirated syllable, variously expressive, according to tone and circumstances; cf. ha[1], ho[1], hoy[2].] An exclamation designed to call attention, give encouragement, etc.

Heigh, my hearts! cheerly, cheerly, my hearts!
Shak., Tempest, i. 1.

heighawt, heighhawt, n. [Also highawe, highhoe, etc.: see hickwall, hickway.] Same as hickwall.

heighet, v. An obsolete form of hie.

heighfert, n. An obsolete form of heifer.

heigh-ho (hī′hō), interj. [Also heyho, Sc. hechhowe; < heigh + ho.] An exclamation expressing a degree of surprise, astonishment, or exultation, or more usually, as languidly uttered, some weariness, marking conventionally a sigh or a yawn: also sometimes as a verb.

We'll toss off our ale till we cannot stand,
And heigh-ho for the honour of old England.
Dryden.

By my troth I am exceeding ill; hey ho!
Shak., Much Ado, iii. 4.

It was just the sort of house which youthful couples newly united by Holy Church heigh-ho'd for as they passed. M. W. Savage, R. Medlicott, i. 1.

height, hight[1] (hīt), n. [The second form is less common, but more correct (there is no reason for the distinction of vowel between high and height); also formerly heighth, highth (early mod. E. also heigth, hyeth, etc.), according to a pronunciation (hīth, improp. hïth) still often heard; < ME. highte, hyghte, heghte, higte, also, with orig. -th, heighthe, heigthe, hegthe, < AS. héahthu, with umlaut hēhthu, hiéhtho, height, high place (= D. hoogte = OHG. hōhida = Icel. hæðd = Sw. höjd = Dan. højde = Goth. hauhitha, height), < héah, E. high, etc., + -thu, -th, an abstract formative as in breadth, width, warmth, etc.: see high.] 1. Highness; elevation; altitude; stature; vertical distance or angular elevation from a base or a level, or any point of reckoning: as, the height of a tree, a mountain, or a tower.

I tok the altitude of my sonne, and fond that it was 25 degrees and 30 of minutes of heyhte.
Chaucer, Astrolabe, ii. § 3.

Behold the height of the stars, how high they are!
Job xxii. 12.

I was trimm'd in madam Julia's gown: . . .
Therefore I know she is about my height.
Shak., T. G. of V., iv. 4.

And e'er the sun was twa hours hight,
The boy was at Dundee.
Bonny Baby Livingston (Child's Ballads, IV. 42).

An amphitheatre's amazing height
Here fills my eye with terror and delight.
Addison, Letter from Italy.

2. Elevation of degree or of condition; eminence of quality, character, rank, etc.

By Him that rais'd me to this careful height.
Shak., Rich. III., i. 3.

You can never take the just height of God's Mercies to you unless you begin at the bottom.
Stillingfleet, Sermons, II. vii.

No religious sects ever carried their mutual aversions to greater heights than our state parties have done.
Swift, Sentiments of a Ch. of Eng. Man, ii.

The Church and the monarchy were the two national powers which had been raised to a height above all others through the strife with heathendom and the Danes.
J. R. Green, Conq. of Eng., p. 304.

3. The highest part; the top; hence, culmination; the highest degree; the highest point to be attained or desired: as, the height of a fever; the height of fashion.

All my former wrongs
Were but beginnings to my miseries,
But this the height of all.
Fletcher, Spanish Curate, iii. 3.

James was now at the height of power and prosperity.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vi.

4. That which has highness; an elevation; an eminence, especially of land; a hill, mountain, or precipice: often in the plural: as, to ascend a height; the Heights of Abraham at Quebec.

From Alpine heights the father first descends;
His daughter's husband in the plain attends.
Dryden, Æneid.

5†. Latitude; degree of distance from the equator, whether north or south.

Guinea lieth to the north sea, in the same height as Peru to the south. Abp. Abbot, Descrip. of World.

6†. Haughtiness.

Stand there, I say; and put on a sad countenance, Mingled with height; be cover'd and reserv'd.
Fletcher and Rowley, Maid in the Mill, iii. 2.

Height of an algebraic number. See number.—Index of height. See craniometry.—On hight†. (a) Aloud.

He gan to loken up with eyen lighte,
And spak these same wordes al on highte.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 926.

(b) Upward; aloft; on high.

With flouris fayr on height to hyng,
And fruth [fruit] also to fylle and fede.
York Plays, p. 10.

Ryght so sey I be fire or soun
Or smoke, or other thynges lyghte, Alwey they seke upward on highte.
Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 744.

height-board (hīt′bōrd), n. A stair-builders' gage for the risers and treads of a stairway.

heighten, highten (hī′tn), v. [< height + -en[1], 3, as in lengthen, strengthen, etc.] I. trans. 1. To make higher; increase the vertical elevation of.—2. To make higher in amount or degree; increase; augment; intensify: as, to heighten an effect.

Foreign states have endeavoured to heighten our confusion. Addison.

3. To make high or higher in feeling or condition; elevate or exalt, as the mind or a person.

Being so heighten'd,
He water'd his new plants with dews of flattery.
Shak., Cor., v. 5.

Heighten thyself, talk to her all in gold.
B. Jonson, Alchemist, iv. 1.

Heighten'd in their thoughts beyond
All doubt of victory. Milton, P. L., vi. 629.

Grotius added much to him, in whom we have either something new, or something heightned, that was said before. Selden, Table-Talk, p. 21.

=Syn. Lift, Exalt, etc. See raise.

II. intrans. To become higher; increase; augment.

heinous (hā′nus), a. [Formerly also hainous; E. dial. accom. hainish; < ME. heinous, heyngous, hainous, < OF. hainos, F. haineux, odious, hateful, < haïne (> E. dial. hain), hate, hatred, malice, < hair, hate, earlier hadir, of OLG. origin, OFries. hatia = AS. hatian = Goth. hatjan, hate: see hate[1].] 1. Hateful; odious; reprehensible. [Now rare.]

Hethely in my halle, wyth heyngous wordes,
In speche dispyszede me and sparede me lyttille.
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 268.

It is a heinous thing, bloodshedding, and specially voluntary murder, and prepensed murder.
Latimer, 5th Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1549.

How heinous had the fact been, how deserving Contempt and scorn! Milton, S. A., l. 493.

Hence—2. Reprehensibly great; enormous; aggravated: sometimes used (in a similar sense) of persons.

For this is an heinous crime; yea, it is an iniquity to be punished by the judges. Job xxxi. 11.

As for that heinous tiger, Tamora, . . .
Her life was beastly, and devoid of pity.
Shak., Tit. And., v. 3.

=Syn. Wicked, Infamous, etc. (see atrocious); flagitious, dreadful, horrible.

You have received all that you have, and your own being, from him, and why should you take it so heinously, if he is pleased to resume something back again?
Bp. Wilkins, Natural Religion, i. 17.

I had him wormed lately, which he took heinously.
H. Walpole, To Mann, Oct. 3, 1743.

heinousness (hā′nus-nes), n. The condition or quality of being heinous; odiousness; enormity: as, the heinousness of a vice or crime.

There are many authors who have shown wherein the malignity of a lie consists, and set forth, in proper colours, the heinousness of the offence. Spectator, No. 507.

heir (ãr), n. [< ME. heire, heyre, also, and orig., without the silent h, eir, eyr, ayer, etc., < OF. heir, eir, later hoir, oir, F. hoir = Pr. her = It. erede, < L. hēres (improp. written hæres, rarely ēres) (hērēd-), an heir, akin to hĕrus, ĕrus, master, hir = Gr. χείρ, the hand, Skt. √har, take, seize. Hence (from L. hēres) E. hereditary, etc., heritable, heritage, etc., inherit, etc.] 1. One who inherits, or has a right of inheritance in, the property of another; one who receives, or is entitled to receive, possession of property or a vested right on the death of its owner, either as his natural or as his legal successor.

West-mynster lawe, ich wot wel worcheth the contrarie;
For thauh the fader be a frankelayne and for a felon be hanged,
The heritage that the air sholde haue ys at the kynges wille. Piers Plowman (C), xi. 240.

The nation looked kindly on the one sound administrator left, and the more so perhaps when they saw in him the rightful heir to the throne.
Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 347.

(a) Technically, in law, the person upon whom the law casts an estate in real property immediately on the death of the ancestor, as distinguished from one who takes by will as a legatee or devisee, and from one who succeeds by law to personal property as next of kin. The same person who is heir when considered with reference to realty is often also next of kin when considered with reference to personalty; and where a testator's will disposes of part only of his realty, the same person who takes under the will as devisee may also take an undisposed-of part as heir. In this sense the word as used at common law does not include a widow on whom the law casts an estate in dower, or a husband on whom the law casts an estate by the courtesy, for these are considered new estates, arising out of marriage and its incidents, and carved out of the fee, not as a continuation or devolution of the fee itself. If there be dower or courtesy, the heir is that person who takes immediate title to the fee, subject to such life-estate. In legal phrase heir and heir at law are commonly used in England in the singular, because the general rule of descent there has given the entire estate to the eldest male. The singular is also not uncommonly used in the United States to designate whoever may be entitled, whether one or more, because of English usage, and because appropriate in all cases where there is but one standing in the nearest degree to the deceased.

General heirs may be in either the ascending or descending line: for example, a father or grandfather might be a general heir to the last owner, as well as a son or a grandson. "Collateral heirs" are those deriving their descent through some stock in the ascending line: for instance, a brother as a son of the common father, or an uncle as the son of the common grandfather, or a sister, or an aunt, or a cousin. "Heirs in tail" can only be in the descending line. L. A. Goodeve, Modern Law of Real Property, p. 61.

It is a settled principle of law that the legal rights of the heir or distributee to the property of deceased persons cannot be defeated except by a valid devise of such property to other persons.
Chief Justice Ruger, 105 New York Reports, 193.

(b) In a broader sense, in those jurisdictions where the distinction between realty and personalty is disregarded, the person entitled by law to succeed one dying in respect of either kind of property, as distinguished from those taking by will. In jurisdictions where the distinction is preserved, a testamentary gift of personalty, expressed to be to one's heirs, is commonly understood to intend his next of kin. (c) In another extended sense, one in a series of heirs; any successive inheritor, including not only him who takes immediately upon the death of the ancestor, but also those who have inherited through several successive descents. (d) In the most general sense, the person upon whom property of any kind devolves on the death of another, either by law or by will. Thus, the children of a person deceased are popularly spoken of as his heirs, irrespective of the nature of the property or the mode in which it passed. In much this sense heres was used in the Roman law.

2. One who inherits anything; one who receives any endowment by inheritance or transmission.

I had not now been heir to heaven's just scorn
If in Earths eye my shape had been forlorn.
J. Beaumont, Psyche, ii. 143.

3. A child regarded with reference to anything due to his parentage; an offspring in general.

If the first heir of my invention prove deformed I shall be sorry it had so noble a godfather.
Shak., Venus and Adonis, Ded.

And his heirs, a phrase in a grant to a person named, usually denoting, under technical common-law rules, that an estate of inheritance capable of passing to heirs is conveyed, as distinguished from a life-estate in him only, and as distinguished from a life-estate in him with a remainder to those persons who may on his death prove to be his heirs.—Behavior as heir. See behavior.—Expectant heir, one having expectations founded on the probability or possibility of coming into a future property, whether as heir or next of kin or as devisee or legatee, and who by reason of present need or desire of ready means is prone to be tempted to sell his expectancy. The improvident assignments and mortgages which result, called in the law catching-bargains, are often set aside or modified in the English Court of Chancery.—Forced heir. See force[1], v. t.—Heir apparent (used of a person whose ancestor is still living), an heir whose right is indefeasible, provided he survives the ancestor, as distinguished from an heir presumptive, whose expectation may be defeated by the birth of a nearer relative, as a brother of a man who has as yet no children. According to the law of Scotland, an heir apparent is the person to whom the succession has actually opened, and who remains apparent heir until his regular entry, in clare constat.—Heir at law, an heir in sense 1 (a).—Heir by custom, one whose right as heir is determined by certain customary modes of descent which are attached to the land, such as gavelkind or borough-English.—Heir by limitation, a phrase sometimes used to designate a devisee or donee who takes not by succession as heir of the testator or grantor, but because he answers to the description of "heir of" a specified person used in the will or deed. Thus, if a testator gives property to his wife for life and at her death to the heir of A, a child of A who should take would do so not as heir by way of inheritance from either, but as heir by limitation. The distinction is important in several ways, as, for instance, if A died insolvent, land which his child took as his heir by inheritance would be liable for his debts, but land which he took as heir by limitation, under a gift from the supposed testator, would not.—Heir general, an heir in sense 1 (a), as distinguished from an heir special, one to whom the estate passes by virtue of an entail. See tail[2].

Heir presumptive. See heir apparent.

Warwick . . . did not scruple to show his displeasure, and began a counter-intrigue for the marriage of one of his daughters with the duke of Clarence, the heir presumptive to the throne. Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 358.

Heir special. See heir general.

heir (ãr), v. t. [< heir, n.] To inherit; succeed to.

My younger brother will heir my land;
Fair England again I'll never see.
Young Beichan and Susie Pye (Child's Ballads, IV. 3).

When falls a mate in battle broil,
His comrade heirs his portioned spoil.
Scott, Rokeby, i. 21.

heir-apparency (ãr-a-pãr'en-si), n. The state of being heir apparent.

heirdom (ãr'dum), n. [< heir + -dom.] The state of being an heir; succession by inheritance. Burke.

heiress (ãr'es), n. [< heir + -ess.] A female heir; especially, a woman inheriting or who is expected to inherit considerable wealth.

His only child, his Edith, whom he loved
As heiress and not heir regretfully.
Tennyson, Aylmer's Field.

heir-land (ãr'land), n. Land passing by descent. Pollock.

heirless (ãr'les), a. [< heir + -less.] Destitute of an heir.

The monster, dead and heirless, who shall have His crown and capital?
Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 174.

heirloom (ãr'löm), n. [< heir + loom[1], in its orig. sense of 'tool, implement,' extended to mean 'article.'] 1. In Eng. law, a personal chattel that, contrary to the nature of chattels, by special custom descends to an heir with the inheritance, being such a thing as cannot be separated from the estate without injury to it, as jewels of the crown, charters, deeds, and the like. The term is sometimes loosely applied to personal property left by will or settled so as to descend like an heirloom proper; such property is distinctively called an heirloom by devise or a quasi-heirloom.

'T has been an heir-loom to our house four hundred years;
And, should I leave it now, I fear good fortune
Would flie from us, and follow it.
T. Tomkis (?), Albumazar, iii. 1.

Hence—2. Any personal possession that passes from generation to generation in a family or a community; any article or characteristic transmitted by ancestors.

Heirlooms, and ancient miracles of Art, Chalice, and salver. Tennyson, Lover's Tale, iv.

What practical man ever left such an heirloom to his countrymen as the "Faery Queen"?
Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 166.

Of the many heirlooms that Venice has bequeathed, one of the best is the doctrine of the refined and noble use of color. C. E. Norton, Church-building in Middle Ages, p. 57.

heirship (ãr'ship), n. [< heir + -ship.] The state or rights of an heir; right of inheriting.

I shall first review the laws of heirship by proximity of blood; and secondly, the laws of heir-ship by appointment.
Sir W. Jones, Commentary on Isæus.

Heirship movables, in Scots law, the best of certain kinds of movables which the heir is entitled to take, besides the heritable estate: a distinction abolished in 1868.

heise (hēz), v. t. A dialectal variant of hoise. [Scotch.]

Heisteria (hīs-tē'ri-ä), n. [NL., named after Lorenz Heister (1683–1758), professor at Helmstedt.] A genus of dicotyledonous choripetalous plants, founded by Jacquin, of the family Olacaceæ, characterized by a much enlarged free fruiting calyx, and twice as many stamens as petals, all bearing subglobose didymous anthers. They are shrubs or trees with entire coriaceous leaves and very small flowers fascicled in the axils. The fruit is a white drupe. The genus embraces upward of 20 species, natives of tropical Africa and America, chiefly the latter. H. coccinea, a native of the West Indies, is very ornamental in cultivation, and is called bois-perdrix (which may be a corruption of pois-perdrix) by the inhabitants of Martinique.

Heisterieæ (hīs-tē-rī'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Heisteria + -eæ.] A tribe of plants, of the family Olacaceæ, proposed by Dumortier in 1829, of which the genus Heisteria was taken as the type. They are now embraced in the tribe Olaceæ.

heisugget, n. A Middle English form of haysuck.

heitt, interj. See hait. Chaucer.

he-jalap (hē'jal-ap), n. A kind of jalap made from the plant Ipomœa Mestitlanica, a native of Mexico.

hejira (hej'i-rä), n. [Also written, less prop., hegira; = Turk. hejra = Pers. Hind. hijra, < Ar. hejira, hijra, the era of Mohammed, commemorating his flight from Mecca, lit. separation, departure; cf. hajr, separation, absence, < hajara, quit, leave.] A departure or flight; specifically, the departure of Mohammed from Mecca to Medina, A. D. 622, to escape the enmity of the Meccans; hence, the Mohammedan era, reckoned by lunar years of 354 and 355 days from July 16th, 622, though the true date of the event is supposed to be about June 19th.

hekt, n. See heck[1], hack[2].

hekistotherm (hē-kis'tō-thèrm), n. [< Gr. ἥκιστος, least, worst (superl. (with compar. ἧσσων), associated with κακός, bad, < ἧκα, still, low, little), + θέρμη, heat.] A plant of Alphonse de Candolle's fifth physiological group in the geographical distribution of plants, denoting such as can subsist with the minimum of heat. Hekistotherms are both boreal (arctic) and austral (antarctic).

hektograph, n. and v. See hectograph.

helcoid (hel'koid), a. [< Gr. ἕλκος, a wound, an ulcer (= L. ulcus: see ulcer), + εἶδος, form.] Resembling an ulcer; ulcerous.

helcology (hel-kol'ō-ji), n. [< Gr. ἕλκος, an ulcer, + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] That branch of pathology which is concerned with the study of ulcers.

helcoplasty (hel'kō-plas-ti), n. [< Gr. ἕλκος, an ulcer, + πλαστός, verbal adj. of πλάσσειν, form, mold.] In surg., the operation of grafting on an ulcer a piece of skin from another part of the patient or from another person, in order to further the healing process.

held[1] (held). Preterit and past participle of hold[1].

held[2]†, heldet, v. Variants of heeld.

Helderberg limestone. See limestone.

hele[1]†, v. and n. A Middle English form of heal[1].

hele[2]†, v. t. A Middle English form of heal[2].

heleles†, a. See healless.

Helena (hel'e-nä), n. [< LGr. ἑλένη or ἑλάνη, a torch, < Gr. Ἑλένη, Helen, in Greek legend the sister of Castor and Pollux and wife of Menelaus.] A meteoric appearance about the masts of ships. See corposant.

helen-flower (hel'en-flou″èr), n. A plant of the genus Helenium.

Helenieæ (hel-ē-nī'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Helenium + -eæ.] A tribe of plants, of the family Asteraceæ, typified by the genus Helenium, introduced by Cassini in 1818. It is nearly equivalent to the Helenioideæ of Bentham and Hooker. The involucre is hardly at all imbricated, the bracts are nearly equal, the disk flowers are numerous, and the achenia have few nerves or angles. It embraces 60 genera.

helenin, helenine (hel'ē-nin), n. [< helen-ium + -in[2], -ine[2].] A substance ($C_{15}H_{20}O_2$) derived from the root of Inula Helenium, or elecampane, by the action of alcohol. It crystallizes in white prisms which have a bitter taste.

helenioid (he-lē'ni-oid), a. [< Heleni-um + -oid.] In bot., resembling Helenium; belonging to the tribe Helenioideæ, of the family Asteraceæ.

Helenioideæ (he-lē-ni-oi'dē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Helenium + -oideæ.] A tribe of composite plants, typified by the genus Helenium. It was introduced by Bentham and Hooker in 1873, who limited it, in the main, to the following characters: the heads heterogamous and radiate; the receptacle naked; the anthers unappendaged; the achenia narrow or turbinate, having four or five angles or eight or more ribs, and provided with chaff; the bracts of the involucre in one or two rows; and both the disk and ray flowers yellow. The tribe embraces 63 genera, mostly coarse herbs or suffrutescent plants, chiefly American, found especially from California to Chili, but most abundant in Mexico.

Helenium autumnale.

helenium (he-lē'ni-um), n. [NL., < Gr. ἑλένιον, a plant, perhaps elecampane, prob. < Ἑλένη, Helen, wife of Menelaus.] 1. Elecampane: used as a specific name. —2. [cap.] A genus of composite plants, founded by Linnæus in 1753, the type of the tribe Helenioideæ. It is characterized by radiate heads, narrow involucral bracts in one or two series, reflexed after flowering, and truncate branches of the style. It comprises herbs with alternate, often decurrent, chiefly entire leaves, and pedunculed solitary or loosely corymbose heads of yellow flowers. There are about 18 species, natives of North and Central America. The best-known species, H. autumnale, is common in alluvial bottoms of the eastern United States, and is called sneezeweed, from its effect on the nose. The leaves and flowers snuffed up in the state of powder produce violent sneezing, and have been used as an errhine. It is also called false sunflower. H. tenuifolium of the southern United States is said to be very poisonous, producing spasms and loss of consciousness.

Heleocharis (hel-ē-ok'a-ris), n. [NL., < Gr. ἕλος (ἑλε-), a marsh, + χαίρειν, rejoice.] An inadmissible emendation of Eleocharis, a genus of rush-like plants of the family Cyperaceæ, founded by Robert Brown in 1810. It is characterized by from 3 to 8 hypogynous bristles, the persistent bulbous base of the style crowning the achenium, leafless stems, and solitary terminal spikes, the lowest bracts being glumaceous. The genus embraces about 100 species, diffused throughout the entire globe. They are collectively called spike-rushes, and are closely related to the bulrushes and club-rushes (Scirpus), though smaller, and like them grow in wet, marshy places. E. palustris, common to both Europe and America, is one of the most abundant species. E. tuberosa, a Chinese species, has edible tubers, and is called matai or petsi. E. sphacelata, of Australia, New Zealand, and the South Sea islands, also has nutritious and palatable tubers.

heliac (hē'li-ak), a. [= F. héliaque = Sp. heliaco = Pg. heliaco = It. eliaco, < LL. heliacus, < Gr. ἡλιακός, of the sun, < ἥλιος, the sun, Doric ἅλιος, ἀέλιος, Epic ἠέλιος, Cretic, Laconic ἀβέλιος, orig. prob. ἀϝέλιος*, ἀϝσέλιος* = Etruscan Usil, the sun-god, whence, according to Festus, the Roman plebeian name Auselius, Aurelius; connected with Gr. ἠώς, Doric ἀώς, Lesbian αἴως, Attic ἕως = L. aurora, the dawn, = E. easter, etc., L. aurum, gold, etc.: see aurora, aurum, east, Easter[1], Eocene, etc. L. sol, the sun, is of different origin: see sol, solar.] Same as heliacal.

heliacal (hē-lī'a-kal), a. [< heliac + -al.] In old astron. and chronol., near the sun: applied to those risings and settings of a star which were as nearly coincident with those of the sun as they could be observed. The stars rise and set a little earlier each successive day. The first rising of a star each year in time to be seen before sunrise is the heliacal rising; its last observable setting after sunset is the heliacal setting. From the time of a star's heliacal setting to that of its heliacal rising it is too near the sun to be seen at all—a period of 30 or 40 days, according to the reckoning of the ancients.

The cosmical ascention of a star we term that, when it ariseth together with the sun, or the same degree of the ecliptick wherein the sun abideth; and that the heliacal, when a star which before for the vicinity of the sun was not visible, being further removed, beginneth to appear.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iv. 13.

heliacally (hē-lī'a-kal-i), adv. In a heliacal manner.

He [Orion] is tempestuous in summer, when he rises heliacally. Dryden, Epic Poetry.

heliæa (hē-li-ē'ä), n. [Gr. ἡλιαία, a public place or hall, in which the chief court of law sat at Athens.] In Athenian antiq.: (a) The institution of the dicastery. (b) The chief of the courts (called heliastic), in which cases of high importance were tried. See dicastery.

helianthaceous (hē″li-an-thā'shius), a. [< Helianthus + -aceous.] In bot., related to Helianthus; belonging to the Heliantheæ or Helianthoideæ.

Heliantheæ (hē-li-an'thē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Helianthus + -eæ.] A tribe of plants of the family Asteraceæ, embracing Helianthus and 150 allied genera. The name was first used by Cassini in 1815 and was adopted by Endlicher, who called it a subtribe, but with substantially its present scope.

Helianthemum (hē-li-an'thē-mum), n. [NL. (Tournefort, 1700), < Gr. ἥλιος, the sun, + ἄνθεμον, a flower, < ἄνθος, a flower.] A genus of dicotyledonous choripetalous plants, belonging to the family Cistaceæ, characterized by a three-valved capsule with three placentæ and a twice-plicate uncinate embryo. The genus embraces about 35 species, natives of North and South America, Europe, and western Asia. They are low herbs or suffrutescent plants with flowers in terminal (or the lower in axillary) racemes, and the very thin petals large and showy. H. Helianthemum, the common European species, is called rock-rose, or, in some of the old herbals, sunflower, from the fact that the flowers open only in sunshine. It is extensively cultivated, and is the original of all the double varieties of rock-rose in gardens. H. Canadense, the frostweed, is common in the eastern United States, and has large yellow flowers.

Helianthideæ (hē″li-an-thid'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Helianthus (-id-) + -eæ.] A tribe of plants, typified by the genus Helianthus, proposed by Dumortier in 1829. See Heliantheæ.

helianthin (hē-li-an′thin), n. [< Helianthus, sunflower, + -in[2].] A coal-tar color used in dyeing. It is the ammonia salt of dimethyl-aniline-azobenzene-sulphonic acid. It produces a fiery orange on silk and wool. Also called gold orange.

helianthoid (hē-li-an′thoid), a. and n. I. a. Of or pertaining to the Helianthoidea; resembling a sea-anemone; zoantharian.

Solitary polypes—hydroid or helianthoid— . . . do not by locomotion subject their bodies to habitual contrasts of condition. H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., § 246.

II. n. One of the Helianthoidea.

Also helianthoidean.

Helianthoidea (hē″li-an-thoi′dē-ạ), n. pl. [NL., < Helianthus + -oidea.] An order or some similar group of malacodermatous or soft-bodied anthozoan or zoantharian polyps, of the class Actinozoa; the sea-anemones, in a broad sense, represented by the Actiniidæ and related families. Groups more or less exactly synonymous are Actiniaria, Hexacoralla, and Malacodermata. Also Helianthoida.

Helianthoideæ (hē″li-an-thoi′dē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Helianthus + -oideæ.] A tribe of plants established by Bentham and Hooker, belonging to the natural order Compositæ, distinguished by a chaffy receptacle, anthers mostly sagittate, pappus never of fine bristles, and leaves commonly opposite. It embraces about 150 genera, found in both hemispheres. The typical genus is Helianthus.

helianthoidean (hē″li-an-thoi′dē-ạn), a. and n. Same as helianthoid.

Helianthus (hē-li-an′thus), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1753) (cf. L. helianthes), < Gr. ἥλιος, the sun, + ἄνθος, flower.] A genus of plants, including the common sunflower, belonging to the family Asteraceæ, tribe Heliantheæ, of which it is the type. It is characterized by yellow sterile rays (rarely wanting), yellow or purple disk-flowers, a chaffy receptacle, and 2 (rarely 3 or 4) caducous awns of the pappus. The genus consists of about 55 species of annual or perennial herbs, natives of America, largely of North America. The common sunflower, H. annuus, is indigenous in North America and identical with H. lenticularis of Douglas. In the wild state its seeds have always constituted an important part of the food of the Indians of the far west. An oil is expressed from them. The leaves serve for fodder, the flowers yield a large amount of honey as well as a durable yellow dye, and the stalks furnish a textile fiber. Some species are tuber-bearing, especially H. tuberosus, the Jerusalem artichoke.

Helias (hē′li-as), n. [NL., < Gr. ἡλιάς, of the sun, < ἥλιος, the sun: see heliac.] Same as Heliornis, 1 (b).

heliast (hē′li-ast), n. [< Gr. ἡλιαστής, < ἡλιαία: see heliæa.] In ancient Athens, one of the body of qualified citizens annually chosen to sit as judges in the courts; a dicast.

The authority which was to be taken from the Areopagus being of a political as well as a judicial character, an oath was required from the heliasts, by which they bound themselves, above all things, to favor neither tyranny nor oligarchy nor in any way to prejudice the sovereignty of the people. Von Ranke, Univ. Hist. (trans.), p. 203.

Heliaster (hē-li-as′tėr), n. [NL., < Gr. ἥλιος, sun, + ἀστήρ, star.] A genus of many-rayed starfishes, of the family Asteriidæ, containing such species as H. kubiniji and H. microbrachia, of the Pacific coast of North America; the sun-stars.

heliastic (hē-li-as′tik), a. [< heliast + -ic.] In ancient Athens, of or pertaining to the heliasts or their functions.

Elaboration and subtlety could have no place in addressing the Heliastic court. Encyc. Brit., XIX. 198.

helical (hel′i-kạl), a. [< helix (helic-) + -al.] Pertaining to or having the form of a helix.

helically (hel′i-kạl-i), adv. In the form of a helix.

Helicea, Heliceæ (hē-lis′ē-ạ, -ē), n. pl. [NL., < Helix (Helic-) + -ea, -eæ.] Same as Helicidæ.

heliced (hē′list), a. [< L. helix (helic-), helix, + -ed[2].] Having helices; decorated with helices. [Rare.]

A tholus or dome, which is richly ornamented, and terminates in a foliated and heliced acroterium. Encyc. Brit., II. 411.

helices, n. Plural of helix.

Helichryseæ (hē-li-kris′ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Helichrysum + -eæ.] In Lindley's system (1845), a tribe of plants, of the family Asteraceæ, having Helichrysum as the type, and nearly equivalent to the present tribe Inuleæ. The name was first used by Lessing in 1832.

Helichrysum (hē-li-krī′sum), n. [NL., irreg. < Gr. ἥλιος, the sun, + χρυσός, golden.] A large genus of composite plants, of the tribe Inuleæ, characterized by its commonly yellow flowers, naked receptacle, setose pappus, very conspicuous colored and petaloid involucre, and generally alternate entire leaves. The genus embraces about 300 species of herbaceous or shrubby plants, natives of Europe, Asia, Africa, and Australasia. The parts of the flower persist after drying, which has gained for these plants the name of everlasting or immortelles, and they are in common use in funeral wreaths, crosses, etc. Among the commoner species in cultivation are H. bracteatum, H. petiolatum, and H. odoratissimum. H. apiculatum affords herbage in the worst deserts of Australia. H. serpyllifolium of South Africa is known as Hottentot's tea, and H. nudifolium, from the same region, is called Kafir-tea.

Helicia (hē-lis′i-ạ), n. [NL. (Loureiro, 1790), so called from the spirally revolute segments of the perianth, < Gr. ἕλιξ, a spiral: see helix.] A genus of dicotyledonous apetalous plants, of the family Proteaceæ, distinguished by the slender tube of the perianth, and four spatulate segments, each bearing an anther. The fruit is hard, indehiscent, nearly globular, and contains one or two seeds. The genus comprises about 25 species of trees and shrubs with mostly alternate leaves, natives of tropical Asia to Japan, and Australia. H. prœalta of Queensland is a lofty tree, attaining a height of 100 feet. The Queensland nut-tree, formerly known as H. ternifolia, is now referred to the genus Macadamia (which see). Impressions of leaves belonging to this genus have been found in the Miocene of Italy and the Oligocene of Styria; and two fossil species, H. ambigua and H. Sotzkiana, have been described.

Helicidæ (hē-lis′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Helix (Helic-) + -idæ.] A family of geophilous pulmonate gastropods, typified by the genus Helix. It has been used with varying limits. Formerly it included all or almost all the inoperculate shell-bearing forms, and according to some the shell-less forms (slugs). Later it was more and more restricted, and is now generally confined to species with an entire jaw, the marginal teeth of the radula bicuspid or tricuspid and transverse, and a spiral shell into which the soft parts are retractile. It is a very large assemblage of land-shells of cosmopolitan distribution and of considerable range of variation. See cuts under Bulimus, Gasteropoda, and Pulmonata. Also Helicea, Heliceæ, and Colimacidæ.

heliciform (hē-lis′i-fôrm), a. [< Gr. ἕλιξ (ἑλικ-), a spiral (see helix), + L. forma, shape.] Having the form of a helix; helical.

helicine (hel′i-sin), a. [< Gr. ἕλιξ (ἑλικ-), a spiral (see helix), + -ine[1].] In anat.: (a) Coiled: as, the helicine arteries (the small coiling arterial twigs of the penis or clitoris). (b) Pertaining to the helix of the ear: as, the helicine fossa.

helicinian (hel-i-sin′i-ạn), a. [< helicine + -ian.] In conch., helicine.

helicite (hel′i-sīt), n. [< Gr. ἕλιξ (ἑλικ-), a spiral (see helix), + -ite[2].] A fossil snail-shell, as a species of Helix or some related genus.

helicograph (hel′i-kō-grȧf), n. [< Gr. ἕλιξ (ἑλικ-), a spiral (see helix), + γράφειν, write.] A drawing-instrument for describing a spiral line. A small wheel carrying a pencil rotates on a screw-shaft, and revolves around a fixed point, moving toward or from the center, according to the direction of revolution.

Helicograph.

helicogyrate (hel′i-kō-jī′rāt), a. [< Gr. ἕλιξ (ἑλικ-), a spiral (see helix), + γῦρος, a ring, circle: see helix and gyre.] In bot., surrounded by an obliquely placed ring, as the spore-cases of ★Trichomanes.

helicoid (hel′i-koid), a. and n. [< Gr. ἑλικοειδής, of winding or spiral form, < ἕλιξ (ἑλικ-), a spiral (see helix), + εἶδος, form.] I. a. 1. Pertaining to or having the form of a helix; screw-shaped; coiled like a helix. See cut under Foraminifera. Also helicoidal.—2. In conch., pertaining to or resembling the Helicidæ.—Helicoid cyme, in bot., same as bostryx.—Helicoid dichotomy, in bot., a term proposed by Sachs for a certain form of the branching of stems in which the sympodium is composed entirely of left-hand or entirely of right-hand branches, as the case may be. It is largely a hypothetical condition, and its actual occurrence in nature is doubtful, although it is possibly found in the leaf of Adiantum pedatum.—Helicoid parabola, in math., the curve which arises when the axis of the common parabola is bent round into the periphery of a circle, and which is a line then passing through the extremities of the ordinates, which converge toward the center of the circle.—Helicoid spores, in bot., spores that are coiled more or less in the form of a helix, as in the genus Helicoma.

II. n. In geom., a warped surface generated by a straight line so moving as always to cut or touch a fixed helix.—Developable helicoid, or screw-surface, a surface all the generators of which are the tangents to a fixed helix.—Oblique helicoid, a warped surface every generatrix of which passes through a fixed helix and makes a constant angle with its axis.—Right helicoid, or skew helicoid, a surface every generator of which passes through a fixed helix, and is perpendicular to its axis.

helicoidal (hel-i-koi′dạl), a. [< helicoid + -al.] Same as helicoid, 1.

The screw consists of two helicoidal pallets covered with varnished silk. Science, III. 54.

helicometry (hel-i-kom′e-tri), n. [< Gr. ἕλιξ (ἑλικ-), a spiral (see helix), + μέτρον, measure.] The art of measuring or drawing spiral lines on a plane.

helicon (hel′i-kon), n. [Gr. ἑλικών, a nine-stringed instrument, appar. the same as ἑλίκων, the thread spun from the distaff to the spindle, < ἕλιξ (ἑλικ-), a spiral, a helix: see helix.] In music: (a) An ancient acoustical instrument, consisting of several strings so disposed upon a resonance-box that their lengths could be geometrically adjusted, and thus various musical intervals demonstrated. (b) A recently invented brass wind-instrument, used in bands. It is a spiral tube of large size, and is carried over the shoulder. Its lowest note is two octaves below F or E flat in the bass clef.

Helicon, def. (b).

Heliconia (hel-i-kō′ni-ạ), n. [NL., fem. of L. Heliconius: see Heliconian.] 1. Same as Heliconius.—2. A name given by Linnæus in 1771 to Bihai, a genus of monocotyledonous plants belonging to the family Musaceæ, characterized by free sepals, short corolla-tube, and ovary-cells having one ovule. They are nearly herbaceous, banana-like plants with terminal inflorescence. There are about 25 species, natives of tropical America, 5 of which are found in the West Indies, where they are called bastard plantain. The shoots of B. psittacorum and the fruit of B. Bihai (Musa Bihai of Linnæus) are edible. B. Mariæ, named after the Empress of Russia, is a native of the United States of Colombia, attains a height of from 12 to 15 feet, and furnishes a useful fiber. It is very ornamental, bearing a spike of red flowers 2½ feet in length.

Heliconian (hel-i-kō′ni-ạn), a. [< L. Heliconius, < Gr. Ἑλικώνιος, of Helicon, < Ἑλικών, Helicon: see def.] Pertaining to or obtained from Helicon, a mountain of Bœotia in Greece, from which flowed Aganippe and Hippocrene, two fountains sacred to the Muses. It was held to be a favorite retreat of Apollo and the Muses.

Shutting reasons up in rhythm,
Or Heliconian honey in living words,
To make a truth less harsh.
Tennyson, Lucretius.

The Heliconian maids, the Muses.

The Heliconian Maids in pleasant groves delight.
Drayton, Polyolbion, v. 223.

heliconideous (hel″i-kō-nid′ē-us), a. Of or pertaining to the Heliconiidæ.

Species of Heliconia mimic Mechanitis, and every species of Napeogenes mimics some other Heliconideous butterfly. A. R. Wallace, Nat. Select., p. 85.

Heliconiidæ (hel″i-kō-nī′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Heliconius + -idæ.] The Heliconiinæ rated as a family. Also written Heliconidæ.

Heliconiinæ (hel-i-kō-ni-ī′nē), n. pl. [NL., < Heliconius + -inæ.] A subfamily group of vanessoid butterflies, containing the American genera Heliconius and Eueides, with produced wings, closed discoidal cellule, proportionately long antennæ and abdomen, and slender legs.

heliconine (hel-i-kō′nin), a. Same as heliconoid.

Heliconius (hel-i-kō′ni-us), n. [NL., < L. Heliconius, of Helicon: see Heliconian.] The typical genus of the subfamily Heliconiinæ. Also Heliconia.

heliconoid (hel-i-kō′noid), a. [< Helicon-ius + -oid.] Resembling or related to butterflies of the genus Heliconius; belonging to the Heliconiinæ.

The immense variety of the Heliconoid butterflies. Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLII. 355.

helicosophy† (hel-i-kos′ō-fi), n. [< Gr. ἕλιξ (ἑλικ-), a spiral (see helix), + σοφία, wisdom. Cf. philosophy.] The geometry of spiral curves.

Helicosophie is an arte mathematicall which demonstrateth the designing of all spirall lines in plain or cylinder, cone, sphere, conoid, and sphearoid, and their properties appertaining. Dee, Pref. to Euclid (1570).

helicotrema (hel″i-kō-trē′mä), n.; pl. helicotremata (-ma-tä). [NL., < Gr. ἕλιξ (ἑλικ-), a spiral (see helix), + τρῆμα, a hole.] In anat., the opening at the summit of the cochlea where the scala vestibuli and scala tympani communicate.

Helicteræ (hel-ik-tē′rē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Helicteres + -eæ.] A tribe of dicotyledonous polypetalous plants, of the family Sterculiaceæ, distinguished by its hermaphrodite flowers, with 5 deciduous petals, and generally from 5 to 15 anthers on a column. The tribe embraces 5 genera, trees and shrubs of the tropical regions of both hemispheres.

Helicteres (hel-ik-tē′rēz), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1737) (so named with ref. to the twisted carpels), < Gr. ἑλικτήρ, anything twisted or spiral, as an armlet, an ear-ring, etc., < ἑλίσσειν, turn round or about, twist: see helix.] A genus of plants, belonging to the family Sterculiaceæ. They are trees and shrubs covered with branching or stellate down, with simple heart-shaped leaves, and axillary flowers, generally in clusters. The stamens are united into a column, bearing the anthers at the top. The fruit is composed of 5 carpels twisted together. The genus comprises about 40 species, inhabiting the warmer regions of both hemispheres. H. Isora of India and H. Jamaicensis of the West Indies are the best-known species, both of which are called screw-tree. The fruit is called twisted-stick, twisted-horn, or twisty, and is supposed by the natives of India to be a remedy for colic.

Helictidinæ (he-lik-ti-dī′nē), n. pl. [NL., < Helictis (-id-) + -inæ.] A subfamily of carnivorous quadrupeds, of the family Mustelidæ, typified by the genus Helictis. The auditory bullæ are elongated and closely applied to the paroccipitals, the palate is moderately emarginate, the back upper molar is transverse with a narrow inner ledge, and the sectorial tooth has two inner cusps.

Helictis (he-lik′tis), n. [NL., < Gr. (prob.) ἕλος, marsh, + ἴκτις, a kind of weasel.] A peculiar genus of the family Mustelidæ, the type of a subfamily Helictidinæ, containing such species as the Chinese H. moschata and the Indian H. nepalensis.

helingt, n. An obsolete form of *healing*2.

Heliocarpus (hē″li-ō-kär′pus), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1753), < Gr. ἥλιος, the sun, + καρπός, fruit.] A genus of dicotyledonous choripetalous plants, belonging to the family Malvaceæ, tribe Grewieæ. It is chiefly characterized by its compressed 2-valved capsule, which is ciliated round the margin with a row of radiating bristles. The genus embraces some 15 or 20 species of trees or shrubs with 3-lobed serrate leaves, and small flowers in cymules which are arranged in a terminal panicle. They are natives of tropical America. The resemblance of the fruits to little suns is expressed in the generic name as well as in the popular name, sun-fruit, by which these plants are known.

heliocentric (hē″li-ō-sen′trik), a. [< Gr. ἥλιος, the sun, + κέντρον, center.] In astron., referred to the sun as a center; appearing as if seen from the sun's center. The heliocentric place of a planet is the place it would occupy in the celestial sphere if viewed from the center of the sun. The heliocentric latitude of a planet is the inclination of a line drawn between the center of the sun and the center of the planet to the plane of the ecliptic. The heliocentric longitude of a planet is the angle between two lines drawn from the sun, one in the direction of the first of Aries, the other to the foot of a perpendicular which is dropped from the planet upon the plane of the ecliptic, the angle being measured eastward from the first of Aries.

heliocentrical (hē″li-ō-sen′tri-kal), a. [< heliocentric + -al.] Same as heliocentric.

heliocentricity (hē″li-ō-sen-tris′i-ti), n. [< heliocentric + -ity.] The state or condition of being heliocentric; relation to the sun as a center.

Until the Copernicans have convinced the Ptolemaists, our readers may as well refuse to acknowledge the heliocentricity of things. N. A. Rev., CXXVI. 163.

heliochromic (hē″li-ō-krō′mik), a. [< heliochromy + -ic.] Pertaining to, used in, or produced by heliochromy.

Yellow is found very difficult to transfer to the heliochromic plate at the same time with other colors. Silver Sunbeam, p. 22.

heliochromotype (hē″li-ō-krō′mō-tīp), n. [< Gr. ἥλιος, the sun, + χρῶμα, color, + τύπος, impression.] A photograph which reproduces the natural colors of the object. Such photographs have not yet (1889) been obtained in permanent form by any direct process.

heliochromy (hē-li-ok′rō-mi), n. [As heliochrome* (< Gr. ἥλιος, the sun, + χρῶμα, color) + *-y*3.] In photog., the art of producing photographs in the natural colors.

heliochrysin (hē-li-ō-krī′sin), n. [< Gr. ἥλιος, the sun, + χρυσός, gold, + *-in*2.] A coal-tar color used in dyeing. It is the sodium salt of tetranitro-naphthol. It dyes fine orange shades on wool and silk, but is not fast to light, and is of little technical importance. Also called sun-gold.

heliocomete (hē″li-ō-kom′ēt), n. [< Gr. ἥλιος, the sun, + κομήτης, a comet: see comet.] An appearance of a tail of light attached to the sun and visible after its setting.

heliod (hē′li-ōd), n. [< Gr. ἥλιος, the sun, + E. od, q. v.] The supposed odic force of the sun. Von Reichenbach.

helio-electric (hē″li-ō-ē-lek′trik), a. [< Gr. ἥλιος, the sun, + E. electric.] Pertaining to terrestrial electrical phenomena as caused by the sun.

The helio-electric theory of the perturbations of terrestrial magnetism. Nature, XXX. 47.

helio-engraving (hē″li-ō-en-grā′ving), n. [< Gr. ἥλιος, the sun, + E. engraving.] Same as heliogravure.

The helio-engraving by etching was brought to a high degree of completion by Klic, of Vienna, in 1883. Sci. Amer., N. S., LV. 49.

heliograph (hē′li-ō-grȧf), n. [< Gr. ἥλιος, the sun, + γράφειν, write.] 1. A heliotrope; especially, a movable mirror used in signaling, surveying, etc., to flash a beam of light to a distance. In signaling the flashes are caused to follow one another in accordance with a signal-code. The mirror is mounted on a tripod, and has a part of the silvering removed from the back at the center. Two sights are provided in front with a screen. The tripod is set up, and a distant station is sighted through the hole in the mirror. The beam of light is then directed through both sights, and is seen at the distant station. By means of the Morse key, which causes the mirror to move through a limited arc, telegraphic signals can be flashed to a distance of many miles.

2. In photog.: (a) An instrument for taking photographs of the sun. (b) A picture taken by heliography; a photograph.

heliograph (hē′li-ō-grȧf), v. t. [< heliograph, n.] 1. To communicate or signal by means of a heliograph.

There were all the means of heliographing at Korti. Athenæum, Jan. 7, 1888, p. 10.

2. To photograph.

When the cloth tracings have to be heliographed, raw sienna is also added to the ink. Workshop Receipts, 2d ser., p. 192.

heliographer (hē-li-og′rą-fėr), n. One who practises heliography.

heliographic (hē″li-ō-graf′ik), a. [< heliograph, heliography, + -ic.] 1. Of or pertaining to the heliograph.—2. Of or pertaining to heliography, in any sense of that word.—Heliographic engraving, an early photo-engraving process invented by Niepce de St. Victor. A metallic plate was coated with bitumen and placed beneath and in contact with a line-engraving, and exposed to light. By the combined action of light and the oxygen of the air the parts of the bitumen between the lines of the engraving were rendered insoluble to the ordinary solvent, which would, however, act upon the unchanged parts beneath the lines, dissolving them, and laying bare the metal, which could then be etched with acid, freed from its bituminous covering, and used in printing. See etching, photo-engraving.—Heliographic latitude and longitude, coördinates of points on the sun referred to the axis of revolution of that luminary and to the node of its equator upon the ecliptic.

heliographical (hē″li-ō-graf′i-kal), a. [< heliographic + -al.] Same as heliographic.

The period of rotation seems . . . to vary somewhat in different years even for [solar] spots in the same heliographical latitude. Newcomb and Holden, Astron., p. 290.

heliography (hē-li-og′rą-fi), n. [< Gr. ἥλιος, the sun, + -γραφία, < γράφειν, write.] 1. A method of signaling between distant points by means of the heliograph.—2. In general, photography; specifically, some special photographic process; photographic engraving. See the extract, and heliographic engraving, under heliographic.

Niepce, in his experiments, discarded the use of the silver salts, and substituted in their place a resinous substance denominated the "Bitumen of Judæa." He named his process Heliography, or "Sun-drawing." Silver Sunbeam, p. 14.

3. The description and mapping of the surface of the sun.

heliogravure (hē″li-ō-grā′vūr or hā″li-ō-gra-vür′), n. [< F. héliogravure, < Gr. ἥλιος, the sun, + F. gravure, engraving.] Photo-engraving, or a print obtained by this process; strictly, a photo-engraved metal plate. See heliotypy and photo-engraving. Also called helio-engraving.

helioid (hē′li-oid), a. [< Gr. ἡλιοειδής, like the sun, < ἥλιος, the sun, + εἶδος, form.] Resembling the sun.

heliolater (hē-li-ol′ą-tėr), n. [< heliolat-ry + *-er*1.] A worshiper of the sun.

heliolatrous (hē-li-ol′ą-trus), a. [< heliolatr-y + -ous.] Worshiping the sun.

heliolatry (hē-li-ol′ą-tri), n. [< Gr. ἥλιος, the sun, + λατρεία, worship.] The worship of the sun. See sun-worship.

heliolite (hē′li-ō-līt), n. [< Gr. ἥλιος, the sun, + λίθος, a stone.] Same as sunstone.

heliology (hē-li-ol′ō-ji), n. [< Gr. ἥλιος, the sun, + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] The science of the sun.

It would be useful to write a paper on the evolution of sunrayism, or perhaps of heliology, and to show how the ideas of a sun as a fountain of light and heat and chemical force arose. Spectator, April 24, 1888, p. 545.

heliometer (hē-li-om′e-tėr), n. [< Gr. ἥλιος, the sun, + μέτρον, a measure.] An astronomical instrument, consisting of a telescope having its objective sawed across in a plane passing through the optical axis, and each part arranged to move by sliding past the other, its exact position being shown by a micrometer-screw. Each half of the objective forms its own image of a star, this image moving with the half-objective which forms it. Thus, the image of one star, formed by one half of the objective, can be brought into coincidence with the image of another, formed by the other half, and by means of the micrometer the distance apart of the half-lenses, and consequently the angular distance of the two stars, can be very accurately measured, while the position-angle is determined by the direction of the line of separation of the semi-lenses. This instrument is much employed in investigations into the parallax of the fixed stars, as well as for other purposes. As its name implies, it was originally devised for measuring the diameter of the sun.

heliometric (hē″li-ō-met′rik), a. [As heliometer + -ic.] Pertaining to or ascertained or made by means of the heliometer; also, relating to measurements of the sun.

The publication of the photographic and heliometric results is waited for with much interest. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXX. 25.

heliometrical (hē″li-ō-met′ri-kal), a. [< heliometric + -al.] Same as heliometric.

heliometrically (hē″li-ō-met′ri-kal-i), adv. By means of the heliometer; by the heliometric method.

heliophag (hē′li-ō-fag), n. [As heliophag-ous.] In biol., any heliophagous part or substance of an animal, as a pigment-cell. [Rare.]

But in animals it is probable that the pigment granules are only the receivers of energy—the heliophags, as we shall call them. Micros. Science, XXVII. 287.

heliophagous (hē-li-of′ą-gus), a. [< Gr. ἥλιος, the sun, + φαγεῖν, eat, devour, + -ous.] Receiving and absorbing the energy of sunlight, or solar heat, in some special (chemical) manner. The chlorophyl of plants and the pigment-cells of animals are heliophagous. [Rare.]

The concentration of light is stated to be the condition essential for the most perfect heliophagous organ. Micros. Science, XXVII. 290.

Heliophila (hē-li-of′i-lą), n. [NL., < Gr. ἥλιος, the sun, + φίλος, loving.] A genus of plants, of the family Brassicaceæ and tribe Sisymbrieæ, founded by Linnæus and consisting of about 60 species of South African herbs or shrubs with alternate leaves, racemes of white, pink, or blue flowers having the sepals equal at the base, and pendulous or deflexed pods. This and the closely allied genus Chamira were erected into a tribe (Heliophileæ) by the elder De Candolle, on account of their transversely folded cotyledons.

Heliophileæ (hē″li-ō-fil′ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (A. P. de Candolle, 1821), ‹ Heliophila + -eæ.] A tribe of cruciferous plants, of which Heliophila is the typical genus.

Heliophilidæ (hē″li-ō-fil′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., ‹ Heliophila + -idæ.] In Lindley's system (1845), a tribe of plants, of the family Brassicaceæ, embracing the genera Heliophila and Chamira, now included in the tribe Sisymbrieæ. It has the same scope as the Heliophileæ of de Candolle.

heliophilous (hē-li-of′i-lus), a. [‹ Gr. ἥλιος, the sun, + φίλος, loving, + -ous.] Fond of the sun; attracted by or becoming most active in sunlight.

heliophobic (hē″li-ō-fō′bik), a. [‹ Gr. ἥλιος, the sun, + φοβεῖσθαι, fear.] Fearing or shunning sunlight.

A heliophobic spore may often find enough of shade among the rhizoids of other pre-existing weeds, . . . so that finally a round exposed protuberance may be entirely covered with algæ whose spores are negatively heliotropic.
Trans. Roy. Soc. Edinburgh, XXXII. 598.

Heliopora (hē″li-op′ō-rä), n. [NL., ‹ Gr. ἥλιος, the sun, + πόρος, pore. See pore[2].] The typical genus of the family Helioporidæ. De Blainville, 1830.

Heliopora seems to differ from all the other Alcyonarians except Corallium. H. N. Moseley.

heliopore (hē′li-ō-pōr), a. and n. I. a. Of or pertaining to the Helioporidæ; helioporidian.
II. n. A sun-coral; a member of the genus Heliopora or family Helioporidæ.

Helioporidæ (hē″li-ō-por′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., ‹ Heliopora + -idæ.] A family of fossil and recent corals having affinities with the Octocoralla or Alcyonaria, the common red coral of commerce. They were formerly regarded as millepores.

Helioporinæ (hē″li-ō-pō-rī′nē), n. pl. Corals regarded by Dana as a subfamily of Milleporidæ: now believed to be alcyonarians.

Heliopsideæ (hē″li-op-sid′ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., ‹ Heliopsis (-id-) + -eæ.] A division of the tribe Helianthea, of the family Asteraceæ, made by Cassini, with Heliopsis as the typical genus.

Heliopsis (hē-li-op′sis), n. [NL. (Persoon, 1807), ‹ Gr. ἥλιος, the sun, + ὄψις, likeness.] A genus of plants, of the family Asteraceæ and tribe Helianthea, distinguished by its ligulate fertile rays, hermaphrodite disk-flowers, and chaffy conical receptacle without pappus. The plants are mostly perennial herbs, with showy yellow flowers, pedunculate heads, and ovate, petioled, opposite leaves. The genus comprises about 7 species.

Heliornis (hē-li-ôr′nis), n. [NL., ‹ Gr. ἥλιος, the sun, + ὄρνις, a bird.] 1. In ornith.: (a) A genus of lobiped birds, typical of the family Heliornithidæ; the South American sun-birds. There is but one species, H. surinamensis or H. fulica. Bonnaterre, 1790. Podoa (Illiger, 1811) is the same. (b) A genus of birds, of the family Eurypygidæ; the sun-bitterns. Also called Helias. J. F. Boie, 1826. — 2. In entom., a genus of lepidopterous insects. Dalman, 1820.

Sun-bird or Sun-grebe (Heliornis fulica).

Heliornithidæ (hē″li-ô-nith′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., ‹ Heliornis (-ornith-) + -idæ.] A family of birds of uncertain position, typified by the genus Heliornis; the sun-birds, sun-grebes, coot-grebes, or finfoots. They are characterized by pinniped or lobate feet like those of grebes or coots, a fan-shaped tail of 18 feathers, plumage not aftershafted, and a long slim neck with a small head.

helioscope (hē′li-ō-skōp), n. [‹ Gr. ἡλιοσκόπιος, looking to the sun, ‹ ἥλιος, the sun, + σκοπεῖν, view.] A form of telescope fitted for viewing the sun without pain or injury to the eyes, as an instrument made with colored glasses or glasses blackened by smoke, or with mirrors formed simply of surfaces of transparent glass, which reflect but a small proportion of light.

helioscopic (hē″li-ō-skop′ik), a. [‹ helioscope + -ic.] Pertaining to or made by means of a helioscope: as, helioscopic observations.

heliosis (hē-li-ō′sis), n. [NL., ‹ Gr. ἡλιοῦσθαι, live in the sun, be exposed to the sun, ‹ ἥλιος, the sun.] 1. In bot., the production of burned patches or spots on leaves by the concentration of the rays of the sun through inequalities of the glass of conservatories, or through drops of water resting on the leaves. Frequently the supposed cases of heliosis are due to some physiological or pathological condition of the plant. These spots furnish a suitable habitation for many minute fungi, which are often regarded as the cause of them.
2. In med.: (a) Treatment of disease in certain cases by exposure to the rays of the sun. (b) Sunstroke.

heliospherical (hē″li-ō-sfer′i-kal), a. [‹ Gr. ἥλιος, the sun, + σφαιρικός, spherical: see spheric, spherical.] Round as the sun.

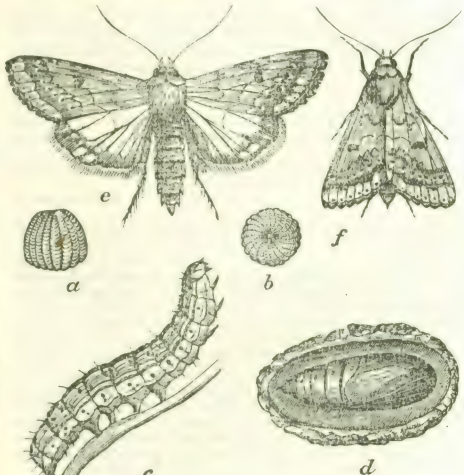
heliostat (hē′li-ō-stat), n. [‹ Gr. ἥλιος, the sun, + στατός, fixed, ‹ ἱστάναι, set up, stand: see static.] An instrument consisting of a mirror carried by clockwork in such a way as to reflect the sun's rays in a fixed direction. The name is also improperly applied to a porte-lumière.



Heliostat.
(Astrophysical Observatory, Smithsonian Institution.)
The clock, c, through the sector, s, turns the polar axis, p, counteracting the effect of the daily rotation of the earth. The arm, a, attached to the polar axis may so be kept pointed at the sun and through the linkage, l, turns the mirror, m, so that the reflected sunlight is constant in direction, generally southward. The weight of the mirror, m, is taken from the bearing of the vertical or azimuth axis, v, by flotation on mercury in m; from its horizontal or altitude axes at h, h, by the springs and sectors at s.

heliothid (hē-li-oth′id), a. and n. I. a. Pertaining to or having the characters of the Heliothidæ.
II. n. One of the Heliothidæ.

Heliothidæ (hē-li-oth′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., ‹ Heliothis + -idæ.] A family of noctuid moths, typified by the genus Heliothis. Also written Heliothides and Heliothidi.

Heliothis (hē-li-ō′this), n. [NL. (Ochsenheimer, 1816), prob. for Heliotis*, ‹ Gr. ἡλιῶτις, prop. adj., fem. of ἡλιώτης, of the sun, but used as a noun, the moon, ‹ ἥλιος, the sun.] A genus of noctuid moths, giving name to the family Heliothidæ. The antennæ are pubescent, the thorax and abdomen smooth and not tufted, and the fore wings slightly angulated. The best-known species is H. armigera, which is widely distributed in both the old and the new world. It is usually of a pale clay-color, with the fore wings variegated with pale-olive and dark-rufous, a dark spot in the middle of the wing being especially conspicuous. The larva, known as the boll-worm and corn-worm, is very variable in color, but is always marked with longitudinal dark and light lines and covered with black setigerous spots. It is especially injurious to the fruit of cotton, maize, and the tomato. H. marginata is known as the bordered sallow.

Heliothis armigera.
a, b, egg, side and top views; c, caterpillar; d, chrysalis in earthen cocoon; e, f, moth with wings expanded and closed. (All, except a and b, of natural size.)

heliotrope (hē′li-ō-trōp), n. [Also heliotropion, q. v.; = F. héliotrope = Sp. Pg. heliotropio = It. eliotropio, ‹ L. heliotropium, ‹ Gr. ἡλιοτρόπιον, a sun-dial, also a plant, the heliotrope, turnsol (in this sense also ἡλιοτρόπος, and so called because the flowers were supposed to turn toward the sun, or because they appear at the summer solstice), also a green stone streaked with red, ‹ ἥλιος, the sun, + τρέπειν, turn, τροπή, a turning.] 1†. In astron., an instrument for showing when the sun arrives at the solstitial points.

An obelisk in a garden or park might be both an embellishment and a heliotrope.
Gilbert White, Nat. Hist. of Selborne, xliv.

2. A mirror arranged with a telescope and sights so as to flash a reflection of the sun to a great distance. The instrument is used in geodetic triangulation to mark a station. See heliograph, 1.

Luminous signals — argand lamps by night and heliotropes by day — are exclusively used in [the Great Survey of] India. Clarke, Geodesy, p. 33.

3. A plant of the genus Heliotropium, of the family Boraginaceæ. The species are herbs or shrubs, mostly natives of the warmer parts of the world. They have alternate leaves and small purplish or lilac flowers usually disposed in scorpioid cymes. One species, H. Europæum, is a common European weed. H. Peruvianum, the Peruvian heliotrope, has long been a favorite garden-plant, on account of the fragrance of its flowers. The name has also been given to a composite plant, the winter heliotrope. Also called turnsol.

'Tis an observation of flatterers that they are like the heliotrope; they open only toward the sun, but shut and contract themselves . . . in cloudy weather.
Government of the Tongue.

The roses, the mignonette, the heliotropes, all combined their fragrance to refresh the air.
T. Hook, Gilbert Gurney.

4. The bluish-purple or pinkish-lilac color of some flowers of the heliotrope. — 5. A mineral, a subspecies of quartz, of a deep-green color, peculiarly pleasant to the eye. It is usually variegated with blood-red or yellowish dots of jasper, and is more or less translucent. Also called blood-stone. — False heliotrope, Tournefortia heliotropoides. See Tournefortia. — Indian heliotrope, Heliotropium Indicum. — Winter heliotrope, Petasites fragrans, a composite plant.

heliotroper (hē′li-ō-trō-pėr), n. A person employed to manipulate a heliotrope or heliograph.

Heliotropers were also employed at the observing stations to flash instructions to the signallers.
Encyc. Brit., XXII. 698.

heliotropic (hē″li-ō-trop′ik), a. [As heliotrop-y + -ic.] Turning or tending to turn toward the sun; specifically, of, pertaining to, or characterized by heliotropism.

heliotropical (hē″li-ō-trop′i-kal), a. [‹ heliotropic + -al.] Same as heliotropic.

heliotropically (hē″li-ō-trop′i-kal-i), adv. In a heliotropic manner; by or with heliotropism. Darwin.

Heliotropieæ (hē″li-ō-trō-pī′ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., ‹ Heliotropium + -eæ.] A tribe of dicotyledonous sympetalous plants, of the family Boraginaceæ, distinguished mainly by the style, which is generally entire, with the stigma forming a complete ring round the top. The tribe comprises about 250 species of herbs, trees, and shrubs, comprised under a few genera, inhabiting the warm and temperate regions of both hemispheres. It includes Heliotropium as the type, and related genera.

heliotropion†, n. [‹ Gr. ἡλιοτρόπιον: see heliotrope.] The plant heliotrope; the turnsol.

Apollo's heliotropion then shall stoop,
And Venus' hyacinth shall vail her top.
Greene, Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay.

heliotropism (hē-li-ot′rō-pizm), n. [As heliotrop-y + -ism.] In biol., the tendency to move or bend toward (positive heliotropism) or in some cases away from (negative heliotropism) the light: differing from galvanotropism chiefly in that the rays of light take the place of the curves of the current. Thus the stems of plants grown in a window, or under other conditions in which light falls laterally upon them, curve toward the light; and if their position is reversed, they soon turn again toward the side of greatest illumination. The leaves arrange themselves so that the rays of light fall as nearly as possible perpendicularly upon their upper surfaces, and the stem curves so as to direct its apex toward the source of light. Organs which behave in this way are said to be affected by positive heliotropism or to be simply heliotropic. On the other hand, certain organs upon which light also falls laterally curve in an opposite direction — that is, the apex is turned away from the source of light. Organs exhibiting this kind of curvature are said to be negatively heliotropic or apheliotropic. This condition is most frequently observed in roots. A still further condition, which has been called transverse heliotropism by Frank and diaheliotropism by Darwin, is the condition under which certain organs tend to place their long axes perpendicular to the direction of the incident rays. The precise action of light in producing these various modifications is not well understood, but, as the studies of Vines have shown, it is probably largely due to modifications of the turgescence of the growing cells. Also heliotropy.

Heliotropium (hē″li-ō-trō′pi-um), n. [NL., < Gr. ἡλιοτρόπιον, heliotrope: see heliotrope.] A genus of plants, of the family Boraginaceæ and tribe Heliotropicæ. It is distinguished by the form of its corolla, which is that of a salver or funnel and generally small, and its dry fruit, which commonly separates into 4 nutlets. The genus includes about 220 species of herbs and shrubs, with white or lilac flowers, inhabiting the warmer and temperate regions of both hemispheres. H. Indicum, a native of nearly all tropical countries, is called wild clary in the West Indies. H. Peruvianum is the common heliotrope of gardens. See heliotrope.

heliotropy (hē′li-ō-trō-pi), n. [< Gr. ἥλιος, the sun, + τροπή, a turning. Cf. heliotrope.] Same as heliotropism.

heliotype (hē′li-ō-tīp), n. and a. [< Gr. ἥλιος, the sun, + τύπος, impression: see type.] I. n. A picture or print produced by the process of heliotypy; also, the process itself.

II. a. Of or pertaining to heliotypy or its processes or result. Also heliotypic.—Heliotype process. See heliotypy.

heliotype (hē′li-ō-tīp), v.; pret. and pp. heliotyped, ppr. heliotyping. [< heliotype, n.] I. trans. To produce a heliotype picture of.

II. intrans. To practise heliotypy; produce a picture by direct impression in printing-ink.

heliotypic (hē″li-ō-tip′ik), a. [As heliotype + -ic.] Same as heliotype.

heliotypy (hē′li-ō-tī-pi), n. [As heliotype + -y.] A photographic process in which from an ordinary negative is made a positive of such character that from it a direct impression in ink can be obtained by means of a printing-press. In the Edwards process, as practised in the United States, a film of gelatin sensitized with bichromate of potash, and having chrome alum incorporated with it, is formed on glass, stripped off when dry, and exposed to light during a certain time under the negative. The film is then washed to remove the sensitive principle, and is attached to a plate of metal or other solid back. Those parts of the film which have been affected by the light during exposure under the negative are left in such condition that they can be made to take printing ink, while the parts not affected, owing to the opacity of the corresponding parts of the negative, resist the ink. This process depends upon the fact that a gelatin film sensitized with bichromate of potash becomes by the action of light insoluble in water, while the parts which have been shielded from the light, and from which the potash has been eliminated after the exposure, swell when moistened. The films are technically called skins. In other processes a mold of gutta-percha or other material is prepared from the film, and copper is deposited on this by electrotypy. The resulting plate can be printed on an ordinary printing-press. See photogravure and photo-engraving.

Heliozoa (hē″li-ō-zō′ä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ἥλιος, the sun, + ζῷον, an animal.] A name proposed by Hertwig and Lesser for the sun-animalcules.

heliozoan (hē″li-ō-zō′an), a. and n. [< Heliozoa + -an.] Pertaining to the Heliozoa; a sun-animalcule.

heliozoic (hē″li-ō-zō′ik), a. [< Heliozoa + -ic.] Same as heliozoan.

Heliset, n. [ME., < OF. Helise, prop. Elise, Elysium: see Elysium.] Elysium.

helispheric, helispherical (hel-i-sfer′ik, -i-kal), a. [For helicospheric, helicospherical; < Gr. ἕλιξ (ἑλικ-), a spiral, + σφαῖρα, sphere: see helix and spheric.] Spiral.—Helispherical line. Same as loxodromic curve (see loxodromic).

helium (hē′li-um), n. [NL., < Gr. ἥλιος, the sun: see heliac.] A gaseous element having a density of 1.98 and an atomic weight of about 4.0: symbol He. It was first identified by Frankland and Lockyer in the solar corona, its characteristic yellow line (D_3) having been noted in spectroscopic observation during an eclipse. The nature of the substance remained in doubt for nearly thirty years, until 1895, when Ramsay proved it to be also a terrestrial element, present in uraninite and some other allied minerals. It has also been obtained from meteoric iron, from the gases yielded by the water of certain springs, and in minute quantity from the terrestrial atmosphere. Helium is what is known as a monatomic gas, that is, its molecules each consist of but a single atom. After numerous unsuccessful attempts on the part of a number of different investigators its liquefaction was finally accomplished by Onnes in 1908. Liquid helium is colorless, has a density of 0.154, and at atmospheric pressure boils at a temperature of −268.6° C., or only about 4.5° above absolute zero. By boiling liquid helium at a pressure of not more than 1 cm. the lowest steady temperature known, about 3.0° above absolute zero, has been obtained. It has been demonstrated by Rutherford that the α-particles emitted by radium and by other radioactive substances are in all probability atoms of helium charged with positive electricity. This affords a satisfactory explanation of the origin of the helium found to occur in the radioactive minerals.

helix (hē′liks), n.; pl. helixes, helices (hē′lik-sez, hel′i-sēz). [< L. helix, a kind of ivy, a kind of willow, a volute in arch., < Gr. ἕλιξ (ἑλικ-), anything which assumes a spiral shape, as a tendril, lock or curl of hair, etc., as adj. ἕλιξ, twisted, curved, < ἑλίσσειν, turn round, akin to L. volvere, roll, and to E. wallow: see volute, involve, evolve, etc., and wallow.] 1. A spiral line, as of wire in a coil; a winding, or something that is spiral; a circumvolution; specifically, in geom., the curve assumed by a right line drawn on a plane when that plane is wrapped round a cylindrical surface of any kind, especially a right cylinder, as the curve of a screw-thread; also, a curve on any developable surface which becomes a right line when the surface is developed into a plane, as a conical helix.—2. In arch., any spiral, particularly a small volute or twist under the abacus of the Corinthian capital; also, a volute of the Ionic capital. In every Corinthian capital of the fully developed type there are sixteen helices, two at each angle, and two meeting under the middle of each face of the abacus, branching out of the cauliculi or secondary stalks which rise from between the leaves.

Helices (H, H), as used in a Corinthian Capital.

3. In elect., a coil of wire, as that surrounding the core of an electromagnet.—4. In anat.: (a) The prominent curved fold which forms most of the rim or margin of the outer ear. See second cut under ear[1]. (b) The cochlea of the inner ear.—5. [cap.] [NL.] In conch., the representative genus of Helicidæ and Helicinæ. Widely different limits have been assigned to it, and more than 4,000 species have been referred to it, varying greatly in size, shape, and color. Typical species are the common garden-snail of Europe, H. hortensis, and the Roman snail, H. pomatia. By many recent authors the genus is more or less restricted to such as are related to these species, or to one or the other of them. See cuts under Gasteropoda and Pulmonata.—Fossa of the helix. See fossa[1].—Osculating helix of a non-plane curve, the common helix which passes through three consecutive points and has its axis parallel to the rectifying line of the curve.

hell[1] (hel), n. [In the 17th century also hel; early mod. E. helle, < ME. helle, < AS. hell, hel (fem., gen. dat. acc. helle), the abode of the dead (Gr. ᾅδης, Hades, L. infernum), also the place of punishment for the wicked after death (LL. ML. infernum), = OS. hellia, hell, hel = OFries. hille, helle = D. hel = MLG. helle = OHG. hellia, hella, MHG. helle, G. helle (Luther), now irreg. hölle = Goth. halja, hell (as in AS.) (cf. Dan. helvede, Sw. helvete, OSw. hælwite, hell, = AS. hellewīte, hell's torment); = Icel. hel, the abode of the dead, Hades, also death, and personified, Hel, the ogress Hel, the Proserpine of Scand. mythology. The personification does not appear in Goth., AS., OHG., etc., though prob. once existent. Prob. orig. the 'hidden' or 'unseen' place (or goddess) (cf. Hades, similarly explained as 'unseen'), < AS. helan, ME. helen, E. heal[2] (= OHG. helan, etc.), cover, conceal, hide: see heal[2]. Cf. hell[2].] 1. The abode of the dead; the place of departed spirits; the grave; the infernal regions, regarded as a place of existence after death: called in Hebrew Sheol, and by the Greeks Hades.

> Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell; neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption. Ps. xvi. 10.

> He descended again into Hell, that is, into the Grave, to fetch his Body, and to rise again.
> Selden, Table-Talk, p. 53.

[In the authorized version of the Bible the word hell occurs 54 times, viz., 31 times in the Old Testament and 23 times in the New. In the Old Testament it translates the Hebrew name Sheol, which is also translated the grave (31 times) and the pit (3 times). In the revised version hell has been retained in the prophetical books, and Sheol substituted for it in the poetical books and passages, except in Deut. xxxii. 22, Ps. lv. 15, and lxxxvi. 13, where it is changed to pit. In both the authorized and the revised version of the New Testament, hell is used 12 times to translate the Greek γέεννα (transliterated gehenna in the Vulgate), while in the authorized version it is used 10 times for the Greek ᾅδης, and once (2 Pet. ii. 4) for ταρταρώσας (Tartarus). In the revised version hell is retained for Tartarus, and Hades has been used for the Greek ᾅδης. See Gehenna, grave[2], Hades, and Sheol.]

2. The abode of devils and condemned spirits; the place or state of punishment of the wicked after death; the infernal regions, regarded as a place of torment.

> Bi-seke we nu Godes migt,
> That he make ure sowles brigt,
> And shilde us fro elles nigt,
> And lede us to blisse and in-to ligt.
> Genesis and Exodus (E. E. T. S.), l. 4157.

> And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell. Mat. x. 28.

> Be thou a spirit of health, or goblin damn'd,
> Bring with thee airs from heaven, or blasts from hell.
> Shak., Hamlet, i. 4.

> Hail, horrours; hail,
> Infernal world! and thou, profoundest hell, > Receive thy new possessour. Milton, P. L., i. 251.

3. The infernal powers; the powers of darkness and evil.

> Richard yet lives, hell's black intelligencer,
> Only reserv'd their factor, to buy souls,
> And send them thither. Shak., Rich. III., iv. 4.

4. Something regarded as resembling hell.

> The hell of waters! where they howl and hiss,
> And boil in endless torture.
> Byron, Childe Harold, iv. 69.

Specifically—(a) Any place or condition of captivity or torment; any experience of great suffering: as, a hell upon earth; a hell of suspense or suspicion.

> The mind is its own place, and in itself
> Can make a heaven of hell, a hell of heaven
> Milton, P. L., i. 255.

> But quiet to quick bosoms is a hell,
> And there hath been thy bane.
> Byron, Childe Harold, iii. 42.

(b) A gaming-house; a gaming-room; a gamblers' den.

> Don Juan, our young diplomatic sinner,
> Pursued his path, and drove past some hotels,
> St. James's Palace and St. James's Hells.
> Byron, Don Juan, xi. 29.

> At midnight he had lost forty-eight thousand pounds. . . . The atmosphere was hot, to be sure, but it became such a hell. Disraeli, Young Duke, iv. 8.

(c) In some games, as barley-brake, the place to which those who are caught are carried.

> Then couples three be straight allotted there,
> They of both ends the middle two do fly;
> The two that, in mid-place, Hell called were,
> Must strive, with waiting foot and watching eye,
> To catch of them, and them to Hell to bear.
> Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, i.

(d) A place where things are covered up or hidden; a place of concealment; specifically, a place into which a tailor throws his shreds or his cabbaged stuff, or a printer his broken type.

> Secréta. [It.] . . . The name of a place in Venice where all their secret records and ancient euidences be kept, as hell is in Westminster Hall. Florio, 1598.

> Lawyers and tailors have their several hells.
> Beau. and Fl. (?), Faithful Friends, i. 2.

> All know the cellaridge under the shop-board
> He calls his hell.
> Middleton and Rowley, World Tost at Tennis.

(e†) Formerly, in England, a place under the exchequer chamber where the king's debtors were confined. Rapalje and Lawrence.—To lead apes in hell†. See ape.

hell[2]†, v. t. [A var. of hill[2], or ult. of heal[2], hele[2], hide: see hill[2], heal[2].] To hide; cover.

> Else would the waters overflow the lands,
> And fire devoure the ayre, and hell them quight.
> Spenser, F. Q., IV. x. 35.

he'll. A colloquial contraction of he will.

Helladian (he-lā′di-an), a. [< Gr. Ἑλλάς (Ἑλλαδ-), Hellas, Greece, + -ian.] Same as Hellenic. [Rare.]

Helladic (he-lad′ik), a. [< Gr. Ἑλλάς (Ἑλλαδ-), Hellas, Greece, + -ic.] Same as Hellenic. [Rare.]

> Zeuxis, Parrhasius and their followers, under the general name of the Asiatic school, were opposed to the Grecian (Helladic) school.
> C. O. Müller, Manual of Archæol. (trans.), § 139.

helladothere (hel′a-dō-thēr), n. [< Helladotherium.] The animal upon whose remains the genus Helladotherium was founded.

Helladotheriidæ (hel″a-dō-thē-rī′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Helladotherium + -idæ.] The family of ruminants which the genus Helladotherium represents.

Helladotherioidea (hel″a-dō-thē-ri-oi′dē-ä), n. pl. [NL., < Helladotherium + -oidea.] The Helladotheriidæ rated as a superfamily. Gill.

Helladotherium (hel″a-dō-thē′ri-um), n. [< Gr. Ἑλλάς (Ἑλλαδ-), Hellas, Greece, + θηρίον, a wild beast.] A genus of fossil ruminant mammals of uncertain affinities, by some referred to the Giraffidæ, by others made the type of a family Helladotheriidæ. The remains occur in the Upper Miocene and Pliocene of Greece (whence the name) and elsewhere. Gaudry, 1860.

Hellanodic (hel-a-nod′ik), n. [< Gr. Ἑλλανοδίκαι, Doric form of *Ἑλληνοδίκαι, pl., < *Ἕλληνες, Doric *Ἕλλανες, sing. *Ἕλλην, a Greek (see Hellene), + δίκη, judgment.] In Gr. antiq., one of the judges at the Olympic games, who awarded the prizes.

hell-bale†, n. [ME. hellebale, prop. two words: helle, gen. of hell, and bale[1].] The torment of hell.

God shield his soul from hell-bale,
Who made it thus in English tale.
Genesis and Exodus (E. E. T. S.), Pref., p. xiv.

hellbender (hel'ben″dėr), n. [< hell[1], 2, as a term of emphasis, + bender, 4.] 1. A protracted and reckless debauch or drunken frolic. See bender, 4. [Slang, U. S.] — 2. The menopome, Menopoma alleghaniensis (or Protonopsis horrida), a large aquatic salamander with gill-slits and 4 short legs, common in the Ohio valley; one of several such creatures known as mud-puppies and water-dogs. See Menopoma.

Hellbender (Menopoma alleghaniensis).

hell-bent (hel'bent'), a. Recklessly determined, without regard to consequences; determined to have or do at all hazards; resolved; "dead-set": as, he went hell-bent after it. [Slang, U. S.]

Maine went Hell-bent
For Governor Kent.
Political song (1840).

hell-black (hel'blak), a. Black or dark as hell.

The sea, with such a storm as his bare head
In hell-black night endur'd, would have buoy'd up,
And quench'd the stelled fires. Shak., Lear, iii. 7.

hell-born (hel'bôrn), a. Born of or in hell; of hellish origin.

Retire, or taste thy folly; and learn by proof,
Hell-born, not to contend with spirits of heaven!
Milton, P. L., ii. 687.

hell-broth (hel'brôth), n. A composition supposed to be of magical quality prepared for malignant purposes.

Like a hell-broth boil and bubble.
Shak., Macbeth, iv. 1.

hell-cat (hel'kat), n. A witch; a hag; a furious vixen.

"Vat voman?" "A hell-cat, who hates me as she does the devil." Marryat, Snarleyyow, II. i.

hell-diver (hel'dī″vėr), n. A grebe. [U. S.] hell-doomed (hel'dömd), a. Doomed or consigned to hell.

And reckon'st thou thyself with spirits of heaven, Hell-doomed? Milton, P. L., ii. 697.

hell-driver (hel'drī″vėr), n. The dobson or hellgrammite. [Raleigh, North Carolina, U. S.]

Helleboraceæ (hel″e-bō-rā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Helleborus + -aceæ.] The name proposed by Spach for the tribe of plants Helleboreæ.

helleboraceous (hel″e-bō-rā'shius), a. [< hellebore + -aceous. Cf. Helleboraceæ.] Related to or resembling hellebore; belonging to the Helleboraceæ. [Little used.]

helleboraster (hel″e-bō-ras'tėr), n. [< hellebore + aster.] The fetid hellebore, Helleborus fœtidus.

hellebore (hel'e-bōr), n. [Formerly also ellebore; < ME. elebore, elebur, < OF. ellebore, F. ellébore, hellébore = Sp. eléboro, elébor = Pg. helleboro = It. elleboro, < L. helleborus, elleborus, also helleborum, elleborum, < Gr. ἑλλέβορος, rarely ἐλλέβορος, hellebore (L. veratrum); ulterior origin unknown.] 1. A plant of the genus Helleborus, of the family Ranunculaceæ, particularly H. niger, the black hellebore or Christmas rose, a native of southwestern Europe. It is a drastic hydragogic cathartic, possessing emmenagogic powers, in overdoses producing inflammation of the gastric and intestinal mucous membrane, with violent vomiting, vertigo, cramp, and convulsions, which sometimes end in death. H. viridis, the green hellebore, a native of Europe, is naturalized in the United States. The fetid or stinking hellebore is H. fœtidus, a name also given to the skunk-cabbage, Spathyema fœtida.

It schewith sumtyme yn medicyns maad of elebore, ther is no thing that puttith awey the craumpe as doith oure 5 essence. Book of Quinte Essence (ed. Furnivall), p. 22.

Here mercury, here hellebore,
Old ulcers mundifying.
Drayton, Muses' Elysium, v.

2. A name of similar plants of other genera. Cammarum hyemale, a plant closely allied to Helleborus, is called winter hellebore. Veratrum viride, a liliaceous plant, is known as American, false, or white hellebore, swamp-hellebore, and Indian poke.

3. The powdered root of American hellebore, used to destroy lice and caterpillars.

Helleboreæ (hel-e-bō'rē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (A. P. de Candolle, 1818), < Helleborus + -eæ.] A tribe of plants, of the family Ranunculaceæ, distinguished by the petaloid sepals, petals mostly small or wanting, and the several-ovuled carpels, which are dehiscent at maturity, or rarely baccate. The tribe embraces about 340 species of annual or perennial herbs, included under 15 genera, with leaves which are radical, alternate, or resembling an involucre. Here belong, besides the hellebore, the monk's-hood (Aconitum), the larkspur (Delphinium), and the columbine (Aquilegia). See cut under columbine[2].

helleborin (hel'e-bō-rin), n. [< hellebore + -in[2].] A crystalline glucoside ($C_{36}H_{42}O_6$) having poisonous properties, found in hellebore.

helleborine (hel'e-bō-rin), n. [= F. ellébore = Sp. eleborina = Pg. helleborinha, < L. helleborine, elleborine, < Gr. ἑλλεβορίνη, a plant like hellebore, < ἑλλέβορος, hellebore: see hellebore.] 1. A plant of the genus Epipactis, belonging to the family Orchidaceæ. There are but few species, perennials with creeping rhizomes, fibrous roots, leafy stems, and loose racemes of dull-colored flowers. They are natives of the northern hemisphere, two species being found in the United States.

2. A European orchidaceous plant, Cephalanthera rubra.

helleborise, v. t. See helleborize.

helleborism (hel'e-bō-rizm), n. [= F. ellébo-★risme, < L. helleborismus, Gr. ἑλλεβορισμός, a dosing with hellebore, < ἑλλεβορίζειν, dose with hellebore: see helleborize.] The ancient practice of treating disease (insanity) with hellebore.

When he offered his public thesis, on the Helleborism of the Ancients. J. B. Wood, Address on Hahnemann, p. 5.

helleborize (hel'e-bō-rīz), v. t.; pret. and pp. helleborized, ppr. helleborizing. [= F. elléboriser, < Gr. ἑλλεβορίζειν, dose with hellebore, < ἑλλέβορος, hellebore: see hellebore.] To dose with hellebore, as in dementia; treat for madness with hellebore. Also spelled helleborise.

I am represented . . . as singular in the paradox, nay, as one who would be helleborised as a madman for harbouring the absurdity. Sir W. Hamilton.

Helleborus (he-leb'ō-rus), n. [NL., < L. helleborus, also elleborus; < Gr. ἑλλέβορος, hellebore: see hellebore.] A genus of plants belonging to the tribe Helleboreæ of the family Ranunculaceæ. The plants are distinguished by the 5 regular sepals, small petals, and many carpels, which are many-seeded. The genus, known under the general name hellebore, includes about 15 species of erect perennial herbs, with deeply cut leaves and large white, yellowish, or greenish flowers, natives of Europe and western Asia. A well-known species is the Christmas rose, or black hellebore, H. niger, common in gardens; it is a native of Europe, and its rootstock is used in medicine. See hellebore.

Christmas Rose (Helleborus niger).

hellejay, n. See hellijay.

Hellene (hel'ēn), n. [= F. Hellène, < Gr. Ἕλλην, pl. Ἕλληνες, pl. form, in Homer (if the single instance is genuine), a Thessalian tribe of which Ἕλλην (Hellen) was the reputed chief; later (earliest record 586 B. C.) a general name for all the Greeks; in N. T. and eccl. writers used for 'Gentiles,' rarely in sing. Ἕλλην, a Greek. The origin of the name is unknown; Hellen is no doubt an eponym.] 1. An ancient Greek; properly, a Greek of pure race: traditionally said to be so called from Hellen, son of Deucalion and Pyrrha, the legendary ancestor of the true Greeks, consisting of the Dorians, Æolians, Ionians, and Acheans.

From the nature of the country inhabited by the Hellenes, Buckle infers the symmetry of the Hellenic mind. Pop. Sci. Mo., XIII. 262.

2. A subject of the modern kingdom of Greece, or Hellas.

Hellenian (he-lē'ni-an), a. Same as Hellenic.

Hellenic (he-len'ik), a. [= F. hellénique, < Gr. Ἑλληνικός, < Ἕλληνες, the Greeks: see Hellene.] Pertaining to the Hellenes or Greeks; displaying qualities or tendencies characteristic of the Greek race, historically considered (compare Hellenism, 2); Greek; Grecian.

Into the Reformation too . . . the subtle Hellenic leaven of the Renascence found its way.
M. Arnold, Hebraism and Hellenism.

A glance at the position of Cyprus on the map explains why it never became truly Hellenic.
C. T. Newton, Art and Archæol., p. 319.

Perhaps there is no other instance of so instinctive a yearning towards the old Hellenic life as is to be seen in Keats. J. C. Shairp, Aspects of Poetry, p. 150.

In art, applied specifically to Greek work from the close of the primitive epoch to the Roman supremacy in Greece, beginning 146 B. C., or, more narrowly, until the time of Alexander the Great and the sculptor Lysippus, about 330 B. C., the adjective Hellenistic being applied to subsequent work. The Hellenic epoch includes the period of the development and perfection of the Doric and Ionic orders, and that during which the principles of the Corinthian order were worked out. In sculpture, etc., this period comprises the works of the grand style, which succeeded the archaic. See Greek art, under Greek. — Hellenic dialect. See common dialect, under common.

Hellenically (he-len'i-kal-i), adv. In the Hellenic manner; according to the standards of Hellenism.

Hellenicism (he-len'i-sizm), n. [< Hellenic + -ism.] Hellenic character or quality; Hellenic style.

He is drawn on to study in detail the Hellenicism, the refinement of knowledge and taste, the subtle convolutions of grace, with which the painter illustrates the poet.
Nineteenth Century, XXIV. 37.

Hellenisation, Hellenise. See Hellenization, Hellenize.

Hellenism (hel'en-izm), n. [= F. hellénisme = Sp. helenismo = Pg. hellenismo = It. ellenismo, < Gr. Ἑλληνισμός, imitation of the Greeks, use of a pure Greek style and idiom, < Ἑλληνίζειν, speak Greek, make Greek: see Hellenize.] 1. A peculiarity of the Greek language; a word, phrase, idiom, or construction used or formed in the Greek manner.

Virgil is full of the Greek Forms of Speech, which the Criticks call Hellenisms. Addison, Spectator, No. 285.

We find examples of Latinisms in Byzantine Greek, and of Hellenisms in the decay of classic Latin.
G. P. Marsh, Hist. Eng. Lang., p. 249.

2. The spirit and tendency regarded as especially characteristic of the Greek race, historically considered, and as best exemplified in its pursuit of intellectual and physical culture, and its predilection for the noble, the strong, and the beautiful in thought and action. See extract under Hebraism, 2.

To get rid of one's ignorance, to see things as they are, and by seeing them as they are to see them in their beauty, is the simple and attractive ideal which Hellenism holds out before human nature; and from the simplicity and charm of this ideal, Hellenism, and human life in the hands of Hellenism, . . . are full of what we call sweetness and light. . . . As the great movement of Christianity was a triumph of Hebraism and man's moral impulses, so the great movement which goes by the name of the Renascence was an uprising and re-instatement of man's intellectual impulses and Hellenism.
M. Arnold, Culture and Anarchy, iv.

3. Conformity to Greek speech and ideas; imitation or adoption of Greek characteristics in any respect.

Hellenism [among the Jews] served as the preparation for a catholic creed. As it furnished the language of Christianity, it supplied also that literary instinct which counteracted the traditional reserve of the Palestinian Jews. McClintock and Strong's Encyc., IV. 176.

Hellenist (hel'en-ist), n. [= F. helléniste = Sp. helenista = Pg. hellenista = It. ellenista, < Gr. Ἑλληνιστής, in N. T. one who uses the Greek language, later eccl. sometimes for 'Gentile,' < Ἑλληνίζειν, speak Greek, make Greek: see Hellenize.] 1. One who is partly Greek; one who has Greek affinities, or who adopts the Greek language, manners, and customs; specifically, a Jew who used the Greek language and conformed more or less to Greek influence in the early period of Christianity, both in Palestine and in foreign countries, especially Egypt.

These Jews understood Greek, and used the Greek Bible, and therefore are called Hellenists.

2. One skilled in the Greek language and literature; a Greek scholar; a Grecian.

Richard Bentley, the Master of Trinity College, and the greatest Hellenist of his age.
W. Mathews, Getting on in the World, p. 250.

3. A promoter of Greek culture; specifically, one of the learned Greeks who, after the fall of Constantinople in 1453, disseminated the knowledge of the Greek language and literature in Italy, and were among the chief agents of the revival of learning.

Hellenistic (hel-e-nis'tik), a. [< Hellenist + -ic.] 1. Resembling or partaking of Hellenic character, but not truly Hellenic; combining Greek and foreign characteristics or elements, as many of the later Greeks and the Hellenized neighboring peoples, or the modified Greek language, thought, etc., current among them.

The civilization resulting from these political changes [after the time of Alexander] showed a decline from the pure Greek or Hellenic model, and is called Hellenistic.

2. Particularly, in sculpture and painting, characteristic of the school of Greek art based on the art of Lysippus, the court sculptor of Alexander the Great, which may or may not be considered to include the work of Lysippus himself. It lasted from about 330 B. C. until the Roman supremacy in Greece, and may be extended to include all the work done for the Romans by Greek artists, or in the Greek manner and following Greek models, as late as the early empire. Hellenistic art is characterized in general by a research of effect (posing), by a decided leaning toward the colossal, and by great skill and cleverness in design and execution; but it lacks originality, and seeks to copy the types and methods of the Hellenic epoch rather than to find inspiration in original conceptions and contemporary aims.—Hellenistic dialect, a local dialect of ancient Greek in the period after Alexander the Great, spoken by a population not Greek in origin; especially, the dialect used by Greek-speaking Jews, and called also the Alexandrine dialect, found in the Septuagint, and in a less marked form in the New Testament: opposed to the common or Hellenic dialect.

The term is applied in general to all defensive head-coverings except the slightest, such as the skull-cap, the secret, the wire hat, etc., and also the camail or coif. Specifically — (a) Milit.: (1) In ancient and medieval armor, a cap of metal worn to protect the head from sword-cuts and spear-thrusts. Such a helmet usually guarded the nape of the neck and sides of the face by means of hinged pieces or sliding splints (see couvre-nuque, face-guard, cheek-piece), and to a certain extent the face by means of a nasal, either fixed or movable, a beaver, a projecting vizor, or the like. The only helmets which covered the head and face completely were those worn by Roman gladiators of certain classes, and by medieval heavy-armed horsemen between the beginning of the thirteenth and the middle of the sixteenth century; the most completely defensive helmets were the tilting-helmets of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, which prevented the wearer from seeing except directly before him, and at a height on a line with his eyes. See armet, barrel helm (under helm[2]), basinet, beaver[2], burganet, cabasset, heaume, iron-cap, lumière, mentonnière, morion, nasal, œillère, ombril, tilting-helmet, vizor.

I saw St. Denis his head inclosed in a wonderful rich helmet. Coryat, Crudities, I. 48.

They drank the red wine through the helmet barred.
Scott, L. of L. M., i. 4.

(2) In present use, a stiff military hat of domed or pointed form, sometimes of metal or stiffened with bars of metal so as to afford defense against a sword-cut. (b) A hat, usually of leather and having a vizor and broad neck-guard, worn by firemen. (c) A hat of similar form worn by policemen, or by civilians for any purpose, especially in hot climates. Such hats are usually of felt or pith, so formed as to have space for ventilation around the head or openings for ventilation above. (d) The headpiece of a suit of submarine armor. It is usually formed of sheet-metal and leather, and is fitted over the head and shoulders. It is provided with thick glass windows for the eyes and with pipes for air. See submarine armor, under armor. (e) A havelock used by anglers, with a projection in front of the face that can be covered by a netting or veil as a protection against insects.

2. In her., the representation of a helmet, set above the escutcheon and seeming to support the armorial crest. Distinctions of rank are indicated by the metal, the number of bars in the vizor, and the position.—3. Same as helm[2], 2.—4. In bot., same as galea, 1 (e).—5. The upper part of a retort.—Beaked helmet, Corinthian helmet, etc. See the adjectives.

helmet-beetle (hel'met-bē'tl), n. A chrysomelid beetle of one of the group of genera which Cassida exemplifies, sometimes made a type of a family Cassididæ: so called from their form. Their larvæ are characteristic, being broadly oval and spiny, and having attached to the anal segment a dung-fork on which they carry their excrement. See cuts under Cassida and Coptocycla.

helmet-quail (hel'met-kwāl), n. A quail of the genus Lophortyx, having an elegant recurved crest like that of a helmet. There are two species in the United States, L. californicus, the common valley-quail of California, and L. gambeli, which abounds in Arizona. Both are favorite game-birds. They are now placed in the genus Callipepla, with the scaled partridge, C. squamata.

Helmet-quail (Lophortyx californicus).

helmet-shaped (hel'met-shāpt), a. Shaped like a helmet; in bot., galeate.

helmet-shell (hel'met-shel), n. The shell of a mollusk of the genus Cassis; a cameo-shell. Most of them are found in tropical seas, some in the Mediterranean. They are numerous, some attaining a large size. Such species as C. rufa, C. cornuta, and C. tuberosa furnish the material upon which shell-cameos are engraved. See cut under Cassididæ.

helm-guard (helm'gärd), n. In armor, a chain attaching the helm to the girdle or to the mammelière. See guard-chain.

helm-hoopt, n. A helmet. Halliwell.

helminth (hel'minth), n. [< Gr. ἕλμινς (ἑλμινθ-), also ἕλμις, a worm, particularly a maw-worm, intestinal worm, allied to ἕλιξ, a helix: see helix.] A worm; especially, an entozoan, entoparasitic, or intestinal worm, as a cestoid, trematoid, or nematoid. See cut under Cestoidea.

helminthagogic (hel-min-tha-goj'ik), a. [< helminthagog-ue + -ic.] Having the properties of a helminthagogue or vermifuge; anthelmintic; vermifugal.

helminthagogue (hel-min'tha-gog), n. [< Gr. ἕλμινς (ἑλμινθ-), a worm, + ἀγωγός, leading, driving, < ἄγειν, lead, drive.] In med., a remedy against worms; an anthelmintic; a vermifuge.

Helmintherus (hel-min-thē'rus), n. [NL. (orig. erroneously Helmitherus), < Gr. ἕλμινς (ἑλμινθ-), a worm, + irreg. θηρᾶν, hunt, < θήρ, a wild beast.] A genus of worm-eating warblers, the type of which is H. vermivorus, a common bird of the eastern United States, about 5¼ inches long, of an olive-green color above, and having the head striped with a tawny color and with black. Coues, 1882.

Helminthes (hel-min'thēz), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ἕλμινς, pl. ἕλμινθες, a worm: see helminth.] A large group of worms. The term is not now in technical use, but corresponds in a general way to Cestoidea, Trematoidea, and Nematoidea.

Helminthia (hel-min'thi-ä), n. [NL., < Gr. ἕλμινς (ἑλμινθ-), a worm.] See Picris.

helminthiasis (hel-min-thī'a-sis), n. [NL., < Gr. ἑλμινθιᾶν, suffer from worms, < ἕλμινς (ἑλμινθ-), a worm.] In pathol., a condition characterized by the presence of worms in any part of the body.

helminthic (hel-min′thik), a. and n. [< helminth + -ic.] I. a. 1. In zoöl., pertaining to helminths or worms.—2. In med., expelling worms; vermifugal.

II. n. A medicine for expelling worms; a vermifuge.

helminthimorphous (hel-min-thi-môr′fus), a. [< Gr. ἕλμινς (ἑλμινθ-), a worm, + μορφή, form.] In entom., helminthoid: specifically applied to certain dipterous larvæ which resemble worms and live in the bodies of vertebrates.

Helminthocladia (hel-min-thō-klā′di-ä), n. [NL., < Gr. ἕλμινς (ἑλμινθ-), a worm, + κλάδος, a branch.] A small genus of red algæ, the type of the family Helminthocladiaceæ of Agardh. The fronds are terete, much branched and decompound laterally, and more or less gelatinous.

helminthoid (hel-min′thoid), a. [< Gr. ἑλμινθοειδής*, contr. ἑλμινθώδης, like a worm, < ἕλμινς (ἑλμινθ-), a worm, + εἶδος, form.] Resembling ★a helminth; worm-like in form; vermiform.

helmintholite† (hel-min′thō-līt), n. [< helmintholithus.] A fossil of the genus Helminthol-ithus.

Helmintholithus† (hel-min-thol′i-thus), n. [NL., < Gr. ἕλμινς (ἑλμινθ-), a worm, + λίθος, a stone.] A Linnean genus of fossils supposed to be helminthoid.

helminthologic (hel-min-thō-loj′ik), a. [< helminthology + -ic.] Pertaining to helminthology.

helminthological (hel-min-thō-loj′i-kal), a. [< helminthologic + -al.] Same as helminthologic.

The introduction of helminthological experiment by Küchenmeister. Encyc. Brit., XXIII. 50.

helminthologist (hel-min-thol′ō-jist), n. [< helminthology + -ist.] One who is versed in helminthology.

helminthology (hel-min-thol′ō-ji), n. [< Gr. ἕλμινς (ἑλμινθ-), a worm, + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] The science of worms, especially of parasitic worms.

Helminthophaga (hel-min-thof′a-gä), n. [NL., < Gr. ἕλμινς (ἑλμινθ-), a worm, + φαγεῖν, eat.] A large and beautiful genus of American warblers, of the family Mniotiltidæ, characterized by a very acute unnotched bill; the worm-eating warblers. They are small, usually gaily colored, and very pretty migratory birds of woodlands, especially of the eastern United States, such as the blue-winged yellow warbler, H. pinus; the golden-winged warbler, H. chrysoptera; the orange-crowned warbler, H. celata; the Tennessee warbler, H. peregrina; the Nashville warbler, H. ruficapilla; Bachman's warbler, H. bachmani; Lucy's warbler, H. luciæ; Virginia's warbler, H. virginiæ. This genus was founded in ornithology by Cabanis in 1850; but the name, being preoccupied in a different connection, has lately been changed to Helminthophila.

Golden-winged Warbler (Helminthophaga chrysoptera).

Helminthosporium (hel-min-thō-spō′ri-um), n. [NL., < Gr. ἕλμινς (ἑλμινθ-), a worm, + σπόρος, seed, spore.] A genus of hyphomycetous fungi, having erect, mostly simple fertile hyphæ bearing elongate multiseptate dark-colored spores.

helminthosporoid (hel-min-thō-spō′roid), a. [< Helminthosporium + -oid.] Having the structure or appearance of the genus Helminthosporium.

helmless[1] (helm′les), a. [< helm[1] + -less.] Having no helm or steering-apparatus.

Your National Assembly, like a ship water-logged, helmless, lies tumbling. Carlyle, French Rev., II. vi. 5.

I sit within a helmless bark.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, iv.

helmless[2] (helm′les), a. [< helm[2] + -less.] Without a helm or helmet.

helm-port (helm′pōrt), n. Naut., the hole in the counter of a ship through which the rudder passes; the rudder-port.

helmsman (helmz′man), n.; pl. helmsmen (-men). Naut., the man at the helm or wheel, who steers a ship.

I find a magic bark;
I leap on board: no helmsman steers:
I float till all is dark. Tennyson, Sir Galahad.

Helobacterium (hē″lō-bak-tē′ri-um), n. [NL., < Gr. ἧλος, a nail, + βακτήριον, a little stick: see bacterium.] A name given by Cohn and others to certain rod-shaped bacteria presenting a club-shaped extremity, under the impression that they were specifically or generically distinct. Later investigation has shown that they are merely the fructifying stage of well-known forms.

Helobiæ (he-lō′bi-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ἕλος, a marsh, + βίος, life.] An order of monocotyledonous plants, created by Endlicher in 1836, and still adhered to by Engler and other botanists. Its scope has varied with different authors, some including the Lemnaceæ. As the name is not derived from that of any genus, and as the typical family is the Naiadaceæ, the order should be called the Naiadales.

helobious (he-lō′bi-us), a. [< Gr. ἕλος, a marsh, + βίος, life.] Living in swamps or marshes; palustrine.

helocerous (hē-los′e-rus), a. [< NL. helocerus, < Gr. ἧλος, a nail, + κέρας, horn.] Having clavate antennæ; clavicorn; specifically, pertaining to or having the characters of the Clavicornia.

heloderm (hē′lō-dėrm), n. [< Heloderma.] A lizard of the genus Heloderma, as the caltetepon and the Gila monster.

I was present when the heloderm bit two guinea-pigs in the hind leg. . . . The bites were viciously inflicted, and the lizard did not readily relinquish its hold.
Sir J. Fayrer, Proc. Zool. Soc., 1882, p. 632.

Heloderma (hē-lō-dėr′mä), n. [NL., < Gr. ἧλος, a nail, stud, wart, + δέρμα, skin.] The only known genus of venomous lizards, typical of the family Helodermatidæ, having the skin studded with tubercles like nail-heads, whence the name. There are two species, of large size and most repulsive aspect, H. horridum, the Mexican caltetepon, and H. suspectum, the Gila monster (which see, under monster).

Gila Monster (Heloderma suspectum).

Helodermatidæ (hē″lō-dėr-mat′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Heloderma(t-) + -idæ.] An American family of venomous lizards, represented by the genus Heloderma. It includes esquamate-tongued lizards with clavicles not dilated proximally, a postorbital arch, no postfrontosquamosal arch, the pre- and postfrontals in contact, separating the frontal from the orbit, and furrowed teeth receiving the efferent ducts of highly developed salivary glands. The Helodermatidæ are the only Lacertilia known to be poisonous; the fact of their venomousness was established in 1882, but it had previously been suspected, whence the name H. suspectum of the Gila monster. See Gila monster (under monster) and heloderm. Also Helodermidæ.

helodermatoid (hē-lō-dėr′ma-toid), a. [< Heloderma(t-) + -oid.] Pertaining to or having the characters of the Helodermatidæ.

helodermatous (hē-lō-dėr′ma-tus), a. [As Heloderma(t-) + -ous.] Having a studded, warty, or tuberculous skin: specifically applied to the helodermas.

helodes (he-lō′dēz), n. [NL., < Gr. ἑλώδης, of a marsh, marshy, < ἕλος, marsh, + εἶδος, form.] In pathol.: (a) Marsh-fever. (b) A kind of fever characterized by profuse perspiration.

helodont (hē′lō-dont), a. [< Gr. ἧλος, a nail, + ὀδούς (ὀδοντ-) = E. tooth.] Shaped like a nail or spike, as a tooth; also, having such teeth.

A number of small helodont teeth are scattered over some of the pieces of limestone.
J. W. Davis, Geol. Mag., III. 151.

Helodus (hē′lō-dus), n. [NL., < Gr. ἧλος, a nail, + ὀδούς = E. tooth.] A genus of fossil selachians, based upon teeth of apparently cestraciont sharks which abound in Carboniferous limestone: so called from the studded appearance of their crushing crowns. L. Agassiz, 1838.

Helœcetes (he-lē′se-tēz), n. [NL., < Gr. ἕλος, a marsh, + οἰκέτης, a house-slave, a menial, < οἰκεῖν, dwell in, inhabit, < οἶκος, a house.] A notable genus of aquatic tree-toads, of the family Hylidæ. H. triseriatus is one of the common species of the United States, whose shrilling may be heard through the summer in swampy places. Also written Helocœtes.

Helonæa (hel-ō-nē′ä), n. [NL. (Audubon, 1839, as Helinaia; changed to Helonæa by A. Newton), < Gr. ἕλος, a marsh.] A genus of American worm-eating warblers, of the family Mniotiltidæ, having a peculiar bill resembling that of a meadow-lark. There is but one species, H. swainsoni, a near relative of the worm-eating warbler, Helmintherus vermivorus, inhabiting the Southern States. It was long regarded as one of the rarest of warblers, but has lately been found to abound in swamps in South Carolina.

Helonias (he-lō′ni-as), n. [NL., < Gr. ἕλος, a marsh.] A genus of monocotyledonous plants, founded by Linnæus in 1753, belonging to the family Melanthiaceæ, tribe Helonieæ, with petioled radical leaves, those of the stem few and small, small flowers in dense racemes, the stamens little longer than the perianth, and three very short styles. Only one species is known, H. bullata, a botanical rarity of the United States, growing in wet places in New Jersey, southern New York, Pennsylvania, and Virginia. It is a very handsome plant.

Helophilus (he-lof′i-lus), n. [NL., < Gr. ἕλος, a marsh, + φίλος, loving.] 1. A genus of syrphid flies, founded by Meigen in 1822. They are large, nearly naked, black or brown with yellow spots or bands, and usually marked by light stripes on the back of the thorax. The larvæ have no mouth-hooks, and probably live, like those of Eristalis, in manure and foul water. Twenty North American and about as many European species are described.

Helophilus latifrons, natural size.

2. A genus of water-beetles, of the family Hydrophilidæ, erected by Mulsant in 1844. It is synonymous with the extensive genus Philhydrus of Solier.

Helophoridæ (hē-lō-for′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Helophorus + -idæ.] A family of aquatic palpicorn beetles, named from the genus Helophorus. See Hydrophilidæ. Also written Helophoridæ, Helophorites.

Helophorus (hē-lof′ō-rus), n. [NL. (Fabricius, 1776), < Gr. ἧλος, a nail, stud, + -φορος, -bearing, < φέρειν = E. bear[1].] The typical genus of Helophoridæ. There are many species, mainly European and North American, but also some Asiatic and North African. H. lineatus of Say is found in the United States.

helops[1]† (hē′lops), n. [L. helops, also elops, some sea-fish: see Elops.] Some sea-fish, a favorite with the Romans.

Salmons from Aquitaine, helops from Rhodes.
Middleton, Game at Chess, v. 3.

Helops[2] ((hē′lops), n. [NL., < Gr. ἧλος, a nail, stud, + ὤψ, face (appearance).] A notable genus of tenebrionine beetles with slender tarsi, sessile abdomen, and a coriaceous band over the labrum. H. micans is a beautifully striped bronzed species. Nearly 200 species are known, about 30 of them North American and the rest mainly European, though a few are found in Asia, North Africa, the Azores, Madeira, and Australia. Fabricius, 1775.

Helosidæ (hē-los′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Helosis + -idæ.] A tribe of plants, of the family Balanophoraceæ, made by Lindley in 1845 to include the genus Helosis and 4 other genera. Same as Helosideæ, which it is called in later editions.

Helosideæ (hē-lō-sid′ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Helosis(-id-) + -eæ.] A tribe of dicotyledonous apetalous plants, belonging to the family Balanophoraceæ, typified by Helosis. It is distinguished by its imperfect flowers, which are monœcious or dicœcious. The staminate flowers, with the stamens in a column, are furnished with a perianth, which in the pistillate flowers is adnate to the 2-styled ovary and has a 2-lipped limb. The tribe consists of fleshy herbs, destitute of chlorophyl, and parasitic on roots, with the small flowers crowded into a rounded or oblong head. There are 3 genera, natives of tropical America, India, and Java.

Helosieæ (hē-lō-sī′ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Helosis + -eæ.] Same as Helosideæ. Schott and Endlicher, 1832.

Helosis[1] (hē-lō′sis), n. [NL. (so called from the shape of the bracts, which are prominent before anthesis), < Gr. ἧλος, a nail.] A genus of dicotyledonous apetalous plants, belonging to the family Balanophoraceæ and tribe Helosideæ. It is characterized by a branched rootstock, bearing erect, naked scapes, and by a 3-lobed perianth of the staminate flowers with united stamens, that of the pistillate flowers being superior to the 1-celled ovary which in fruit becomes a nut. The genus comprises three, or according to some authors only one, species of parasitic, smooth, dark-red herbs, natives of tropical America. They are supposed to possess styptic properties.

helosis[2] (hē-lō′sis), n. [NL., also written helotis, appar. intended as a formation from Gr. εἰλεῖν, turn round, roll up, akin to ἑλίσσειν, turn, ἕλιξ, helix, L. volvere, and E. wallow: see helix, volute, and wallow.] In pathol.: (a) Eversion of the eyelids. (b) Spasm of the eye-muscles. (c) Strabismus. (d) Plica polonica. See plica.

Helostoma (hē-los'tō-mä), n. [NL., < Gr. ἧλος, a nail, + στόμα, the mouth.] The typical genus of Helostomidæ, having a peculiar small mouth.

helostomid (hē-los'tō-mid), n. A fish of the family Helostomidæ.

Helostomidæ (hel-os-tom'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Helostoma + -idæ.] A family of acanthopterygian fishes, represented by the genus Helostoma. The mouth is very small, and the teeth are confined to the lips and movable. In most other respects they agree with the Anabantidæ, and are generally associated with them in the same family. The Helostoma temmincki inhabits the fresh waters of Java.

Helot (hē'lot or hel'ọt), n. [< L. Helotæ, prop. Hilotæ or Ilotæ, < Gr. Εἵλωται or Εἵλωτες, pl. of Εἵλώτης or Εἵλως, a Helot; said to be so named from Ἕλος, a town of Sparta, whose inhabitants were enslaved, but more prob. from the pass. of ἑλεῖν, 2d aor. associated with pres. αἱρεῖν, take.] 1. One of a class of serfs among the ancient Spartans who were owned by the state, were bound to the soil under allotment to landholders, and fulfilled all servile functions. The Helots paid their masters a fixed proportion of the products of the ground cultivated by them. They served as light-armed troops in war, and in great emergencies bodies of them were organized as regular or heavy-armed troops, in which case they might be manumitted as a reward for bravery. They were descendants of captives of war, most of them probably of the conquered Achean aborigines of Laconia; and they were very cruelly treated, and often systematically massacred, to keep down their numbers and prevent them from organized revolt.

The old Spartans had a wiser method, and went out and hunted down their Helots, and speared and spitted them, when they grew too numerous.
Carlyle, Sartor Resartus, iii. 4.

Hence—2. [cap. or l. c.] A serf or slave, in general; a servile person; one subject to the orders and caprices of another.

Those unfortunates, the Helots of mankind, more or less numerous in every community. Is. Taylor.

helotage (hē'lot-āj or hel'ọt-āj), n. [< helot + -age.] The state or condition of being a helot; serfage. Carlyle.

Helotiaceæ (hē-lō-ti-ā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Helotium + -aceæ.] A family of discomycetous fungi of the order Pezizales, technically characterized by having the peridium or outer layer of the ascocarps formed of elongate parallel thin-walled cells. See Helotium.

helotism (hē'lot-izm or hel'ọt-izm), n. [< Helot + -ism.] 1. The system of serfage maintained at Sparta, or one resembling it. See Helot, 1.—2. The condition of the Helots or Spartan serfs, or of helots in the extended sense; servile bondage.

Helotium (hē-lō'ti-um), n. [NL.] A genus of fungi, type of the Helotiaceæ. The disk is open, at first punctiform, then dilated, convex or concave, and naked; the excipulum is waxy, free, and externally naked.

helotry (hē'lot-ri or hel'ọt-ri), n. [< Helot + -ry.] 1. The condition of a Helot; serfdom; slavery.—2. Helots in a collective sense; a body of persons in a condition similar to that of the ancient Helots.

The Helotry of Mammon are not, in our day, so easily enforced to content themselves as the peasantry of that happy period, as Mr. Southey considers it, which elapsed between the fall of the feudal and the rise of commercial tyranny. Macaulay, Southey s Colloquies.

help (help), v.; pret. and pp. helped (formerly holp and holpen), ppr. helping. Connection with Lith. szelpti, help, is uncertain.] I. trans. 1. To furnish aid to; contribute strength or means to; assist in doing, accomplishing, or attaining anything; assist; aid: as, to help a man in his work; to help one out of difficulties. See to help to, below.

But evere more God of his grace halp us.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 284.

Treuthe tauhte me ones to louen hem vchone,
And helpen hem of alle thyng aftur that hem neodeth.
Piers Plowman (A), vii. 198.

Help thyself, and God will help thee.
G. Herbert, Jacula Prudentum.

2. To bring succor or relief to; relieve; rescue.

This helpeth whete
From Auntes and fro myse.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 158.

Help me, Cassius, or I sink! Shak., J. C., i. 2.

My son . . . hath a dumb spirit; . . . but if thou canst do any thing, have compassion on us, and help us.
Mark ix. 22.

Help us from famine
And plague and strife!
Tennyson, The Victim.

3. To mitigate, as pain or disease; heal, relieve, or comfort, as a person in pain or distress.

Ande also it is ordeynede, yat if eny brother or sister falle in pouert, thurghe auenture of ye werlde, his state shal bene holpen of euery brother and sister of ye gilde.
English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 20.

The true calamus helps a cough. Gerarde.

Do wounds help wounds, or grief help grievous deeds?
Shak., Lucrece, l. 1822.

But the jingling of the guinea helps the hurt that Honour feels. Tennyson, Locksley Hall.

4. To mend; repair. [Prov. Eng.]—5. To change for the better; remedy: as, he cannot help his deformity.

Let them [words] have scope: though what they do impart Help nothing else, yet do they ease the heart.
Shak., Rich. III., iv. 4.

If I be, either by disposition or what other cause, too inquisitive, or suspitious of my self and mine own doings, who can help it? Milton, Church-Government, Pref., ii.

For helping of this, it was propounded, that such as dwelt there should pay six-pence the acre, yearly, for such lands as lay within a mile of the water.
Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 234.

Let nothing provoke you to fall upon an imperfection he cannot help. Steele, Tatler, No. 85.

6. To prevent; avoid; forbear; keep or refrain from: with can or cannot.

A man who values a good night's rest will not lie down with enmity in his heart, if he can help it.
Sterne, Sentimental Journey, p. 95.

True, madam; notwithstanding his vices, one can't help feeling for him. Sheridan, School for Scandal, i. 1.

Your teasing daughter, who will never let you alone; who, when you go into your room, cannot help running to seek for you. Charlotte Brontë, Shirley, xxv.

7. To increase; aggravate. [Rare.]

Their armour helped their harm, crush'd in and bruised Into their substance pent. Milton, P. L., vi. 656.

8. To aid in going, removing, getting, etc.: with ellipsis of to go, to get, etc.: as, help me in (that is, help me to go in); help me off my horse.

By foul play, as thou say'st, were we heav'd thence;
But blessedly holp hither. Shak., Tempest, i. 2.

[The verb help may have an infinitive after it without the usual to.

William Pitt, . . . having drunk a bottle of port-wine at his own house, would go into Bellamy's with Dundas, and help finish a couple more.
Thackeray, Four Georges, p. 116.

I would fain stay and help thee tend him.
M. Arnold, Empedocles on Etna.

Should we lend him the moral support of our agreement, and thus help him hold his own against the forces he has to face?
Times (London), quoted in N. and Q., 7th ser., V. 108.]

9. To give out in portions.

She sat down at the head of the table, and began silently helping the hot milk. Vernon Lee, Miss Brown.

God help him (her, you, thee), a phrase used to express pity, and implying that the person concerned is beyond the help of man.

Now God help thee, poor monkey! But how wilt thou do for a father? Shak., Macbeth, iv. 2.

She says
(God help her) she was wedded to a fool.
Tennyson, Princess, iii.

So help me, a minced oath: for so help me God. [Colloq.] —So help me God, may God help or save me as I speak the truth: a solemn asseveration used in taking an oath. Other formulas of similar import are found in use.

And for thei sworen bi heore soule—"so God hem moste helpe!"— Azeyn heore clene concience heore catel to sulle.
Piers Plowman (A), viii. 24.

I say no more than truth, so help me God!
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iii. 1.

To help forward, to assist in making progress.

I will hide nothing from you that I can remember, and can think may help you forward towards a perfection in this art. I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 181.

To help off, to aid in disposing or getting rid of.

Having never learned any laudable manual art, they have recourse to those foolish or ill ways in use to help off their time. Locke.

Strange! how the frequent interjected dash Quickens a market, and helps off the trash.
Cowper, Charity, l. 522.

To help on, to forward; further.—To help out, to aid in delivering from trouble, in completing a task, in eking out a supply, or the like.

The god of learning and of light
Would want a god himself to help him out. Swift.

To help over, to enable to surmount: as, to help one over a difficulty.—To help to, to assist in obtaining; supply or serve with: as, to help one to meat at table.

Is this a dinner? this a genial room? . . .
In plenty starving, tantalized in state,
And complaisantly help'd to all I hate.
Pope, Moral Essays, iv. 164.

To help up, to raise; support.

A man is well holp up that trusts to you.
Shak., C. of E., iv. 1.

"We shall be finely holped up here," said Michael Lambourne, looking at the gateway and gate.
Scott, Kenilworth, iii.

II. intrans. 1. To lend aid; be of use; avail.

To helpe, ne hurte, my wille is not applied;
Who trowithe me not, I lete it passe a-way.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 65.

To euery crafte of man's helpe
He had a redy witte to helpe
Through naturall experience.
Gower, Conf. Amant., v.

2. To serve or distribute food, as at table.

The host sat behind the haunch of mutton, and helped with zeal; the guests took the ducks, the turkey, the hare, and the fowls, and did their part.
W. Besant, Fifty Years Ago, p. 121.

A helping hand. See hand.—To help out, to lend aid.

In man the hemal aspect is the whole front of the body, the opposite of the back. In other vertebrates the under side is hemal. The epithet is chiefly used in this technical sense.—Hemal arch, that portion of a typical vertebra which is on the hemal side of the vertebral axis, forming a hoop or ring to inclose and protect the heart and other viscera, as the neural arches inclose the main nervous system. The ribs and breast-bone constitute a series of hemal arches. See cut under endoskeleton.—Hemal cavity, the body-cavity or cœloma; the thoracic-abdominal cavity in general, containing the heart, lungs, intestines, etc.: so called because it is on the hemal aspect of the body and formed or inclosed by hemal arches.—Hemal flexure. See flexure.—Hemal space, a cavity or space in which blood circulates.—Hemal spine. (a) In Owen's terminology, the median ventral or hemal element of a hemal arch, as one of the segments or pieces of the sternum or breast-bone, articulated on either hand with a hemapophysis. (b) A median process of the hemal side of the body of a vertebra; a hypapophysis: a rare use.

In a half-wild rabbit from Sandon Park, a hæmal spine was moderately well developed on the under side of the twelfth dorsal vertebra, and I have seen this in no other specimen. Darwin, Var. of Animals and Plants, p. 127.

hemalopia, hæmalopia (hem-a-lō'pi-ą), n. [NL. hæmalopia, < Gr. αἷμα, blood, + ἀλαός, blind, + ὤψ, eye; cf. hemeralopia.] Hemophthalmia.

hemapoiesis, hæmapoiesis (hem″a-poi-ē'sis), n. Same as hematopoiesis.

hemapoietic, hæmapoietic (hem″a-poi-et'ik), a. Same as hematopoietic.

hemapophyseal, hæmapophyseal (hem″a-pō-fiz'ē-al), a. Same as hemapophysial.

hemapophysial, hæmapophysial (hem″a-pō-fiz'i-al), a. [< hemapophysis, hæmapophysis, + -al.] Pertaining to or resembling a hemapophysis.★

hemapophysis, hæmapophysis (hem-a-pof'i-sis), n.; pl. hemapophyses, hæmapophyses (-sēz). [NL. hæmapophysis, < Gr. αἷμα, blood, + ἀπόφυσις, a process, as of bone: see apophysis.] The second element of the typical hemal arch of a vertebra, situated between the pleurapophysis and the hemal spine, corresponding in part to the neurapophysis of the neural arch. Thus, a costal cartilage, intervening between the bony part of a rib and a segment of the sternum, is a hemapophysis. See cut under endoskeleton.

hemarthrus, hæmarthrus (hē-mär'thrus), n. [< Gr. αἷμα, blood, + ἄρθρον, joint.] In pathol., the presence of blood in the synovial cavity of a joint.

hemastatic, hæmastatic (hem-a-stat'ik), a. and n. [< Gr. αἷμα, blood, + στατικός, causing to stand: see static.] I. a. 1. Relating to hemastatics.—2. In med., serving to arrest the escape or flow of blood; arresting hemorrhage; styptic.

II. n. A remedy for stanching a flow of blood.

hemastatics, hæmastatics (hem-a-stat'iks), n. [Pl. of hemastatic, hæmastatic: see -ics.] The hydrostatics of the blood in living bodies.

hemat-. See hemato-.

hematachometer, hæmatachometer (hem″a-ta-kom'e-tėr), n. [< Gr. αἷμα, blood, + E. tachometer.] An instrument for measuring the velocity of the blood by making it flow through a chamber in which a pendulum hangs.

For . . . [measuring the velocity of the blood] Vierordt constructed the hæmatachometer.
Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 97.

hematangionosus, hæmatangionosus (hem″a-tan″ji-on'ō-sus), n. [NL. hæmatangionosus, < Gr. αἷμα(τ-), blood, + ἀγγεῖον, a vessel, + νόσος, disease.] Disease of the blood-vessels. Also hematangionosos, hæmatangionosos.

hematein, hæmatein (hem-a-tē'in), n. [< Gr. αἷμα(τ-), blood, + -e-in.] An organic principle ($C_{16}H_{12}O_6$ + 3aq.) derived from the coloring matter of logwood. It forms dark-violet crystalline scales, which show by reflected light a greenish hue, and are sometimes observable on logwood. Also hemateine, hæmateine.

hematemesis, hæmatemesis (hem-a-tem'e-sis), n. [NL. hæmatemesis, < Gr. αἷμα(τ-), blood, + ἐμεῖν, vomit: see emetic.] In pathol., a vomiting of blood.

hematemetic, hæmatemetic (hem″a-tē-met'-ik), a. [< hematemesis, hæmatemesis, after emetic.] Pertaining to or affected with hematemesis.

hematherm, hæmatherm (hem'a-thėrm), n. [< Hæmatotherma.] A warm-blooded animal; one of the Hæmatotherma.

hemathermal, hæmathermal (hem-a-thėr'-mal), a. [< hematherm, hæmatherm, + -al.] Pertaining or relating to the hematherms; hematothermal.

hemathermous, hæmathermous (hem-a-thėr'-mus), a. [< hematherm, hæmatherm, + -ous.] Same as hemathermal.

hemathidrosis, hæmathidrosis (hem″a-thi-drō'sis), n. [NL. hæmathidrosis, < Gr. αἷμα(τ-), blood, + ἵδρως, sweat.] In pathol., the effusion on the skin of blood or blood-stained liquid without gross or evident lesions.

hemathorax, hæmathorax (hem-a-thō'raks), n. Same as hematothorax.

hematic, hæmatic (hē-mat'ik), a. and n. [< Gr. αἱματικός, of the blood, < αἷμα(τ-), blood: see hemato-.] I. a 1. In anat. and physiol., of or pertaining to, or occurring in, the blood; sanguineous; hemal.

Again, who has not observed the effect of depressing emotions to weaken the constitution and engender hæmatic changes, resulting in dangerous anæmia?
Alien. and Neurol., VI. 543.

2. In med., effecting an improvement in the condition of the blood.

II. n. A medicine which effects a change in the condition of the blood.

hematics, hæmatics (hē-mat'iks), n. [Pl. of hematic, hæmatic: see -ics.] That branch of physiological and medical science which is concerned with the blood.

hematidrosis, hæmatidrosis (hem″a-ti-drō'-sis), n. Same as hemathidrosis.

hematin, hæmatin (hem'a-tin), n. [< NL. hæmatina; < Gr. αἷμα(τ-), blood, + -in[2]. Cf. Gr. αἱμάτινος, of blood.] 1. The pigment radicle which, in combination with globin, constitutes the red coloring matter of the blood (oxyhemoglobin). It is an amorphous material of a brownish color. With hydrochloric acid it combines to form hemin, which is a crystalline product. Upon this property Teichmann's test for blood coloring matter is based.

2. Same as hematoxylin.

★ Also spelled hematine, hæmatine.

hematinic, hæmatinic (hem-a-tin'ik), a. [< hematin, hæmatin, + -ic.] A medicine, as a preparation of iron, which tends to increase the amount of hemoglobin in the blood.

hematinometer, hæmatinometer (hem″a-ti-nom'e-tėr), n. Same as hemoglobinometer.

hematinuria, hæmatinuria (hem″a-ti-nū'ri-ą), n. [NL. hæmatinuria, < hæmatina, hematin, + Gr. οὖρον, urine.] In pathol., the presence of hematin in the urine: a term once used specifically to designate what is now called hemoglobinuria.★

hematite, hæmatite (hem'a-tīt), n. [< L. hæmatites, < Gr. αἱματίτης (sc. λίθος, stone), red iron ore, prop. adj., blood-like, < αἷμα(τ-), blood.] Native anhydrous iron sesquioxid, or red oxid of iron, Fe_2O_3. It crystallizes in the rhombohedral system, and occurs in iron-black crystals with brilliant metallic luster (called specular iron and iron-glance), also in thin tabular crystals or scales, often red by transmitted light. More commonly it is massive, with structure varying from compact to foliated and micaceous (iron-mica or micaceous iron ore), also to columnar and fibrous, and further to earthy (red ocher) and impure argillaceous (ironstone) kinds. All varieties have a red streak. It is one of the most valuable ores of iron, and is mined in large quantities, as in the Marquette region of Lake Superior. It is sometimes called bloodstone and oligiste iron (fer oligiste); also often red hematite, to distinguish it from the related hydrated ore, brown hematite, or limonite, which has a brown streak. See cut under reniform.

hematitic, hæmatitic (hem-ạ-tit′ik), a. [< hematite, hæmatite, + -ic.] 1. Pertaining to or resembling hematite.—2. Of a blood-red color; also, dull-red with a mixture of brown.

It [Agelaius phœniceus] never, however, has the hæmatitic tint of the red in A. tricolor.
S. F. Baird, Birds of N. A. (1858), p. 527.

hemato-, hæmato-, hemo-, hæmo-. [Strictly hemato-, hæmato-, contr. hemo-, hæmo-, and these forms reduced to hemat-, hæmat-, hem-, hæm-, before a second element beginning with a vowel; so L. and NL. hæmato-, hæmo-, reduced hæmat-, hæm-, < Gr. αἱματο-, and contr. αἱμο-, reduced before a vowel to αἱματ-, αἱμ-; combining form of αἷμα, blood. The form hema-, hæma-, in E. and NL. compounds, repr. the Gr. word before a second element beginning with a consonant (as in hemachrome or hæmachrome, hemastatic, etc.), is contrary to Gr. usage. The spelling of words containing this element wavers between hæm- and hem-. Properly, it should be hæm- in L. and NL. terms, and such E. forms as are not yet entirely naturalized; but hem- in E. words entirely naturalized.] An element in many compounds, chiefly scientific, meaning 'blood.'

hematobic, hæmatobic (hem-ạ-tō′bik), a. [As hematob-ious, hæmatob-ious, + -ic.] Same as hematobious.

hematobious, hæmatobious (hem-ạ-tō′bi-us), a. [< Gr. αἷμα(τ-), blood, + βίος, life.] Living in the blood, as a parasite; sanguicolous.

hematoblast, hæmatoblast (hem′ạ-tō-blȧst), n. [< Gr. αἷμα(τ-), blood, + βλαστός, germ.] An embryonic cell, or a group of embryonic cells, which gives rise to the red blood-corpuscles. The hematoblast is an embryonic stage in the formation of the red blood-corpuscles.

hematobranchiate, hæmatobranchiate (hem″ạ-tō-brang′ki-āt), a. Pertaining to or ★having the characters of the Hæmatobranchia.

hematocele, hæmatocele (hem′ạ-tō-sēl), n. [< Gr. αἷμα(τ-), blood, + κήλη, tumor.] A tumor filled with blood. Also called blood-swelling.

hematochyluria, hæmatochyluria (hem″ạ-tō-kī-lū′ri-ạ), n. [NL. hæmatochyluria, < Gr. αἷμα(τ-), blood, + χυλός, juice (chyle), + οὖρον, urine.] In pathol., the admixture of blood with chylous urine.

hematocœlia, hæmatocœlia (hem″ạ-tō-sē′li-ạ), n. [NL. hæmatocœlia, < Gr. αἷμα(τ-), blood, + κοιλία, the belly.] In pathol., effusion or escape of blood into the peritoneal cavity. Thomas.

hematocryal, hæmatocryal (hem-ạ-tok′ri-ạl), a. and n. [< Hæmatocrya + -al.] I. a. Cold-blooded; specifically, of or pertaining to the Hæmatocrya: opposed to hematothermal.

II. n. A cold-blooded vertebrate; one of the Hæmatocrya.

hematocrystallin, hæmatocrystallin (hem″ạ-tō-kris′tạ-lin), n. [< Gr. αἷμα(τ-), blood, + κρύσταλλος, ice, crystal, + *-in*2.] Same as hemoglobin.

hematogenesis, hæmatogenesis (hem″ạ-tō-jen′ē-sis), n. [< Gr. αἷμα(τ-), blood, + E. genesis.] The formation of blood.

hematogenic, hæmatogenic (hem″ạ-tō-jen′ik), a. [As hematogen-ous, hæmatogen-ous, + -ic.] Of or pertaining to hematogenesis.

Intense hæmatogenic icterus followed, with extensive ★decomposition of the blood. Medical News, LII. 409.

hematogenous, hæmatogenous (hem-ạ-toj′e-nus), a. [< Gr. αἷμα(τ-), blood, + -γενής, producing: see -genous.] Arising in or from the blood.

hematoglobin, hæmatoglobin (hem″ạ-tō-glō′bin), n. [< Gr. αἷμα(τ-), blood, + L. globus, globe, + *-in*2.] Same as hemoglobin.

hematoglobulin, hæmatoglobulin (hem″ạ-tō-glob′ū-lin), n. [< Gr. αἷμα(τ-), blood, + L. globulus, globule, + *-in*2.] Same as hemoglobin.

hematography, hæmatography (hem-ạ-tog′rạ-fi), n. [< Gr. αἷμα(τ-), blood, + -γραφία, < ★γράφειν, write.] A description of the blood.

hematoid, hæmatoid (hem′ạ-toid), a. [< Gr. αἱματοειδής, contr. αἱματώδης (see hæmatodes), looking like blood, < αἷμα(τ-), blood, + εἶδος, form.] Resembling blood.

hematoidin, hæmatoidin (hem-ạ-toi′din), n. [< hematoid, hæmatoid, + *-in*2.] A crystalline substance often found in extravasated blood, resembling bilirubin closely, if not identical with it. Also spelled hematoidine, hæmatoidine.

hematolite, hæmatolite (hem′ạ-tō-līt), n. [< Gr. αἷμα(τ-), blood, + λίθος, stone.] A hydrous arseniate of manganese, aluminium, and magnesium, occurring in small rhombohedral crystals of a red color at Nordmark in Sweden. Also called diadelphite.

hematological, hæmatological (hem″ạ-tō-loj′i-kạl), a. Pertaining to hematology.

hematology, hæmatology (hem-ạ-tol′ō-ji), n. [< NL. hæmatologia, < Gr. αἷμα(τ-), blood, + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] The branch of biology which relates to the blood. Also hematologia, hæmatologia.

hematoma, hæmatoma (hem-ạ-tō′mạ), n.; pl. hematomata, hæmatomata (-mạ-tạ). [NL. hæmatoma, < Gr. αἷμα(τ-), blood, + -oma.] In pathol., a swelling filled with extravasated blood. Also hematome, hæmatome.

hematomatous, hæmatomatous (hem-ạ-tom′ạ-tus), a. [< hematoma(t-), hæmatoma(t-), + -ous.] Having or resembling hematoma.

The dura was universally adherent on both hemispheres, and there were hæmatomatous efflorescences in both dural sacs. Medical News, XLIX. 536.

hematome, hæmatome (hem′ạ-tōm), n. [< NL. hæmatoma: see hematoma.] Same as hematoma.

hematometra, hæmatometra (hem″ạ-tō-mē′trạ), n. [NL. hæmatometra, < Gr. αἷμα(τ-), blood, + μήτρα, the womb (L. matrix).] In pathol., a collection of blood in the uterus.

hematope, hæmatope (hem′ạ-tōp), n. [< Hæmatopus.] A book-name of an oyster-catcher, as Hæmatopus ostralegus; one of the Hæmatopodidæ.

hematopedesis, hæmatopedesis (hem″ạ-tō-pē-dē′sis), n. [NL. hæmatopedesis, < Gr. αἷμα(τ-), blood, + (διᾰ)πήδησις, an oozing through: see diapedesis.] Same as diapedesis.

hematopericardium, hæmatopericardium (hem″ạ-tō-per-i-kär′di-um), n. [NL. hæmatopericardium, < Gr. αἷμα(τ-), blood, + περικάρδιον, pericardium.] The presence of blood in the pericardial cavity. Also hemopericardium, hæmopericardium.

hematophilia, hæmatophilia (hem″ạ-tō-fil′i-ạ), n. Same as hemophilia.

hematophiline, hæmatophiline (hem-ạ-tof′i-lin), a. [< Hæmatophilina.] Pertaining to or having the characters of the Hæmatophilina.

hematophobia, hæmatophobia (hem″ạ-tō-fō′bi-ạ), n. [NL. hæmatophobia, < Gr. αἷμα(τ-), blood, + φοβία, fear.] An inordinate fear or horror at the sight of blood. Thomas.

hematopoiesis, hæmatopoiesis (hem″ạ-tō-poi-ē′sis), n. [NL. hæmatopoiesis, < Gr. αἷμα(τ-), blood, + ποίησις, a making.] The formation of blood, usually with especial reference to the corpuscles.

hematopoietic, hæmatopoietic (hem″ạ-tō-poi-et′ik), a. [< Gr. αἱματοποιητικός, < αἱματοποιεῖν, make into blood, < αἷμα(τ-), blood, + ποιεῖν, make: see poetic.] Pertaining to hematopoiesis.

hematorachis, hæmatorachis (hem-ạ-tor′ạ-kis), n. [NL. hæmatorachis (prop. hæmatorrhachis*), < Gr. αἷμα(τ-), blood, + ῥάχις, the spine.] In pathol., an effusion of blood in, about, or between the spinal meninges.

hematosalpinx, hæmatosalpinx (hem″ạ-tō-sal′pingks), n. [< Gr. αἷμα(τ-), blood, + σάλπιγξ, a trumpet.] In pathol., the presence of blood in a Fallopian tube. Also hemosalpinx, hæmosalpinx.

hematose, hæmatose (hem′ạ-tōs), a. [< Gr. αἷμα(τ-), blood, + -ose.] Full of blood. Thomas, Med. Dict.

hematosin, hæmatosin (hem-ạ-tō′sin), n. [As hematosis, hæmatosis, + *-in*2.] The coloring matter of the blood, which in a dry state is used for making Prussian blue. See hematin, 1. Also spelled hematosine, hæmatosine.

hematosis, hæmatosis (hem-ạ-tō′sis), n. [NL. hæmatosis, < Gr. αἱματοῦν, make bloody, < αἷμα(τ-), blood.] In physiol.: (a) The formation of blood; sanguinification. (b) The conversion of venous into arterial blood; arterialization.

hematostibiite, hæmatostibiite (hem″ạ-tō-stib′i-īt), n. [< Gr. αἷμα(τ-), blood, + L. stibium, antimony, + *-ite*2.] An antimoniate of manganese and iron, occurring in black embedded grains, appearing blood-red in thin splinters. It is found in Sweden.

hematothermal, hæmatothermal (hem″ạ-tō-thėr′mạl), a. [As Hæmatotherma + -al.] Warm-blooded; specifically, of or pertaining to the Hæmatotherma.

Thus Vertebrates might be primarily divided into . . . Hæmatothermal, having the four-chambered heart, spongy lungs, hot blood; and Hæmatocryal, having less perfect breathing organs, less complex heart, with cold blood.
Owen.

hematothorax, hæmatothorax (hem″ạ-tō-thō′raks), n. [NL. hæmatothorax, < Gr. αἷμα(τ-), blood, + θώραξ, breastplate: see thorax.] In pathol., the presence of blood in a pleural cavity. Also hemathorax, hemothorax.

hematoxylin, hæmatoxylin (hem-ạ-tok′si-lin), n. [< Gr. αἷμα(τ-), blood, + ξύλον, wood, + *-in*2.] A dye obtained from the logwood-tree, Hæmatoxylum Campechianum, and having the chemical formula $C_{16}H_{14}O_6 + 2H_2O$. It forms small crystalline laminæ, which when pure are colorless and free from bitter or astringent taste. It affords the fine red, blue, and purple colors prepared from logwood by the action of an alkali and the oxygen of the air. A staining-fluid used in vegetable histology is made by dissolving .35 gram of hematoxylin in 10 grams of water, and adding a few drops of an alum solution, which acts as a mordant in fixing the color. It is one of the best staining-fluids known for the nucleus, coloring it a deep blue. Also hematoxyline, hematin.

hematozoic, hæmatozoic (hem″ạ-tō-zō′ik), a. [As Hæmatozoa + -ic.] Living in blood, as a parasitic animalcule; hematobious.

hematozymotic, hæmatozymotic (hem″ạ-tō-zī-mot′ik), a. [< Gr. αἷμα(τ-), blood, + E. zymotic.] Pertaining to a fermentation of the blood.

hematuria, hæmaturia (hem-ạ-tū′ri-ạ), n. [NL. hæmaturia, < Gr. αἱμα(τ-), blood, + οὖρον, urine.] In pathol., the presence of blood in the urine.

hematuric, hæmaturic (hem-ạ-tū′rik), a. [< hematuria, hæmaturia, + -ic.] Pertaining to or affected with hematuria.

hemble (hem′bl), n. [E. dial., also hammil; cf. *ham*3.] A hovel; a stable; a shed. [Prov. Eng.]

hemelytrum, hemelytron, n. See hemielytrum.

hemeralopia (hem″ẹ-ra-lō′pi-ạ), n. [NL., < Gr. ἡμέρα, a day, + ἀλαός, blind, + ὤψ (ὠπ-), eye.] In pathol., a defect of sight in consequence of which distinct vision is possible only in artificial or dim light; day-blindness. The term is also used, however, to express exactly the op-★posite defect of vision. See nyctalopia.

hemeralopic (hem″ẹ-ra-lop′ik), a. [< hemeralopia + -ic.] Pertaining to or affected with hemeralopia.

Hemeristia (hem-ẹ-ris′ti-ạ), n. [NL., < Gr. ἡμέρα, day.] A genus of fossil neuropterous insects, related to the ephemerids or May-flies. Dana, 1864.

Hemeristiidæ (hem″ẹ-ris-tī′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Hemeristia + -idæ.] A family of fossil neuropterous insects, typified by the genus Hemeristia, from the Carboniferous rocks of Illinois. They were of large size, with quadrangular prothorax narrower than the other thoracic segments and ample wings twice as broad beyond the middle as at the base, with the costal border convex in its outer half. When at rest the wings completely overlapped; they had numerous prominent cross-veins, but no reticulations. The type is Hemeristia occidentalis of Dana.

Hemerobaptist (hem″ẹ-rō-bap′tist), n. [< Gr. ἡμεροβαπτισταί, pl., a Christian sect who were baptized daily (Epiphanius), < ἡμέρα, day, + βαπτιστής, baptist: see baptist.] A member of an old Jewish sect which used daily ceremonial ablutions, or of an early Christian sect which believed in daily baptism: little is known of either.

In the Word of God . . . one Baptisme is mentioned (which place the Hemerobaptists or daily dippers slighted). Bp. Gauden, Tears of the Church, p. 296.

hemerobian (hem-ẹ-rō′bi-ạn), a. and n. I. a. Pertaining to or having the characters of the Hemerobiidæ.

II. n. A neuropterous insect of the family Hemerobiidæ.

Hemerobida (hem-ẹ-rob′i-dạ), n. pl. [NL., < Hemerobius + -ida.] A superfamily group of neuropterous insects, of the suborder Planipennia, chiefly represented by the family Hemerobiidæ, but also made by some to include the Myrmeleontidæ, etc.

Hemerobiidæ (hem″ẹ-rō-bī′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., ⟨ Hemerobius + -idæ.] A family of net-veined neuropterous insects having a slender body with a small quadrate prothorax and gauzy wings; the lace-winged flies. Their larvæ are terrestrial, and very useful in destroying aphids; they are known as aphis-lions. The eggs are laid in clusters, each mounted on a footstalk. Chrysopa and Hemerobius are leading genera. (See cut under Chrysopa.) Groups more or less exactly conterminous are named Hemerobida, Hemerobidæ, Hemerobides, Hemerobii, Hemerobiinæ, Hemerobini.

Hemerobius (hem-ẹ-rō′bi-us), n. [NL. (Linnæus), ⟨ Gr. ἡμερόβιος, living for a day, ephemeral, ⟨ ἡμέρα, a day, + βίος, life.] A genus of lace-winged flies, typical of the family Hemerobiidæ. The species are numerous.

Hemerocalleæ (hem″ẹ-rō-kal′ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., ⟨ Hemerocallis + -eæ.] A tribe of monocotyledonous plants, of the family Liliaceæ, distinguished by the cylindrical, funnelform, or campanulate perianth, and the numerous leaves crowded on the short rhizome or base of the stem. The fruit is a capsule, generally loculicidally dehiscent. The tribe includes 6 genera, of which Hemerocallis is the type; they are perennial herbs, with large flowers in variously shaped clusters, raised on a tall, mostly leafless scape, and are natives of Europe, Asia, Africa, North America, and Australia. Phormium tenax, of New Zealand, yields the famous New Zealand flax. Now called Hemerocallideæ.

Hemerocallideæ (hem″ẹ-rō-ka-lid′ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., ⟨ Hemerocallis (-id-) + -eæ.] A family of monocotyledonous plants, proposed by Robert Brown in 1810, now included in the Liliaceæ. The tribe Hemerocalleæ and several other tribes are embraced in it. Now more properly used for the tribe.

Hemerocallis (hem″ẹ-rō-kal′is), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1753), ⟨ Gr. ἡμεροκαλλίς, also ἡμεροκαλλές, a kind of yellow lily that blooms but for a day, ⟨ ἡμέρα, a day, + καλός, beautiful, κάλλος, beauty.] 1. A genus of monocotyledonous plants, of the family Liliaceæ, tribe Hemerocallideæ, chiefly distinguished by its erect flowers, and by having the tube of the funnel-shaped perianth shorter than the spreading lobes, and the 6 stamens inserted in the throat of the tube. The genus embraces 5 species of perennial herbs, natives of central Europe and temperate Asia, with large erect flowers in a panicle at the summit of the leafless scape, and long, narrow, radical leaves. H. fulva, with tawny-red flowers, is the common day-lily of the gardens.

2. [l. c.] A plant of this genus.

> The hemerocallis is the least esteemed, because one day ends its beauty. Bp. Hall, Works, VIII. 183.

Hemerodromus (hem-ẹ-rod′rō-mus), n. [NL., ⟨ Gr. ἡμέρα, a day, + δρόμος, a running.] Same as Cursorius.

Hemeroharpages (hem″ẹ-rō-här′pā-jēz), n. pl. [NL., ⟨ Gr. ἡμέρα, a day, + ἅρπαξ, robbing, a robber: see Harpax.] In Sundevall's system of classification, the diurnal birds of prey, as collectively distinguished from the nocturnal ones, or owls, called Nyctharpages.

hemerologium (hem″ẹ-rō-lō″ji-um), n.; pl. hemerologia (-ä). [⟨ Gr. ἡμερολόγιον, also ἡμερολογεῖον, a calendar, ⟨ ἡμέρα, a day, + λόγος, a count.] A comparative calendar.

hemi- (hem′i). [= F. hémi- = Sp. Pg. hemi- = It. emi-, ⟨ L. hemi-, ⟨ Gr. ἡμι-, in comp., half, = L. sēmi- = Skt. sāmi, half: see further under semi-. The prefix demi-, half, is of different origin: see demi-.] Half: a prefix used in many compound words derived from the Greek. It is cognate with Latin semi-, and equivalent to French demi-.

hemiablepsia (hem″i-a-blep′si-ä), n. [⟨ Gr. ἡμι-, half, + ἀβλεψία, blindness.] Same as hemianopsia.

hemialbumose (hem-i-al′bū-mōs), n. A term introduced by Kühne to designate an intermediary product of albuminous digestion which could subsequently be transformed by trypsin into hemipeptone, and this into various amido-acids, such as leucin, tyrosin, asparaginic acid, etc.

hemiambus (hem-i-am′bus), n.; pl. hemiambi (-bī). [⟨ Gr. ἡμίαμβος, ⟨ ἡμι-, half, + ἴαμβος, iambus.] In anc. pros., an iambic dimeter catalectic (⏑ – ⏑ – | ⏑ – ⏑).

> It was originally used only as a colon in a tetrameter or at the conclusion of a hypermeter or system, but afterward was employed in linear repetition.

hemianæsthesia (hem-i-an-es-thē′si-ä), n. [NL., ⟨ hemi-, half, + anæsthesia, q. v.] In pathol., loss of sensation in one half of the body, right or left.

hemianalgesia (hem-i-an-al-jē′si-ä), n. [NL., ⟨ hemi-, half, + analgesia, q. v.] In pathol., insensibility to pain in one lateral half of the body.

hemianesthesic, hemianæsthesic (hem-i-an-es-thē′sik), a. [⟨ hemianæsthesia + -ic.] Pertaining to or affected with hemianæsthesia.

hemianopsia (hem″i-a-nop′si-ä), n. [NL., ⟨ Gr. ἡμι-, half, + ἀν- priv. + ὄψις, sight.] In pathol., complete or partial loss of sight, affecting one half of the field of vision. The epithets right, left, temporal, nasal, etc., as applied to hemianopsia, refer to the fields of vision, and not to the parts of the retina involved. Hemiopia refers to the same condition, but relates to the vision which is kept rather than to that which is lost. Corresponding, equilateral, or homonymous hemianopsia involves corresponding — that is, right or left — parts of the fields of vision of the two eyes. Crossed or symmetrical hemianopsia is an obscuration of symmetrical halves of the fields of vision, as of the two temporal or two nasal halves. Also hemiablepsia, hemianopia.

hemianoptic (hem″i-a-nop′tik), a. [⟨ hemianopsia (-opt-) + -ic.] Pertaining to or affected with hemianopsia.

Hemiaster (hem-i-as′tėr), n. [⟨ Gr. ἡμι-, half, + ἀστήρ, star.] A remarkable genus of heart-urchins, of the family Spatangidæ and subfamily Brissinæ, having a brood-pouch in which the young are carried and developed. H. philippi inhabits Kerguelen Island. L. Agassiz, 1847.

hemiatrophy (hem-i-at′rō-fi), n. [⟨ Gr. ἡμι-, half, + ἀτροφία, atrophy.] In pathol., atrophy of one half: as, facial hemiatrophy.

hemiazygos (hem-i-az′i-gos), n. [⟨ Gr. ἡμι-, half, + ἄζυγος, unyoked: see azygos.] A left vertebral or azygous vein which has broken its primitive connection with the left superior caval vein, as in man, whose left azygous vein is turned into the right azygous vein, and is called the vena azygos minor.

hemibranch (hem′i-brangk), a. and n. I. a. Same as hemibranchiate.

II. n. One of the Hemibranchii.

hemibranchiate (hem-i-brang′ki-āt), a. [⟨ Gr. ἡμι-, half, + βράγχια, gills.] Half-gilled — that is, having the branchial apparatus incomplete: specifically said of the Hemibranchii.

Hemibranchii (hem-i-brang′ki-ī), n. pl. [NL., ⟨ Gr. ἡμι-, half, + βράγχια, gills.] An order of physoclistous teleocephalous fishes, having the pharyngeal bones and branchial arches reduced or deficient in some respects, and only one bone connecting the shoulder-girdle with the skull. Six families are referred to this order: the Gasterosteidæ or sticklebacks, Aulorhynchidæ, Fistulariidæ or tobacco-pipe fishes, Aulostomidæ, Centriscidæ or snipe-fishes, and Macrorhamphosidæ. E. D. Cope, 1870.

hemic, hæmic (hē′mik), a. [⟨ Gr. αἷμα, blood, + -ic.] Same as hemal, 1.

> Puerperal mania . . . is often as much an insanity of general hæmic and neuric exhaustion, anæmia and shock, as of reflex irritation.
> Quoted in Alien. and Neurol., VIII. 533.

hemicardia (hem-i-kär′di-ä), n.; pl. hemicardiæ (-ē). [NL., ⟨ Gr. ἡμι-, half, + καρδία = E. heart.] 1. Either half of a four-chambered heart — the right, hemicardia dextra, or the left, hemicardia sinistra. — 2. [cap.] A genus of mollusks. Klein, 1753.

hemicardiac (hem-i-kär′di-ak), a. [⟨ hemicardia + -ac.] Pertaining to a hemicardia.

hemicarp (hem′i-kärp), n. [⟨ Gr. ἡμι-, half, + καρπός, fruit.] One of the two achenium-like carpels which constitute the fruit of the Umbelliferæ. Also mericarp.

Hemicarpideæ (hem″i-kär-pid′ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., ⟨ Gr. ἡμι-, half, + καρπός, fruit, + -id + -eæ.] A group of algæ belonging to the Ulvaceæ, established by Fries in 1846, embracing the Lemanieæ, Ectocarpeæ, and Batrachospermeæ.

hemicentra, n. Plural of hemicentrum.

hemicentral (hem-i-sen′tral), a. [⟨ hemicentrum + -al.] Of or pertaining to a hemicentrum; pleurocentral.

hemicentrum (hem-i-sen′trum), n.; pl. hemicentra (-trä). [NL., ⟨ Gr. ἡμι-, half, + κέντρον, center: see centrum.] One of the pair of lateral elements which compose the centrum of a vertebra; a pleurocentrum. Albrecht.

hemicerebra, n. Plural of hemicerebrum.

hemicerebral (hem-i-ser′ē-bral), a. [⟨ hemicerebrum + -al.] Pertaining to either cerebral hemisphere.

hemicerebrum (hem-i-ser′ē-brum), n.; pl. hemicerebra (-brä). [NL., ⟨ hemi-, half, + cerebrum.] Either hemisphere, right or left, of the brain proper; a prosencephalic lobe; a hemisphere.

Hemichlæna (hem-i-klē′nä), n. [NL. (Schrader, 1821), ⟨ Gr. ἡμι-, half, + χλαῖνα, a cloak.] A small genus of plants, of the family Cyperaceæ and tribe Scirpeæ, the type of Fenzl's subtribe Hemichlæneæ, having many-flowered compressed spikes, and the flowers all hermaphrodite. The plants of the genus are herbs, diffuse or cespitose at the base, with long, narrow, grass-like leaves. Only three species, natives of South Africa, are known.

Hemichlæneæ (hem-i-klē′nē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Fenzl, 1836), ⟨ Hemichlæna + -eæ.] A subtribe of the Cyperaceæ, having the genus Hemichlæna as the type.

Hemichlænidæ (hem-i-klē′ni-dē), n. pl. [NL., ⟨ Hemichlæna + -idæ.] In Lindley's system of botanical classification, a group or subtribe of the Cyperaceæ, embracing the genera Hemichlæna, Acrolepis, and Pleurachne, the last two of which are now referred to Melancranis, and all are included in the tribe Scirpeæ.

hemichordate (hem-i-kôr′dāt), a. and n. [⟨ hemi-, half, + chordate, q. v.] I. a. Partly chordate, as the anomalous genus Balanoglossus.

> The true vertebrates and the ascidians being classed together as chordate animals, Balanoglossus is called hemichordate to indicate its supposed affinity.

II. n. A hemichordate animal.

hemichorea (hem″i-kō-rē′ä), n. [⟨ hemi-, half, + chorea.] In pathol., chorea affecting one lateral half of the body.

hemicircle (hem′i-sėr-kl), n. [⟨ hemi-, half, + circle.] A half-circle; a semicircle. [Rare.]

> Her browes two hemi-circles did enclose,
> Of rubies ranged in artificiall roes.
> Sir J. Davies, An Extasie, p. 89.

hemicrania (hem-i-krā′ni-ä), n. [= F. hémicránie (vernacular F. migraine, > E. megrim, q. v.) = Sp. hemicránea = Pg. hemicranea = It. emicrania, emigrania, ⟨ L. hemicrania, also hemicranium, ⟨ Gr. ἡμικρανία, a pain on one side of the head or face, ⟨ ἡμι-, half, + κρανίον, the skull, cranium.] In pathol., headache on one side of the head; especially, megrim when confined to one side; also, megrim in any form.

hemicranic (hem-i-kran′ik), a. [= F. hémicránique, ⟨ L. hemicranicus, ⟨ Gr. ἡμικρανικός, ⟨ ἡμικρανία, hemicrania: see hemicrania.] Pertaining to or afflicted with hemicrania.

hemicycle (hem′i-sī-kl), n. [= F. hémicycle = Sp. hemiciclo = Pg. hemiciclo = It. emiciclo, ⟨ LL. hemicyclus, L. hemicyclium, ⟨ Gr. ἡμίκυκλον, ἡμικύκλιον, a semicircle, the front seats in a theater, a semicircular dial, neut. of adj. ἡμίκυκλος, ἡμικύκλος, semicircular, ⟨ ἡμι-, half, + κίκλος, a circle: see cycle[1].] 1. A half-cycle or a half-circle; a semicircle.

> Besides, upon the right hand of her, but with some little descent, in a hemicycle, was seated Esychia, or Quiet, the first handmaid of Peace.
> B. Jonson, King's Entertainment.

2. A semicircular arena; a room or division of a room in the form of a semicircle; especially, such a room with seats in semicircular rows, or such an arrangement of seats in any room.

> The collections will be displayed in the hemicycle of the central pavilion of the palace of the Trocadéro.
> The Academy.

Hemicycle of Berosus, a kind of sun-dial, said to have been invented by the historian Berosus, and supposed to be of semicircular form.

hemicyclic (hem-i-sik′lik), a. [As hemicycle + -ic.] An epithet applied by Braun to spiral flowers in which the transition from one series of members to the succeeding series, as from calyx to corolla or from corolla to stamens, coincides with a cycle of the phyllotaxis. Sachs also applies the term to flowers that are part spiral and part cyclic, as, for example, in Ranunculus, where the calyx and corolla form two alternating whorls, followed by the stamens and carpels arranged spirally: opposed to acyclic.

hemicylindrical (hem″i-si-lin′dri-kal), a. [⟨ hemi-, half, + cylindrical.] Having the form of half of a cylinder divided in the direction of its axis.

> These two images are by means of a hemicylindrical lens crushed up into two dots of light.
> Encyc. Brit., XVI. 162.

hemidactyl, hemidactyle (hem-i-dak′til), a. and n. [⟨ Gr. ἡμι-, half, + δάκτυλος, a finger.] I. a. In zoöl., having an oval disk at the base of the toes, as some saurians; specifically, pertaining to or having the characters of the genus Hemidactylus.

II. n. A gecko of the genus Hemidactylus.

hemidactylous (hem-i-dak′ti-lus), a. Same as hemidactyl.

Hemidactylus (hem-i-dak′ti-lus), n. [NL.: see hemidactyl.] A genus of gecko-lizards, having the toes dilated as is usual in Gecconidæ, but covered below with transverse imbricated plates in two series, and the body and tail without appendages. It contains some of the commonest species, widely distributed in the warmer parts of the globe, such as H. maculatus, an abundant Asiatic species; H. frenatus, the cheecha of Ceylon; and H. verruculatus, a warty Mediterranean species.

hemidemisemiquaver (hem-i-dem-i-sem-i-kwā'vėr), n. [< hemi-, half, + demi-, half, + semi-, half, + quaver, q. v.]  In musical notation, a note equal in duration to one half of a demisemiquaver or one eighth of a quaver; a sixty-fourth note: written as shown at a. —Hemidemisemiquaver rest, in musical notation, a rest equal in duration to a hemidemisemiquaver; a sixty-fourth rest: written as shown at b.

Hemidesmeæ (hem-i-des'mē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Hemidesmus + -eæ.] A subdivision of the Asclepiadaceæ made by Reichenbach in 1837 to receive the anomalous genus Hemidesmus.

Hemidesmus (hem-i-des'mus), n. [NL. (so called in allusion to the filaments), < Gr. ἡμι-, half, + δεσμός, a band.] A genus of twining plants of the family Asclepiadaceæ, having opposite leaves and cymes of small greenish flowers. H. Indicus yields the Indian sarsaparilla, a reputed alterative, diuretic, and tonic.

hemidiapente (hem-i-dī-a-pen'tē), n. [< Gr. ἡμι-, half, + διάπεντε, a fifth in music: see diapente.] In Gr. music, a diminished or imperfect fifth.

hemiditone (hem-i-dī'tōn), n. [< Gr. ἡμι-, half, + δίτονος, of two tones: see ditone.] In Gr. music, a minor third. According to the Greek tuning, this was somewhat less than a modern minor third, and dissonant.

hemidiploïdion (hem-i-dip-lō-id'i-on), n.; pl. hemidiploïdia (-ä). [Gr. ἡμιδιπλοίδιον, < ἡμι-, half, + διπλοίδιον: see diploïdion.] In anc. Gr. costume, either a short form of the diploïdion or one covering only the front of the person. See also quotation.

A diploïdion worn only in front was called a hemidiploïdion. Encyc. Brit., VI. 454.

hemidomatic (hem$''$i-dō-mat'ik), a. [< hemidome + -atic^{2}.] Resembling or pertaining to a hemidome.

hemidome (hem'i-dōm), n. [< hemi- + dome: see dome^{1}, 5.] In crystal., an orthodome in the monoclinic system: so called because only two planes belong to any given symbol. Corresponding forms are called minus or plus, according as they are opposite the obtuse or the acute axial angle.

hemidrachm (hem'i-dram), n. [< hemi-, half, + drachm, q. v.] An ancient coin of the value of half a drachma; a half-drachm.

hemidystrophia (hem$''$i-dis-trō'fi-ä), n. [NL., < Gr. ἡμι-, half, + δυσ-, ill, + τροφή, nourishment, < τρέφειν, nourish.] In bot., the partial nourishment of trees, due to the unequal distribution of the roots arising from obstruction to their growth in some directions, or from other causes.

hemiedric (hem-i-ed'rik), a. Same as hemihedral.

hemielytra, n. Plural of hemielytrum.

hemielytral (hem-i-el'i-tral), a. [< hemielytrum + -al.] Pertaining to or of the nature of a hemielytrum.

hemielytrum, hemielytron (hem-i-el'i-trum, -tron), n.; pl. hemielytra (-trä). [NL., < Gr. ἡμι-, half, + ἔλυτρον, a sheath, shard: see elytrum.] 1. The fore wing of hemipterous and especially heteropterous insects, coriaceous at the base and membranous at the tip, whence the name. Besides being thus divisible into two principal parts, the hemielytrum proper, or corium, and the terminal membrana, most hemielytra include two other recognizable portions, called the clavus and the cuneus or appendix. The latter is often wanting. See cut under clavus.

2. In Vermes, one of the large imbricated scales which lie in double series along the back of certain scale-bearing marine annelids, as the sea-mice or Aphroditidæ. They are borne upon the upper parapodia, subserve the purposes of protection and respiration, and are often very conspicuous, as in the genus Hermione.

Also hemelytrum, hemelytron.

hemiencephala, n. Plural of hemiencephalon.

hemiencephalic (hem$''$i-en-se-fal'ik or -sef'ą-lik), a. [< hemiencephalon + -ic.] Pertaining to the hemiencephalon.

hemiencephalon (hem$''$i-en-sef'ą-lon), n.; pl. hemiencephala (-lä). [< Gr. ἡμι-, half, + ἐγκέφαλος, brain: see encephalon.] Half of an encephalon which has been hemisected, or longitudinally bisected.

Hemigale (hē-mig'ą-lē), n. [NL., < Gr. ἡμι-, half, + γαλῆ, contr. form of γαλέη, a kind of weasel.] 1. A genus of carnivorous quadrupeds, of the family Viverridæ, the type and only representative of a subfamily Hemigaleinæ, based upon H. zebra of Borneo. Also written Hemigalea and Hemigaleus.—2. [l. c.] An animal of this genus.

Hemigaleinæ (hem-i-gā-lē-ī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Hemigale + -inæ.] A subfamily of subplantigrade Viverridæ, represented by the genus Hemigale. They have a strong sectorial tooth with a large tubercular ledge, the upper molars large and broad, the soles partly hairy, and a ringed tail moderate in length and not prehensile as in the paradoxures, to which these animals are closely related. Usually Hemigalinæ.

hemigamous (hē-mig'ą-mus), a. [< Gr. ἡμι-, half, + γάμος, marriage.] In bot., having one of the two florets in the same spikelet neuter, and the other unisexual, whether male or female: said of grasses.

hemigeometer (hem$''$i-jē-om'e-tėr), n. [< hemi- + geometer: see geometer, 3.] In entom., one of certain lepidopterous larvæ of the family Noctuidæ. They have six prolegs, two ventral pairs and one anal pair, and when walking raise or loop a part of the body, thus somewhat resembling the true geometrids or loopworms.

hemiglottidean (hem$''$i-glo-tid'ē-an), a. In ornith., specifically, of or pertaining to the Hemiglottides.

Hemiglottides (hem-i-glot'i-dēz), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ἡμι-, half, + γλῶττα, tongue, + -ides.] A superfamily of desmognathous grallatorial birds, founded by Nitzsch upon the ibises and spoonbills, associated on account of the small size of the tongue and other characters. The group forms a part of the Pelargomorphæ of Huxley, and it exactly corresponds to the Ibides of Coues.

I associate in this division [Pelargomorphæ] the Herodiæ, Pelargi, and Hemiglottides of Nitzsch, the last group including the genera Ibis and Platalea.

Huxley, Proc. Zoöl. Soc., 1867, p. 461.

hemiglyph (hem'i-glif), n. [< Gr. ἡμι-, half, + γλυφή, a carving.] In arch., the half-groove or -glyph at the edge of the triglyph in the Doric entablature.

hemignathous (hē-mig'nā-thus), a. [< Gr. ἡμι-, half, + γνάθος, jaw.] In ornith., half-beaked—that is, having either mandible much shorter than the other; hemirhamphine.

Hemignathus (hē-mig'nā-thus), n. [NL.: see hemignathous.] A genus of sun-birds, of the family Nectariniidæ, of the Sandwich Islands, having a bowed bill with the lower mandible about half as long as the upper one (whence the name), as H. lucida. Lichtenstein, 1838.

hemigyrus† (hem-i-jī'rus), n. [NL., < Gr. ἡμι-, half, + γῦρος, a circle.] In bot., same as follicle.

hemihedral (hem-i-hē'dral), a. [< hemihedron + -al.] 1. In mineral., exhibiting hemihedrism; having, as a crystal, only half the number of planes belonging to any particular form which the maximum symmetry requires.—2. In math., substituting negative for positive signs in regular alternation.

Also hemihedric, hemiedric.

hemihedrally (hem-i-hē'dral-i), adv. In a hemihedral manner.

hemihedric (hem-i-hē'drik), a. [As hemihedron + -ic.] Same as hemihedral.

hemihedrism (hem-i-hē'drizm), n. [As hemihedron + -ism.] In crystal., that property of crystals in accordance with which they have only half the number of planes required by normal or holohedral symmetry. See holohedrism. For example, if of the eight planes of an octahedron only four are present, the two opposite above and the alternates to these below, the resulting form is a tetrahedron; this, like the complementary hemihedral forms in other similar cases, is designated as plus (+) or minus (−), according to which set of four alternate planes is present. Both plus and minus tetrahedrons may be present together, and an octahedron of a hemihedral species like sphalerite is regarded as made up of these two forms, the two sets of planes being unlike physically (for example, as shown by pyro-electrical phenomena), even when not distinguished geometrically. In the isometric system the type of hemihedrism illustrated by the tetrahedron in which all the parts belonging to half the octants are present (holohemihedral) is called inclined or tetrahedral hemihedrism; this yields independent forms also in the case of the two trisoctahedrons and the hexoctahedron. In the same system parallel or pyritohedral hemihedrism is illustrated by the pentagonal dodecahedron or pyritohedron, the hemihedral form of the tetrakishexahedron; in this, half the parts of all the octants are present (hemiholohedral). The only other independent form of this type of hemihedrism is the diploid, the hemihedral form of the hexoctahedron. (See cut under diploid.) The other forms, however, also show the hemihedrism: thus, a cube of pyrites has only its alternate edges similar. There is also the rare gyroidal or trapezohedral hemihedrism, which, as applied to the hexoctahedron, yields plus and minus forms which are enantiomorphous. Sphenoidal hemihedrism of the tetragonal and orthorhombic systems is similar to the tetrahedral hemihedrism of the isometric system; this is also true of the rhombohedral hemihedrism of the hexagonal pyramid system, which yields the rhombohedron from a hexagonal pyramid and the scalenohedron from a 12-sided pyramid. Pyramidal hemihedrism in the tetragonal and hexagonal systems yields a 4-sided or 6-sided pyramid respectively from an 8-sided or 12-sided pyramid; here the parts present are not those alternate to each other above and below, but each plane above has a corresponding one below, the adjacent pair above and below being absent. Hemihedral forms are themselves, in certain cases, subject to hemihedrism, the result being quarter- or tetartohedral forms. See tetartohedrism and hemimorphism. See also symmetry, 6, in the supplement.

hemihedron (hem-i-hē'drọn), n. [< Gr. ἡμι-, half, + ἕδρα, a seat, base.] A hemihedral solid, as the tetrahedron.

hemihedry (hem'i-hē-dri), n. [As hemihedron + -y.] Same as hemihedrism.

hemiholohedral (hem-i-hol-ọ-hē'dral), a. [< hemi-, half, + holohedral.] In crystal., having half the whole number of planes in all the octants: sometimes said of the parallel hemihedral forms of the isometric system.

Hemileia (hem-i-lī'ą), n. [NL.] A genus of fungi, of which the principal species, H. vastatrix, is very destructive to coffee-plants in Ceylon plantations, where it was first observed in 1869. It has since spread to the coffee plantations of other countries. The genus is a member of the Uredinales, and closely allied to Uromyces. It is described as forming small cloudy yellow spots on the under side of the leaves. The spots gradually become larger and deeper in color and finally are only dark brown blotches of dead tissue. Both uredospores and teleutospores have been observed.

Hemimetabola (hem$''$i-me-tab'ọ-lä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ἡμι-, half, + μεταβολή, transformation. Cf. hemimetaboly.] Insects which undergo incomplete or partial metamorphosis; a subclass or superorder of hexapod insects, including a series intermediate between Ametabola on the one hand and Metabola on the other. The group is sometimes used as conterminous with Hemiptera in a broad sense, and is then divided into Hemiptera, Heteroptera, and Thysanoptera; or it is extended to cover the three usual orders Hemiptera, Orthoptera, and Pseudoneuroptera. Also called Homomorpha.

hemimetabolic (hem-i-met-ą-bol'ik), a. [< hemimetaboly + -ic.] Characterized by hemimetaboly; pertaining to hemimetaboly, or to the Hemimetabola; hemimetamorphic; homomorphic.

hemimetaboly (hem$''$i-me-tab'ọ-li), n. [< Gr. ἡμι-, half, + μεταβολή, transformation: see metaboly.] Incomplete metamorphosis; imperfect transformation, as of an insect.

hemimetamorphic (hem-i-met-ą-môr'fik), a. [< hemimetamorph-osis + -ic.] Exhibiting hemimetamorphosis; undergoing incomplete transformation; hemimetabolic.

hemimetamorphosis (hem-i-met-ą-môr'fọ-sis), n. [< Gr. ἡμι-, half, + μεταμόρφωσις, transformation.] Incomplete metamorphosis. It involves considerable although gradual changes from the new-born young to the adult, as in some fishes.

In some pelagic forms Hemimetamorphosis may occur, or very considerable alterations in their growth and development.

Day, Fishes of Great Britain and Ireland, II. xci.

hemimorph (hem'i-môrf), n. [< Gr. ἡμι-, half, + μορφή, form.] A crystal exhibiting hemimorphism.

hemimorphic (hem-i-môr'fik), a. [< hemimorph + -ic.] Having, as a crystal, the two ends of the same axis modified with unlike planes.

hemimorphism (hem-i-môr'fizm), n. [< hemimorph + -ism.] In crystal., the property of having the opposite extremities unlike in their planes or modifications. It is commonly observed in the case of crystals of tourmalin, calamin, and some other species. Such crystals usually show marked pyro-electrical phenomena. See pyro-electricity.

hemimorphite (hem-i-môr'fīt), n. [< hemimorph + -ite^{2}.] Calamin, or hydrous silicate of zinc: a name given in allusion to the common hemimorphic character of the crystals.

hemina (hē-mī'nä), n.; pl. heminæ (-nē). [L., also emina, < Gr. ἡμίνα, a Sicilian measure, half the ἑκτεύς (L. sextarius), < ἡμι-, half, ἡμισυς, a., half.] An ancient Roman and Greek measure, equivalent to the cotyle. It contained .271 liters, or .572 United States pints.

heminge†, n. See hemming^{2}.

hemiobolion (hem$''$i-ō-bō'li-on), n.; pl. hemiobolia (-ä). [Gr. ἡμιωβόλιον, < ἡμι-, half, + ὀβολός, an obol.] A coin of ancient Athens, of the value of half an obol.

hemiolia (hem-i-ō'li-ä), n. [< Gr. ἡμιολία, sc. διάστασις, an interval one half more, also a verse consisting of a foot and a half, fem. of ἡμίολιος, one and a half: see hemiolic.] In medieval music: (a) The interval or relation of the perfect fifth: so called because produced on the monochord by shortening the string to two thirds of its full length. (b) A group of three notes introduced in the midst of a piece in place of two; a triplet.

hemiolic (hem-i-ol'ik), a. [< L. hemiolius (< Gr. ἡμιόλιος, containing one and a half, half as much again, < ἡμι-, half, + ὅλος, whole) + -ic.] In anc. pros., constituting the proportion of 1½ to 1, or of 3 to 2: as, the hemiolic ratio (of thesis and arsis); characterized by such a proportion of thesis and arsis: as, hemiolic rhythm; a hemiolic foot; the hemiolic class of feet. The hemiolic class is also sometimes called the Pæonic, the two other principal classes of feet being the diplasic, double, trochaic, or iambic, and the isorrhythmic, equal, or dactylic. See Pæonic.

hemione (hem'i-ōn), n. [< hemionus.] The dziggetai, half-ass, or wild ass of Asia, Equus hemionus or Asinus hemionus. See cut under dziggetai.

hemionus (hē-mī'ō-nus), n. [NL., < Gr. ἡμίονος, a 'half-ass,' i. e. a mule, < ἡμι-, half, + ὄνος, an ass.] The specific name of Equus or Asinus hemionus, the hemione, half-ass, or dziggetai: used also as the English name of this animal. See cut under dziggetai.

A hybrid has been figured by Dr. Gray (and he informs me that he knows of a second case) from the ass and the hemionus; and this hybrid, though the ass only occasionally has stripes on his legs and the hemionus has none and has not even a shoulder-stripe, nevertheless had all four legs barred. Darwin, Origin of Species, p. 163.

Hemiophrya (hem-i-of'ri-ą), n. [NL., < Gr. ἡμι-, half, + ὀφρύς = E. brow.] A remarkable genus of acinetans, or suctorial tentaculiferous infusorians, having both prehensile and suctorial processes. H. gemmipara is an example.

hemiopia (hem-i-ō'pi-ą), n. [< Gr. ἡμι-, half, + ὤψ (ὠπ-), eye.] Same as hemianopsia.

hemiopic (hem-i-op'ik), a. [< Gr. ἡμι-, half, + ὤψ (ὠπ-), eye.] Same as hemianoptic.

hemiopsia, hemiopsy (hem-i-op'si-ą, hem'i-opsi), n. [NL. hemiopsia, < Gr. ἡμι-, half, + ὄψις, sight.] Same as hemianopsia.

hemiorthotype (hem-i-ôr'thō-tīp), a. [< Gr. ἡμι-, half, + ὀρθός, straight, + τύπος, type: see orthotype.] Same as monoclinic.

hemipalmate (hem-i-pal'māt), a. [< hemi- + palmate.] Half-webbed; semipalmate.

hemiparaplegia (hem-i-par-ą-plē'ji-ą), n. [NL., < Gr. ἡμι-, half, + παραπληγία, paralysis: see paraplegia.] In pathol., paralysis of one leg.

hemiparesis (hem-i-par'e-sis), n. [NL., < Gr. ἡμι-, half, + πάρεσις, a blackening: see paresis.] Paresis of one lateral half of the body.

hemiparetic (hem-i-pa-ret'ik), a. [< hemiparesis (-et-) + -ic.] Pertaining to or affected with hemiparesis.

hemiphractid (hem-i-frak'tid), n. One of the Hemiphractidæ.

Hemiphractidæ (hem-i-frak'ti-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Hemiphractus + -idæ.] A family of tailless amphibians, typified by the genus Hemiphractus. They have maxillary as well as peculiar mandibular teeth, subcylindrical sacral diapophyses, coracoids and precoracoids parallel, an omosternum, opisthocœlian vertebræ, and the coccyx attached to two condyles.

The Hemiphractidæ include some forms in which the cranial ossification is remarkably developed. This forms a kind of helmet, which develops in some of the species into processes and crests. Stand. Nat. Hist., III. 339.

Hemiphractus (hem-i-frak'tus), n. [NL., lit. 'half-mailed' (cf. cataphract), < Gr. ἡμίφρακτος, half-fenced, < ἡμι-, half, + φρακτός, verbal adj. of φράσσειν, fence, stop up.] A genus of tailless amphibians, typical of the family Hemiphractidæ.

hemiphrase (hem'i-frāz), n. [< Gr. ἡμι-, half, + φράσις, phrase.] In music, a half-phrase, ★usually occupying only one measure.

hemiplegia (hem-i-plē'ji-ą), n. [NL., < Gr. ἡμιπλήξ (-πληγ-), also ἡμιπληγής, stricken on one side, < ἡμι-, half, + πλήσσειν, strike.] In pathol., paralysis that affects one lateral half of the body. Also hemiplegy, hemiplexia.

hemiplegic (hem-i-plej'ik), a. [< hemiplegia + -ic.] Relating to or affected with hemiplegia.

hemiplegy (hem'i-plē-ji), n. Same as hemiplegia.

hemiplexia (hem-i-plek'si-ą), n. [< Gr. ἡμιπληξία, < ἡμιπλήξ, stricken on one side: see hemiplegia.] Same as hemiplegia.

hemipod (hem'i-pod), a. and n. [As Hemipodius.] I. a. Pertaining to or having the characters of the Hemipodii.

II. n. One of the Hemipodii (or Turnicidæ); a bird of the genus Hemipodius; an ortygan. Also hemipode.

hemipodan (hē-mip'ō-dan), a. Of or pertaining to the hemipods or Hemipodii.

hemipode (hem'i-pōd), n. Same as hemipod.

Hemipodii (hem-i-pō'di-ī), n. pl. [NL., pl. of Hemipodius.] An anomalous group of three-toed birds of quail-like aspect, corresponding to the family Turnicidæ, and formerly classed among gallinaceous birds; the ortygans, or old-world bush-quails. They resemble the grouse-pigeons (Pteroclidæ) and tinamous in some respects, and in others are related to the plovers. The vertebræ lack the extensive ankylosis usual in birds; the palatal structure is somewhat ægithognathous; and in some at least there is but one carotid and no crop. The genera Turnix (or Hemipodius), Ortyxelos, and Pedionomus compose the group.

Hemipodius (hem-i-pō'di-us), n. [NL. (so called from the absence of the hind toe), < Gr. ἡμίπους (-ποδ-), half-footed (cf. ἡμιπόδιον, a half-foot), < ἡμι-, half, + ποῦς (ποδ-) = E. foot.] The typical genus of Hemipodii: same as Turnix. Reinhardt, 1815.

hemiprism (hem'i-prizm), n. [< hemi- + prism.] In crystal., a prism in the triclinic system: so called because it includes in a given case only two planes which are parallel to each other.

hemiprismatic (hem"i-priz-mat'ik), a. [< hemi- + prismatic, q. v.] Of or pertaining to a hemiprism: as, some feldspar crystals show hemiprismatic cleavage.

hemipter (hē-mip'tėr), n. One of the Hemiptera.

Hemiptera (hē-mip'tę-rą), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of hemipterus, half-winged: see hemipterous.] An order of the class Insecta, founded by Linnæus in 1742, embracing a vast number of insects of diverse forms apparently not very closely related in structure, widely different in mode of life, and collectively known as bugs. The metamorphosis is incomplete, except in the male coccids and related forms. The molt is usually repeated four times, the stage next to the last, preceding the imago, being called pupa. There are four, or two, or no wings in different cases, and rarely halteres. The thoracic segments are either free or fused. The head is free or broadly united to the thorax, with or without faceted eyes. The essential characters of the order are found in the mouth-parts and associate modifications of the head and sternum, and in the wings. The mouth-organs are usually suctorial, the sucking-tube or haustellum being composed (in the higher forms) of two lateral half-channels or semicylindric pieces homologous with the labium and labial palpi. Thus the mouth-parts consist of a jointed tapering tube, arising from the front of the under side of the head, and inclosing four stiff bristles, which replace the mandibles and maxillæ, this whole rostrum being adapted both for piercing and for sucking. There is no sucking-stomach. The modifications of the sternum are such as fit it to support the head and characteristic rostrum. In the largest group of Hemiptera the wings are thick and leathery at the base and membranous at the end. The tarsi are generally three- or two-jointed, rarely having only one joint. Most hemipterous insects feed on plant-juices or the blood of insects or animals, including man, but a few live on the moisture which collects under decaying bark, and certain of the higher forms subsist indifferently upon sap or blood. The Hemiptera have more than once been separated into several different orders, but most entomologists continue to accept the order in its original broad sense, dividing it into several suborders. Three of these universally recognized are Heteroptera, the true bugs; Homoptera, the bark-lice, plant-lice, scale-insects, leafhoppers, cicadas, etc.; and Parasita, the true lice. About 27,000 species are catalogued, and it is estimated that at least 50,000 exist. The Hemiptera thus outnumber far the Orthoptera and Neuroptera, and possibly the Lepidoptera. Formerly also called Ryngota, Siphonata, and Dermaptera (in part).

hemipteral (hē-mip'tę-rąl), a. Same as hemipterous.

hemipteran (hē-mip'tę-ran), a. and n. I. a. Pertaining to or characteristic of the Hemiptera: as, "the Hemipteran mouth," Huxley.

II. n. One of the Hemiptera.

That terrible microscopic hemipteran, the chinch-bug. Pop. Sci. Mo., Aug., 1878, p. 512.

hemipterist (hē-mip'tę-rist), n. [< Hemiptera + -ist.] One who studies or collects the Hemiptera.

hemipteron (hē-mip'tę-ron), n. [NL., sing. of Hemiptera.] One of the Hemiptera.

I noticed a singular case of ants milking a winged Hemipteron, which of course could not be kept in captivity, as they do many species of the wingless aphides. H. O. Forbes, Eastern Archipelago, p. 251.

hemipterous (hē-mip'tę-rus), a. [< NL. hemipterus, half-winged, < Gr. ἡμι-, half, + πτερόν, wing.] Half-winged—that is, having the fore wings partly membranous and partly coriaceous or chitinous; specifically, of or pertaining to or having the characters of the Hemiptera; found in or characterizing the Hemiptera. Also hemipteral.

hemipyramid (hem-i-pir'ą-mid), n. [< hemi- + pyramid.] In crystal., a pyramid in the monoclinic system (see pyramid): so called because it embraces in a given case only four planes instead of eight. Corresponding forms are distinguished as minus or plus, according as they lie opposite the obtuse or the acute axial angle.

hemipyramidal (hem"i-pi-ram'i-dąl), a. [< hemipyramid + -al.] Of or pertaining to a hemipyramid.

Hemirhamphinæ (hem"i-ram-fī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Hemirhamphus + -inæ.] A subfamily of synentognathous fishes, of the family Scomberesocidæ (or Exocœtidæ), typified by the genus Hemirhamphus; the halfbills: so called from the shortness of the upper jaw in comparison with the great length of the spear-like under jaw. These fishes are of slender, straight form, with moderate dorsal and anal fins. There are numerous species, of several genera, some of them viviparous. They are nearly related to the flying-fishes. See cut at halfbeak.

hemirhamphine (hem-i-ram'fin), a. and n. I. a. Pertaining to or having the characters of the Hemirhamphinæ.

II. n. A halfbill or halfbeak; one of the Hemirhamphinæ.

Hemirhamphus (hem-i-ram'fus), n. [NL., < Gr. ἡμι-, half, + ῥάμφος, bill, snout.] A genus of fishes, of the family Scomberesocidæ, giving name to the subfamily Hemirhamphinæ; the halfbeaks. H. unifasciatus is a common representative on the Atlantic coast of the United States, of some value as a food-fish; there are several others. Usually written Hemiramphus. Cuvier, 1817. See cut under halfbeak.

hemisect (hem'i-sekt), v. t. [< Gr. ἡμι-, half, + L. sectus, pp. of secare, cut: see secant, section.] To bisect; especially, to bisect longitudinally, or in equal right and left parts.

A hemisected skeleton [of a vertebrate], showing the variation in size of the neural and hæmal cavities. Science, VI. 223.

A hemisection of the whole body. Science, VI. 223.

hemisepta, n. Plural of hemiseptum.

hemiseptal (hem-i-sep'tal), a. [< hemiseptum + -al.] Pertaining to a hemiseptum.

hemiseptum (hem-i-sep'tum), n.; pl. hemisepta (-tą). [NL., < L. hemi-, half, + septum, sæptum, a partition.] In anat., the lateral half of a partition; the right or left part of a longitudinal septum, as that in the heart and brain.—Hemiseptum auriculare, the lateral half of the partition between the auricles of the heart.—Hemiseptum cerebri, the lateral half of the septum lucidum of the brain.—Hemiseptum ventriculare, the lateral half of the partition between the ventricles of the heart.

hemisome (hem'i-sōm), n. [< Gr. ἡμι-, half, + σῶμα, body.] One half of an animal's body.

The permanent retention of the radials in the abactinal hemisome of the body of Amphiura. P. H. Carpenter, Micros. Science, XXVIII. 304.

hemispasm (hem'i-spazm), n. [< Gr. ἡμι-, half, + σπασμός, spasm.] Spasm of one lateral half ★of the body.

hemisphere (hem'i-sfēr), n. [ME. hemysperie, emyspire, etc.; in mod. E. according to the L.; = F. hemisphère = Sp. hemisferio = Pg. hemispherio = It. hemisferio, < L. hemisphærium, < Gr. ἡμισφαίριον, a hemisphere, < ἡμι-, half, + σφαῖρα, a sphere.] 1. A half-sphere; one half of a sphere formed by a plane passing through the center. Specifically— 2. Half of the terrestrial globe; also, half of the celestial globe, or of the surface of the heavens

Night with his mantel, that is derk and rude, Gan oversprede the hemysperie aboute.
Chaucer, Merchant's Tale, l. 555.

Sterre is ther noone in alle oure emyspire:
Under whoos sight I gynne on November.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 206.

The hemisphere of earth, in clearest ken,
Stretch'd out to the amplest reach of prospect lay.
Milton, P. L., xi. 379.

3. A map or projection of half of the terrestrial or the celestial sphere.—4. In anat., either of the two large convex and convoluted masses, one on each side, which together with the fornix, corpus callosum, thalamencephalon, mesencephalon, and olfactory lobes make up the cerebrum. See brain, cerebrum, and cerebral.—Eastern and western hemispheres, the eastern and western halves of the terrestrial globe. The former comprises the continents of Europe, Asia, and Africa, and their islands, called the Old World, and the latter the two American continents and their islands, called the New World.—Magdeburg hemispheres, an instrument invented by Otto von Guericke, which illustrates the pressure of the atmosphere. It consists of two hollow brass hemispheres fitting nicely together and furnished with stout handles and with a vent and cock. When the air is exhausted, great force is required to separate the hemispheres.—Northern and southern hemispheres, the halves of the globe north and south of the equator, or ★corresponding divisions of the heavens or celestial globe.

hemispheric (hem-i-sfer′ik), a. [= F. hémisphérique = It. emisferico, < NL. hemisphæricus, < L. hemisphærium, hemisphere: see hemisphere.] Same as hemispherical.

A pyrites, placed in the cavity of another of an hemispherick figure, in much the same manner as an acorn in its cup. Woodward, Fossils.

hemispherical (hem-i-sfer′i-kal), a. [< hemispheric + -al.] Having the form of a hemisphere: as, a hemispherical body.

That we call a fayrie stone, and is often found in gravel-pits amongst us, being of an hemispherical figure, hath five double lines arising from the center of its basis, which, if no accretion distract them, do commonly concur and meet in the pole thereof. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., ii. 1.

I saw a pedestal of the earthy trachyte, covered by a hemispherical portion of a vein, like a great umbrella, sufficiently large to shelter two persons.

Darwin, Geol. Observations, i. 52.

hemispheroid (hem-i-sfē′roid), n. [< hemi- + spheroid.] A solid whose figure is approximately but not exactly that of a hemisphere.

hemispheroidal (hem″i-sfē-roi′dal), a. [< hemispheroid + -al.] Having the form of a hemispheroid.

For the minuter examination of the corneules, . . . these must be separated from the hemispheroidal mass. W. B. Carpenter, Micros., § 627.

hemispherule (hem-i-sfer′ōl), n. [< hemi- + spherule, q. v.] A half-spherule.

hemistich (hem′i-stik), n. [< L. hemistichium, < Gr. ἡμιστίχιον, a half-line, < ἡμι-, half, + στίχος, a row, line, verse. Cf. distich, acrostic[1], etc.] In pros.: (a) The exact or approximate half of a line or verse; one of the two commata or sections of a line divided by the cesura or dieresis. (b) Any group of words forming part of a line, and considered or cited by itself; an incomplete or unfinished line.

Virgil . . . will rather break off in an hemistich, than that the line should be lazy and languid.

Garth, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., Pref.

(c) A colon, comma, or group of feet of less extent than the average line, or than the other lines of the same poem or stanza, standing metrically by itself, or so written, as, for example, an epodic line, ephymnium, or refrain.

hemistichal (hem′i-stik-al), a. [< hemistich + -al.] Pertaining to or constituting a hemistich or hemistichs: as, a hemistichal colon or line; a hemistichal division of a verse.

The reader will observe the constant return of the hemistichal point, which I have been careful to preserve and to represent with exactness.

★ T. Warton, Hist. Eng. Poetry, I., Additions.

hemisymmetry (hem-i-sim′e-tri), n. [< Gr. ἡμι-, half, + συμμετρία, symmetry.] Same as hemihedrism.

Hemitelia (hem-i-tē′li-ạ), n. [NL., < Gr. ἡμιτελής, half-finished, < ἡμι-, half, + τέλος, end.] A genus of tree-ferns, of the family Cyatheaceæ, with large pinnate or decompound fronds. The sori are solitary, globose, situated below the apex of a lateral vein or veinlet, generally near the margin. About 35 species are known, all natives of the tropics, and mostly of South America. H. Brunoniana, of the mountainous districts of India, is a handsome fern, often attaining a height of 40 feet. H. Smithii, Smith's tree-fern, of New Zealand, is a hardy species adapted to cultivation. Sometimes incorrectly written Hemithelia. Robert Brown, 1810.

Hemitelieæ (hem″i-tē-lī′ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Hemitelia + -eæ.] A division of the polypodiaceous ferns of the tribe Cyatheæ, established by Presl in 1839, and typified by the genus Hemitelia.

hemitone (hem′i-tōn), n. [< Gr. ἡμιτόνιον, a half-tone, < ἡμι-, half, + τόνος, a tone.] In Gr. music, the interval of a half-tone; a perfect fourth less two tones, represented by the ratio 256:243: not exactly equivalent to a modern semitone.

hemitrichous (hē-mit′ri-kus), a. [< Gr. ἡμι-, half, + θρίξ (τριχ-), hair.] In bot., half covered with hairs. [Not used.]

Hemitripteridæ (hem″i-trip-ter′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Hemitripterus + -idæ.] A family of acanthopterygian fishes, represented by the genus Hemitripterus alone. It embraces Cottoidea with a dorsal fin consisting of a very long acanthopterous and short arthropterous portion, incomplete subjugular or thoracic ventrals with one spine and three soft rays, inflated head with prominent orbits, branchial apertures confluent, but with the branchial membrane broad and continuous below, the trunk antrorsiform, and the vertebræ numerous (for example, 16 abdominal + 23 caudal).

Hemitripterus (hem-i-trip′te-rus), n. [NL., < Gr. ἡμι-, half, + τρεῖς (τρι-), = E. three, + πτερόν, wing, fin, = E. feather.] The typical genus of the family Hemitripteridæ.

hemitropal (hem′i-trō-pal), a. [As hemitrope + -al.] Same as hemitropous.

hemitrope (hem′i-trōp), a. and n. [< Gr. ἡμι-, half, + τροπή, a turning.] I. a. Half-turned: specifically applied in mineralogy to a compound or twin crystal which has two similar parts or halves, one of which is turned half round upon the other.

II. n. 1. Anything that is hemitropous in structure.—2. A twin crystal.

hemitropic (hem-i-trop′ik), a. [As hemitrope + -ic.] Half-turned; hemitropous.

In a good deal of the felspar, however, the edges of the hemitropic lamellæ are too blurred to allow the exact angles to be taken.

F. W. Rudler, Geol. Mag., N. S., III., Dec. iii. 267.

hemitropous (hē-mit′rō-pus), a. [As hemitrope + -ous.] Turned half round; half-inverted: specifically applied in botany to an ovule in which the axis of the nucleus is more curved than in an anatropous ovule. Also hemitropal.

Hemitropous Seed.

ch, chalaza; h, hilum; r, raphe; o, orifice.

hemitropy (hem′i-trō-pi), n. [As hemitrope + -y.] Twin composition in crystals.

hemitype (hem′i-tīp), n. [< Gr. ἡμι-, half, + τύπος, impression (type).] That which is hemitypic.

hemitypic (hem-i-tip′ik), a. [As hemitype + -ic.] In zoöl., only partly typical of a given group, in consequence of partaking of the characters of some other group. Thus, a hemitypic bird is one which, as those of the genus Archæopteryx, shares many characters of the reptilian ★type, and by so much departs from the avian type.

hemlock (hem′lok), n. [< ME. hemlok, also written humlok, humloke, homelok, irreg. < AS. hemlic, hymelic (gen. hemlices), also hymlice (gen. hymlican), oldest form hymblicæ, hemlock; appar. < hem-, hym-, of unknown origin, + -lic, -lice, a termination supposed to be identical with that in AS. cerlic, E. charlock, and late AS. bærlic, E. barley: see barley[1].] 1. A poisonous plant, Conium maculatum, of the family Apiaceæ. It is a tall, erect, branching biennial, with a smooth, shining, hollow stem (usually marked with purplish spots), elegant much-divided leaves, and white flowers in compound umbels of ten or more rays, surrounded by a general involucre of from three to seven leaflets. It is found in temperate regions, occurring in waste places, on banks, and under walls. It is said to be fatal to cows, while horses, goats, and sheep may feed upon it without danger. The poison administered to Socrates, and in common use for the execution of criminals in ancient Athens, is supposed to have been a decoction of it, though some think that this potion was obtained from water-hemlock (Cicuta virosa). Hemlock is a powerful sedative, and is used medicinally. The extract is considered the best preparation. It is often serviceable as a substitute for or an accompaniment to opium. It has been found very useful in chronic rheumatism and in whooping-cough, and in allaying the pain of irritable sores and cancerous ulcers. The virtues of hemlock reside in an alkaline principle termed conine or conia, which is most abundant in the fruit and seeds. See conine.

2. The hemlock-spruce.—Hemlock stork's-bill, the stork's-bill, Erodium cicutarium: so named because the dissected leaves resemble those of the hemlock.

hemlock-dropwort (hem′lok-drop″wėrt), n. Species of Œnanthe and Oxypolis.

hemlock-parsley (hem′lok-pärs″li), n. An umbelliferous plant, of two species, Conioselinum Gmelini and C. Chinense, resembling hemlock, but not poisonous.

hemlock-pitch (hem′lok-pich), n. A pitch, pix canadensis of the apothecaries, obtained from the hemlock-spruce, Tsuga Canadensis.

hemlock-spruce (hem′lok-sprös), n. An American spruce, Tsuga Canadensis: so called from the resemblance of its branches in tenuity and position to the leaves of the common hemlock, Conium maculatum: commonly called simply hemlock. The bark is much used in tanning; combined with that of oak, it is thought to make the best leather. Leather tanned with the bark of hemlock alone has a red color, and is inferior. The western hemlock is Tsuga heterophylla; that of the Southern States is T. Caroliniana. The ground-hemlock is the dwarf yew of eastern North America (Taxus Canadensis), a straggling bush with flat distichous leaves resembling those of the hemlock-spruce.

hemmel (hem′l), n. A Scotch form of hemble.

hemmer (hem′ėr), n. [< hem[1], v., + -er[1].] One who or that which hems; specifically, an attachment or adjunct to a sewing-machine by means of which a hem is made.

hemming[1] (hem′ing), n. [Verbal n. of hem[1], v.] 1. The process of making a hem, as in sewing a garment.—2. The stitch by which a hem is secured; the doubled edge of a fabric hemmed down to the fabric itself; collectively, the hem or hems: as, the hemming was decorated with embroidery.—German hemming, a method of uniting two pieces of textile material in which the raw edges of both are turned down together, and the fold so produced is sewed to the piece of stuff, against which it comes as in ordinary hemming.

hemming[2], himming (hem′-, him′ing), n. [< ME. heminge, < AS. hemming (once in a gloss), a rough shoe: cf. Icel. hemingr, hömungr, the skin of the shanks of a hide: see under hamble.] A shoe or sandal made of rawhide. Simmonds.

hemo-. See hemato-.

hemocœle, hæmocœle (hem′ō-sēl), n. [< Gr. ★αἷμα, blood, + κοιλία, the large cavity of the body.] The general body-cavity or vascular tract of arthropods and mollusks, analogous to the cœloma of a vertebrate.

The main vascular tracts, therefore, are five in number, or, to put it in another way, the hæmocœle is divided into five main chambers. Jour. of Micros. Science, XXVIII. 384.

hemocyanin, hæmocyanin (hem-ō-sī′a-nin), n. [< Gr. αἷμα, blood, + κύανος, blue, + -in[2].] The coloring matter of the blood of various invertebrates. It contains copper. It is blue when oxidized, and colorless in the deoxidized state.

hemodrometer, hæmodrometer (hem-ō-drom′e-tėr), n. [< Gr. αἷμα, blood, + δρόμος, course, + μέτρον, a measure.] An instrument used to measure the velocity of the movement of the blood.

hemodromograph, hæmodromograph (hem-ō-drom′ō-gràf), n. [< Gr. αἷμα, blood, + δρόμος, a running, course, + γράφειν, write.] A self-registering instrument which records the velocity of the blood.

hemodromometer, hæmodromometer (hem″-ō-drō-mom′e-tėr), n. Same as hemodrometer.

hemogastric (hem-ō-gas′trik), a. [< Gr. αἷμα, blood, + E. gastric.] Pertaining to the blood and the stomach.—Hemogastric fever. See fever.

hemoglobin, hæmoglobin (hem-ō-glō′bin), n. [< Gr. αἷμα, blood, + L. globus, a ball, + -in[2].] The red substance which forms about nine tenths of the dry constituents of the red blood-corpuscles and serves as the carrier of oxygen in the circulation. It is crystallizable, and can be resolved into hematin and a proteid residue. It has the property of combining loosely with oxygen, and this compound is called oxyhemoglobin, while physiologists reserve hemoglobin for the deoxydized substance. Also called hemoglobulin, hematoglobin, hematoglobulin, hematocrystallin, chromatin, and cruorin.

hemoglobinemia, hæmoglobinæmia (hem-ō-glō-bi-nē′mi-ạ), n. [NL. hæmoglobinæmia, < hemoglobin, q. v., + Gr. αἷμα, blood.] In pathol., the presence of free hemoglobin in the plasma of the blood.

hemoglobiniferous, hæmoglobiniferous (hem-ō-glō-bi-nif′e-rus), a. [< hemoglobin + L. ferre = E. bear[1].] Containing hemoglobin.

Whether in the Hoplonemertines, where the blood fluid is often provided with hæmoglobiniferous disks, the chief function of the side organs may not rather be a sensory one must be further investigated.

★ Encyc. Brit., XVII. 329.

hemoglobinometer, hæmoglobinometer (hem-ō-glō-bi-nom′e-tėr), n. [< hemoglobin + Gr. μέτρον, a measure.] An instrument for measuring the amount of hemoglobin in the blood. Also hematinometer, hæmatinometer.

hemoglobinuria, hæmoglobinuria (hem-ō-glō-bi-nū′ri-ą), n. [NL. hæmoglobinuria, < hemoglobin + Gr. οὖρον, urine.] In pathol., the presence of free hemoglobin in the urine.

hemoglobulin, hæmoglobulin (hem-ō-glob′ū-lin), n. [< Gr. αἷμα, blood, + L. globulus, a ★globule, + -in[2].] Same as hemoglobin.

hemolymph, hæmolymph (hem′ō-limf), n. [< Gr. αἷμα, blood, + E. lymph, q. v.] The nutritive fluid, comparable to blood or lymph, which occupies the body-cavity of some invertebrates, as polyzoans.

In Eupolyzoa (excepting the Entoprocta) the cœlom is very capacious; it is occupied by a coagulable hæmolymph in which float cellular corpuscles.

E. R. Lankester, Encyc. Brit., XIX. 432.

hemolymphatic, hæmolymphatic (hem″ō-lim-fat′ik), a. [< Gr. αἷμα, blood, + lymphatic.] Pertaining to blood and to lymph; noting a circulatory or vascular system which is not differentiated into separate blood-vascular and lymphatic systems.

hemolytic, hæmolytic (hem-ō-lit′ik), a. [< Gr. αἷμα, blood, + λυτικός, able to loose, < λύειν, loosen.] Destructive of the blood, especially of the blood-corpuscles.

hemometer, hæmometer (hē-mom′e-tėr), n. [< Gr. αἷμα, blood, + μέτρον, a measure.] Same as hemadynamometer.

hemopericardium, hæmopericardium (hem-ō-per-i-kär′di-um), n. Same as hematopericardium.

hemophilia, hæmophilia (hem-ō-fil′i-ą), n. [NL. hæmophilia, < Gr. αἷμα, blood, + φίλος, loving.] In pathol., a congenital morbid condition characterized by a tendency to bleed immoderately from any insignificant wound, or even spontaneously. Also called hematophilia, hemorrhaphilia, and hemorrhagic diathesis.

hemophilic, hæmophilic (hem-ō-fil′ik), a. [< hemophilia, hæmophilia, + -ic.] Having a tendency to spontaneous bleeding.

hemophthalmia, hæmophthalmia (hem-of-thal′mi-ą), n. [< Gr. αἷμα, blood, + ὀφθαλμός, eye: see ophthalmia.] Effusion of blood into the eye.

hemoptic, hæmoptic (hē-mop′tik), a. Same as hemoptysical.

hemoptysical, hæmoptysical (hem-op-tiz′i-kal), a. [< hemoptys-is, hæmoptys-is, + -ic-al.] In pathol., affected with or pertaining to hemoptysis.

hemoptysis, hæmoptysis (hē-mop′ti-sis), n. [NL. hæmoptysis, < Gr. αἷμα, blood, + πτύσις, a spitting, < πτύειν, spit.] In pathol., spitting of blood: usually restricted to the raising of blood ★from the lungs. Also hæmoptoë.

hemorrhage, hæmorrhage (hem′ō-rāj), n. [= F. hémorragie = Sp. hemorragia = Pg. hemorrhagia = It. emorragia, < L. hæmorrhagia, < Gr. αἱμορραγία, a violent bleeding (esp., according to Galen, from the nose), < αἱμορραγής, bleeding violently, < αἷμα, blood, + -ραγία, < ῥηγνύναι, break, burst, = L. frangere = E. break.] A discharge of blood from blood-vessels: usually applied to flux, either external or internal, from a vessel or vessels ruptured by disease or by a wound, and constituting, when considerable and unchecked, an immediate danger to life.—★Bronchial hemorrhage. Same as bronchohemorrhagia.

hemorrhagic, hæmorrhagic (hem-ō-raj′ik), a. [< hemorrhage, hæmorrhage, + -ic.] Of, pertaining to, or exhibiting hemorrhage.—Hemorrhagic diathesis, a constitutional tendency to profuse hemorrhage from slight causes.—Hemorrhagic fever. See fever[1].

hemorrhagy† (hem′ō-rā-ji), n. [< L. hæmorrhagia: see hemorrhage.] Hemorrhage.

That the maternal blood flows most copiously to the placenta uterina in women, is manifest from the great hemorrhagy that succeeds the separation thereof at the birth. Ray, Works of Creation, i.

hemorrhaphilia, hæmorrhaphilia (hem″ō-rā-fil′i-ą), n. [NL. hæmorrhaphilia, < Gr. αἱμορραγία), hemorrhage, + φίλος, loving.] Same as hemophilia.

hemorrhoid[1], hæmorrhoid[1] (hem′ō-roid), n. [In earlier E. form emerod (see emerod[1]); = F. hemorroïde = Sp. hemorroide, hemorroida = Pg. hemorrhoida = It. emorroide = G. hämorrhoide = Dan. Sw. hemorroide, < L. hæmorrhoida (fem. sing.), < Gr. αἱμορροΐς, pl. αἱμορροίδες (sc. φλέβες, veins), veins liable to discharge blood, esp. piles, < αἱμόρροος, flowing with blood, < αἷμα, blood, + ῥόος, a flow, flux, < ῥεῖν, flow.] A tumor in the anal region, either within the anus (internal hemorrhoid) or without (external hemorrhoid), formed of dilated blood-vessels with more or less hyperplastic growth of connective tissue. See piles.

hemorrhoid[2]†, hæmorrhoid[2]† (hem′ō-roid), n. [< L. hæmorrhois (-id-), < Gr. αἱμορροΐς (-ιδ-), also αἱμόρροος, a serpent (see def.), < αἱμόρροος, flowing with blood: see hemorrhoid[1].] In anc. zoöl. (Pliny), a venomous serpent the bite of which was said to make blood flow from all parts of the body.

hemorrhoidal, hæmorrhoidal (hem-ō-roi′dal), a. [< hemorrhoid[1], hæmorrhoid[1], + -al.] Pertaining to, affected with, or caused by hemorrhoids: as, a hemorrhoidal tumor or flux; a hemorrhoidal patient, vein, or artery.

hemosalpinx, hæmosalpinx (hem-ō-sal′-pingks), n. Same as hematosalpinx.

hemospastic, hæmospastic (hem-ō-spas′tik), a. and n. [< Gr. αἷμα, blood, + σπᾶειν, draw.] I. a. Drawing or attracting blood to a part, as a cupping-glass.

II. n. Something which has this property or action.

hemostasia, hæmostasia (hem-ō-stā′si-ą), n. [NL. hæmostasia, < Gr. αἷμα, blood, + στάσις, a standing.] In pathol., stagnation of blood in a part; also, any operation for arresting the flow of blood, as the ligation of an artery.

hemostatic, hæmostatic (hem-ō-stat′ik), a. and n. [< Gr. αἷμα, blood, + στατικός, < ἱστάναι, cause to stand: see static.] I. a. Stopping or preventing hemorrhage; styptic.

Ergot and digitalis, and probably also the acetate of lead, exert their hæmostatic action by causing a contraction of the arterioles. Buck's Handbook of Med. Sciences, III. 477.

II. n. A medicine designed to stop hemorrhage; a styptic.

hemothorax, hæmothorax (hem-ō-thō′raks), n. Same as hematothorax.

hemotrophy† (hē-mot′rō-fi), n. [< Gr. αἷμα, blood, + τροφή, nourishment.] Excessive he-★matopoiesis.

hemp (hemp), n. [< ME. hemp, contr. and assimilated (like hamper[2] < hanaper) < AS. henep, hænep = D. hennep = MLG. hennep = OHG. hanaf, hanof, MHG. hanef, hanf, G. hanf = Icel. hampr = Sw. hampa = Dan. hamp (Goth. not recorded) = Gr. κάνναβις (> L. cannabis, > It. canape = Sp. cáñamo = Pg. canhamo, canamo = Pr. cambe, cambre = F. chanvre, dial. canve, chambe, cambe = (prob.) The Rom., Ar., etc., forms are from the L., the L. from the Gr., and the Gr., Teut., and Slav. forms are supposed to be independently derived from an ancient "Scythian" or Caspian source. The Skt. ça̱na, hemp, appears to be connected. From the L. cannabis come ult. E. canvas, canvass, cannabic, cannabine, etc.] 1. A plant of the genus Cannabis, family Moraceæ, of which there are two known species, C. sativa and C. Indica. It is an annual herbaceous plant, the fiber of which constitutes the hemp of commerce. It is a native of western and central Asia, but has been long naturalized in Brazil and tropical Africa, and is extensively cultivated in many countries. The Indian species, Cannabis Indica, is the source of the narcotic drug bhang or hashish. (See bhang and hashish.) A valuable oil is expressed from the seeds.

Heer fatall Hemp, which Denmark doth afford,
Doth furnish vs with Canvass, and with Cord.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 3.

Hemp when required for cordage is generally sown in drills, when for weaving purposes it is scattered broadcast. A. G. F. Eliot James, Indian Industries, p. 142.

2. The fiber of this plant, obtained from the skin or rind by rotting the stalks under moisture, and prepared by various processes for manufacturing uses. It is tough and strong, and peculiarly adapted for weaving into coarse fabrics such as sailcloth, and twisting into ropes and cables. As the ordinary material of ropes used for hanging, it is the subject of humorous allusion.

What, you speak of Hempe? mary, you terme it with manie pretie names. I neuer heard the like termes giuen to any simple, as you giue to this; you cal it neckwede.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 240.

Let gallows gape for dog, let man go free,
And let not hemp his windpipe suffocate.
Shak., Hen. V., iii. 6.

3. One of various plants of other genera yielding similar fibers, distinguished by specific epithets.—African hemp. See Sansevieria.—Bastard hemp, Datisca cannabina, a plant allied to the Cactaceæ, of western Asia and northern India.—Bengal, Bombay, Madras, or Sunn hemp, Crotalaria juncea, a papilionaceous shrub, ranging from India to Australia.—Bowstring hemp. (a) See Sansevieria. (b) Calotropis gigantea (Asclepiadaceæ): same as madar.—Brown Indian hemp, Hibiscus cannabinus, a plant of the mallow family.—Holy hemp. See holy-hemp.—Indian hemp. (a) Cannabis Indica. See Cannabis. (b) Apocynum cannabinum. See Apocynum.—Jubbulpore hemp, same as Bengal hemp.—Manila hemp, a fibrous material obtained from Musa textilis.—Ramie hemp. Same as ramie.—Sisal hemp, the fiber of species of Agave, especially A. rigida. See henequen.—Virginian hemp, or water-hemp, Acnida cannabina, an amarantaceous plant, a native of the eastern United States near the coast, growing in marshes and along the banks of rivers.

hemp-agrimony (hemp′ag″ri-mō-ni), n. A plant of the genus Eupatorium, especially E. cannabinum, which has a wide distribution and is often cultivated. See Eupatorium.—Bastard hemp-agrimony, Ageratum conyzoides, a plant found in most tropical and subtropical countries.

hemp-brake (hemp′brāk), n. 1. A machine in which the fiber is separated by beating from rotted and subsequently dried hemp-stalks. Also hemp-break.

The common hemp-break will clean two hundred pounds per day. New Amer. Farm Book, p. 252.

2. In her., same as bray[5], 2 (b).

hemp-bray (hemp′brā), n. In her., same as bray[5], 2 (b).

hemp-bush (hemp′bůsh), n. A malvaceous plant, Plagianthus pulchellus, native of Australia and New Zealand, where it is also cultivated. See Plagianthus. Sometimes called the Victorian hemp-bush.

hempen (hem′pn), a. [< ME. hempen (= D. hennepen = OHG. hanafīn, MHG. hänfīn, G. hänfen); < hemp + -en[2].] 1. Made of hemp; pertaining to hemp, or (by allusion) to a rope.

About his neck an hempen rope he weares.
Spenser, F. Q., I. ix. 22.

With hempen cord it's better
To stop each poor man's breath.
Lord Delaware (Child's Ballads, VII. 314).

So many lamentable hempen Tragedies [hangings] acted at Tiburne. Dekker, Seven Deadly Sins, p. 44.

2. Resembling hemp; fibrous. [Rare.]

The former of these are made of the bark of a pine-tree beat into a hempen state. Cook, Voyages, IX. iv. 3.

Hempen caudle†, a hangman's noose: in allusion to a caudle or warm drink taken just before going to bed.

Ye shall have a hempen caudle then, and the pap of hatchet. Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iv. 7.

Hempen collar, the noose of the hangman's rope placed round the neck.—Hempen widow, the widow of a man who has been hanged. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

hempie (hem′pi), a. and n. See hempy. [Scotch.]

hemp-nettle (hemp′net″l), n. A coarse, bristly annual weed, Galeopsis Tetrahit, of the labiate family, resembling hemp somewhat in appearance, the stiff hairs reminding one of the nettle. It is common throughout Europe, and naturalized in North America. Also called hemp dead-nettle.

hemp-palm (hemp′päm), n. The dwarf palm or palmetto, Chamærops humilis, of the Mediterranean region; also, the palmetto of China and Japan, Trachycarpus excelsa, sometimes called Chamærops excelsa. Both of these plants yield a fiber of commercial value.

Male (1) and Female (2) Plants of Hemp (Cannabis sativa).
a, male flower; b, female flower; c, embryo.

hemp-resin (hemp′rez″in), n. The resinous narcotic product of the hemp as it grows in India: same as churrus.

hemp-seed (hemp′sēd), n. 1. The seed of hemp. It is used as food for birds, and also yields an oil suitable for various purposes.

In the same were four Turtle Doves, and many gold Finches, with other birds which are such as our hempseede birds in England.
Coryat, Crudities, I. 19.

2. A gallows-bird; a wag-halter. [Rare.]

Good people, bring a rescue. Thou wilt not? thou wilt not? do, do, thou rogue! do, thou hemp-seed!
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., ii. 1.

To have hemp-seed sown for one, to be destined for the gallows. [Colloq.]

hempstring† (hemp′string), n. One who deserves or is likely to be hanged; a crack-hemp.

Vau. A perfect young hempstring!
Van. Peace, least he overheare you.
Chapman, Monsieur D'Olive, v. 1.

hemp-tree (hemp′trē), n. The chaste-tree, Vitex Agnus-castus, a native of the old world. See Vitex, and agnus castus, under agnus.

hempweed (hemp′wēd), n. 1. The hemp-agrimony, Eupatorium cannabinum.—2. Seaweed; kelp. [Scotch.]—Climbing hempweed, Willughæya scandens, a climbing vine of the United States and tropical America, allied to Eupatorium.

hempwort (hemp′wėrt), n. Lindley's name for a plant of the family Cannabinaceæ, equivalent to the tribe Cannabineæ of Bentham and Hooker—that is, the hemp and the hop.

hempy (hem′pi), a. and n. [< hemp + -y[1].] I. a. 1. Like hemp. [Rare.]

'Twixt the rind and the Tree [called maguais] there is a Cotton, or hempy kind of moss, which they wear for their Clothing. Howell, Letters, ii. 54.

2. Roguish; riotous; romping. [Scotch.]

I was a daft hempie lassie then, and little thought what was to come o't. Scott, Old Mortality, xlii.

II. n.; pl. hempies (-piz). 1. One for whom the hemp grows; a rogue; a giddy young person of either sex: used jocularly. [Scotch.]

When I was a hempie of nineteen or twenty, it wasna my fault if I wasna at the merrymakings time about.
Scott, Monastery, iv.

2. The hedge-sparrow, Accentor modularis. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

hemselft, hemselvet, hemselvent, pron. pl. [ME., < hem, obj. pl. of he, + self, selve, pl. adj.: see he[1], I., D (a), and self, and himself. Themselves is a different form.] Themselves.

That yeveth hem ful ofte in many a gyse
Wel bettre than thei can hemself devyse?
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 396.

hemstitch (hem′stich), n. The ornamental heading for a hem in linen or cotton fabrics, produced by drawing out a few threads running parallel to the hem and catching together in groups those running the other way.

Charlotte Brontë was brought up in old-fashioned days of work-bag and hem-stitch.
New York Weekly Witness, Sept. 30, 1886.

hemstitch (hem′stich), v. t. [< hemstitch, n.] To ornament with a hemstitch.

Cousin Delight looked up; and her white ruffling, that she was daintily hemstitching, fell to her lap.
Mrs. Whitney, Leslie Goldthwaite, i.

hemuset, heymuset, n. [Origin not ascertained.] The male of the roe deer in its third year. Bailey, 1731.

The roebuck is the first year a kid, the second year a girl, the third year a hemuse.
Return from Parnassus (1606), ii. 5.

hemysperiet, n. A Middle English form of ★hemisphere.

hen[1] (hen), n. [Early mod. E. also henne; < ME. hen, pl. hennes, < AS. henn, hænn, hæn (also once henna), a hen (= MD. henne, D. hen = MLG. henne, hinne = OHG. henna, MHG. MS. Cantab. Ff. ii. 38, f. 102. (Halliwell.) hen[3] (hen), v. t.; pret. and pp. henned, ppr. henning. [< hen[2], adv. (cf. hence, v.), or else a var. of hench[1].] To throw. [Prov. Eng.]

hen-and-chickens (hen′and-chik′enz), n. 1. A proliferous variety of the daisy, Bellis perennis.—2. A species of houseleek, Sempervivum globiferum, native of the continent of Europe, sometimes cultivated.—3. The ground-ivy, Glecoma hederacea.

henbane (hen′bān), n. [< ME. henbane, hennebane (> F. hanebane) (cf. Dan. hönsebane = Sw. hönsbane); < hen[1] + bane[1]. The AS. name was henne-belle, hænne-belle, lit. 'hen-bell.'] A plant of the genus Hyoscyamus and family Solanaceæ. Common henbane is H. niger, a native of Europe and western Asia, and adventitious in the U. S.

Henbane (Hyoscyamus niger). a, fruit; b, capsule, cut transversely.

It is a coarse, erect biennial herb found in waste ground and loose dry soil, having soft, clammy, hairy foliage of a disagreeable odor, pale yellowish-brown flowers streaked with purple veins, and a five-toothed calyx. The leaves are used in medicine, and resemble belladonna in their action. They yield hyoscine and hyosciamine. When taken in any considerable quantity, the herb acts as a deadly poison to man and most animals, and is especially destructive to domestic fowls (whence the name). Swine are said to eat it with impunity. Also called stinking nightshade and hog's-bean.

That to which old Socrates was curst,
Or henbane juice, to swell 'em till they burst.
Dryden.

The henbane or insane-root, which the Gauls used for their poisoned arrows.
C. Elton, Origins of Eng. Hist., p. 260.

henbellet, n. [ME., < AS. henne-belle, hænne-belle, < henn, hen, + belle, bell.] Henbane. Halliwell.

hence (hens), adv. [With false spelling -ce, as in thence, whence, once, twice, thrice, and in pl. pence, mice, etc., for orig. -s; < ME. hens, contr. of hennes, this, with adverbial gen. suffix -es, for earlier henne, mod. E. dial. hen: see hen[2].] 1. From this place; from or away from here. [By ellipsis of go, depart, or an equivalent verb, hence is often used with the effect of a verb, especially in command or entreaty, like away.

Early to-morrow will we rise, and hence.
Shak., J. C., iv. 3.

I know you not: what are ye? hence, ye base besognios!
Fletcher (and another), Love's Cure, ii. 1.

2. From this time; in the future.

He who can reason well to-day about one sort of matters cannot at all reason to-day about others, though perhaps a year hence he may. Locke.

Their names shall give fresh offence many ages hence.
Steele, Tatler, No. 92.

3. For this cause or reason; as a consequence of, or an inference or a deduction from, something just stated.

Spight and favour determin'd all: hence faction, thence treachery, both at home and in the field.
Milton, Hist. Eng., iii.

On different senses different objects strike;
Hence different passions more or less inflame,
As strong or weak, the organs of the frame;
And hence one master-passion in the breast,
Like Aaron's serpent, swallows up the rest.
Pope, Essay on Man, ii. 129.

When the upper portion of the plane is revolved until P coincides with P′, D being fixed, PD coincides with P′D, and consequently the angle PDC with the angle P′DC. Hence the angles PDC and P′DC are equal.
Chauvenet, Geometry, i. 5.

4. From this source or original.

Atergate and Derceto, that notorious Syrian Goddesse, happily borrowed the name hence.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 44.

All other faces borrowed hence
Their light and grace. Suckling.

Hence, like thence and whence, though containing in itself the notion 'from,' is often pleonastically preceded by from.

From hence we might descerne the mayne land and very high mountaines.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 110.

hence† (hens), v. [< hence, adv.] I. trans. To send away; despatch.

Go, bawling cur, thy hungry maw go fill
On yon foul flock, belonging not to me.
With that his dog he hence'd, his flock he curs'd.
Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, i.

II. intrans. To go hence; go away; depart.

Herewith the Angell hence't, and bent his flight Towards our sad Citie. Sylvester, Panaretus, l. 1281.

henceforth (hens′fôrth′), adv. [< ME. hens forth, hennes forth, earlier heonne forth, < AS. heonan forth, also forth heonan: see hen[2], hence, and forth[1].] From this time forth; from now on: often with a pleonastic from.

Thanne seythe the Emperour, Now undirstondethe wel, that my woord from hens forthe is scharp and bytynge as a Swerd. Mandeville, Travels, p. 254.

Hitherto he [Clive] had been merely a soldier carrying into effect . . . the plans of others. Henceforth he is to be chiefly regarded as a statesman. Macaulay, Lord Clive.

henceforward, henceforwards (hens′fôr′wärd, -wärdz), adv. [< hence + forward[1], forwards.] From this time forward; henceforth.

Henceforward all things shall be in common.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iv. 7.

She would willingly afford him [the French king] all the assistence she conveniently could, lest the adversaries hence-forward, as heretofore, could reap advantage by his necessity. Camden, Elizabeth, an. 1595.

hencemeant† (hens'ment), a. Intended or plotted from this place.

Henry, as if by miracle preserved by foreigns long
From hencemeant treasons, did arrive to right his natives' wrong. Warner, Albion's England, vi. 33.

Ford, Lady's Trial, i. 1.

Sir, I will match my lord-mayor's horse, make jockeys
Of his hench-boys, and run 'em through Cheapside.
Sir W. Davenant, Wits.

hencher (hen'chèr), n. One who haunches. [Scotch.]

Being a dextrous hencher of stones, it required great nimbleness on the part of the youthful tormentors to avoid his aim. Dr. J. Brown, Spare Hours, 3d ser., p. 336.

henchman (hench'man), n.; pl. henchmen (-men). [Early mod. E. also hencheman, hense-man, henxman, hanshman, haunsman (as a surname existing in the forms Henchman, Hensman, Hinchman, Hincksman, Hinxman), < late ME. hencheman, henshman, hensman, heynceman, henxman, a groom, a page or attendant, prob. contr. from hengest-man*, lit. 'horse-man,' i. e. groom (= G. hengstmann = Icel. hestamadhr, a groom), < ME. hengest, a horse, recorded but once, namely, as hængest, in Layamon, l. 3546 (about A. D. 1200), but prob. surviving much later, or renewed in the compound through Scand. influence, < AS. hengest, hengst, a horse, steed (also in compound local names, as Hengestes-brōc, now Hinxbrook, Hengestesgeat, now Hinxgate, Hengestesrigc (for Hengesteshrycg*), now Henstridge), = OFries. hengst = D. hengst = OHG. hengist, MHG. hengest, G. hengst, a horse (in OHG. also a gelding) (> ODan. hengst, Dan. Sw. hingst, a horse, stallion: the Scand. forms being prop. contracted and the sense more general), = Dan. hest = Sw. häst = Icel. hestr, a horse (Goth. not recorded), + man. For the sense, cf. Icel. hestvörðhr (lit. 'horse-ward'), a mounted guard, Sw. hingstridare (lit. 'horse-rider'), a groom of the king's stable who rides before his coach, a forespurrer, a jockey (= MHG. hengestritter, a rider); so the OHG. forms repr. by ML. hengistfuster, a groom (lit. 'horse-feeder': see foster[1]), and hengistnotus, a groom (OHG. nōt, need). The usual explanation of henchman as 'haunchman,' an invented compound defined as 'a man who stands at one's haunch,' is erroneous.] 1. A groom; a footman; a male attendant; a follower. [Archaic.]

To John Cheyne, Squier for the Body of oure said Souverain Lorde the King and Maister of his Henxmen, for thapparaile of the saide Maister and vij of the Kinges Henxemen ayenst the feste of Midsomer, etc.

Hence—2. A mercenary adherent; a venal follower; one who holds himself at the bidding of another.

A henchman of his [Tweed's], who had a place on the police force, . . . besought the great man's intercession to save him from dismissal. N. A. Rev., CXX. 127.

Twenty-five years ago, if you spoke to an American of a Henchman, he would have understood that you were making an historical allusion. . . . At this moment, however, the term designates a very familiar figure in American politics. . . . The Henchman is, in fact, a necessity of what is called machine politics, or, in plainer language, of the present mode of getting and keeping high office. . . . It is the Henchman who corresponds with the chief, and goes on to Washington or elsewhere to see him when any emergency arises. The Nation, XXX. 398.

hen-clam (hen'klam), n. [So called as being mistaken for the hen or female of some other kind of clam.] 1. The sea-clam, Mactra or Spisula solidissima, of the Atlantic coast of North America. The flesh is edible, and much used for soups and chowders; the large deep shells are used for various domestic purposes, as for scoops, skimmers, etc.

Mactra solidissima and the closely allied M. ovalis are known along our northern coasts as hen-clam, sea-clam, and surf-clam. Stand. Nat. Hist., I. 278.

hendecaphyllous (hen-dek-a-fil'us), a. [< Gr. ἑνδεκα, eleven, + φύλλον, leaf.] In bot., having eleven leaflets: applied to a pinnate leaf.

hendecasemic (hen-dek-a-sē'mik), a. [< LGr. ἑνδεκάσημος (Heliodorus), of eleven moræ, < Gr. ἑνδεκα, eleven, + σῆμα, a sign, mark, σημεῖον, a sign, mark, unit of time, mora: see disemic, dodecasemic.] In anc. pros., containing or amounting to eleven moræ or semeia; having a magnitude of eleven units of time or normal shorts.

hendecasyllabic (hen-dek″a-si-lab'ik), a. and n. [< Gr. ἑνδεκασύλλαβος, eleven-syllabled, < ἕνδεκα, eleven, + συλλαβή, syllable.] I. a. Consisting of eleven syllables: as, a hendecasyllabic line or verse.

The strambotto, . . . one of the three characteristic forms of Italian popular poetry, consists of a single strophe of from four to eight endecasyllabic verses with alternate rhyme in the south of Italy, and rhyme in couplets for the rest of the country, both schemes sometimes occurring in the longer strambotti.
N. A. Rev., CXXVII. 517.

II. n. In pros., a line or colon (series) consisting of eleven syllables. In ancient metrics the name is especially given to certain frequent logaœdic meters, namely: the alcaic hendecasyllabic (– ⏑ – ⏑ – ⏑ ⏑ – ⏑ ⏑), the Phalœcean hendecasyllabic (– ⏑ – ⏑ ⏑ – ⏑ – ⏑ ⏑ – ⏑), and the Sapphic hendecasyllabic (– ⏑ – ⏑ – ⏑ ⏑ – ⏑ – ⏑). This last in the form ⏑ – – ⏑ – ⏑ ⏑ – ⏑ – ⏑ is the Pindaric hendecasyllabic. An Archilochian hendecasyllabic is an iambic trimeter catalectic (⏑ – ⏑ – | ⏑ – ⏑ – | ⏑ – ⏑). An example of Phalœcean hendecasyllabics in English is

Ō yoū | chōrŭs ŏf | īndŏ | lēnt rĕ | vīewĕrs, . . .
Loōk, Ī | cōme tō thĕ | tēst, ă | tinў | pōēm
Āll cōm | pōsed ĭn ă | mētrĕ | ŏf Că | tūllŭs.
Tennyson, Hendecasyllabics.

hendecasyllable (hen-dek-a-sil'a-bl), n. [< Gr. ἑνδεκασύλλαβος, eleven-syllabled; accom. in term. to E. syllable: see hendecasyllabic.] A metrical line of eleven syllables.

Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 1228.

hendely†, adv. See hendly.

hendiadys (hen-dī'a-dis), n. [NL., also hendiadis; < Gr. ἓν διὰ δυοῖν, one by two: ἑν, neut. of εἷς, one; διά, prep., by, through (see dia-); δυοῖν, gen. dual of δύο = E. two.] In rhet., a figure which consists in using two words connected by a copulative conjunction to express a single complex idea; especially, substitution of two substantives so coördinated for a substantive with its attributive adjective or limiting genitive. Thus Virgil (Georgics ii. 192) says 'pateris libamus et auro,' we pour out (wine) in libation from paterœ and gold—that is, 'from golden paterœ'; Cicero (II. Verr. V. xiv. 36) speaks of 'jus imaginis ad memoriam posteritatemque prodendæ,' the right of transmitting one's portrait to memory and posterity, for 'to the memory of posterity.' Verbs can be used in the same way: as, 'fundi fugarique,' to be overthrown and put to flight—that is, to be utterly routed.

hendly†, a. [ME. hendlic, hendelich; < hend[2] + -ly[1].] Same as hend[2], 3 and 4. Layamon.

hendly†, adv. [ME. hendly, hendely, hendeli, hendlich, hendeliche, hindely, hyndly, etc.; < hend[2] + -ly[2].] Conveniently; easily; skilfully; cleverly; courteously; graciously.

Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 40.

henen†, adv. See hen[2].

henequen, henequin (hen'ē-ken, -kin), n. [Sp. jeniquén, from the name of the fiber among the Indians in the vicinity of the Isthmus of Panama: Nahuatl nequen, a garment or stuff made of the fiber.] A fiber known as Sisal hemp, obtained principally from Agave rigida of Yucatan; also, the plant itself. Undoubtedly several species of Agave furnish this fiber, but they have been so long in cultivation that it is difficult or impossible to identify them. These plants yield a return of leaves when four or five years old, and with proper management may last as long as fifty or sixty years. The fiber is especially valuable for use in ship's cables, since it resists dampness better than hemp.

hen-fish (hen'fish), n. The pomfret, Brama rayi, a fish of the family Bramidæ. [Ireland.]

hengt. Middle English present and preterit of hang.

henget, n. 1. A Middle English form of hinge.—2. The heart, liver, and lights of an animal. Ord. and Reg., p. 96. (Halliwell.)—3. See the extract.

The present name [Stonehenge] is Saxon, though the work is beyond all comparison older, signifying an hanging rod or pole, i. e. a Gallows, from the hanging parts, architraves, or rather imposts; and pendulous rocks are still in Yorkshire called Henges.
Defoe, Tour through Great Britain, I. 305.

hengelt, henglet, n. See hingle.

hengent, n. [AS., prison, confinement (orig. in stocks or pillory), also a cross, gibbet, and abstractly hanging (= OS. hanginna, cross), < hōn, pp. hangen, hang: see hang. Cf. hangwite.] Prison: an Anglo-Saxon word occurring in the (Latin) laws ascribed to Henry I.

hen-harrier (hen'har″i-ėr), n. A bird of prey of the genus Circus, especially the European marsh-hawk, C. cyaneus: so named from their depredations in the poultry-yard. See harrier[2], 2, and cut under Circinæ.

A hen-harrier bore in his talons a chicken to his young.
S. Judd, Margaret, i. 16.

hen-hawk (hen'hâk), n. Any hawk that preys upon poultry. Also called chicken-hawk. Specifically—(a) The hen-harrier. (b) The goshawk. (c) Some species of Buteo or buzzard proper, as the red-tailed (B. borealis), the red-shouldered (B. lineatus), the broad-winged (B. pennsylvanicus), and others. See cut under Buteo.—Blue hen-hawk, the adult American goshawk, Astur atricapillus.

hen-heart† (hen'härt), n. [ME. henne-harte.] One who has, as it were, the heart of a hen; a chicken-hearted fellow; a coward; a poltroon.

Be the deuyllis nese, ȝe ar doggydly diseasid,
A! henne-harte! ill happe mot ȝou hente.
York Plays, p. 326.

hen-hearted (hen'här″ted), a. Timid; cowardly; dastardly; chicken-hearted.

She is hen-hearted, shee dares not looke Truth in the face. N. Ward, Simple Cobler, p. 74.

Henicuridæ (hen-i-kū'ri-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Henicurus + -idæ.] A family of passerine birds with booted tarsi, long, deeply forked tails, each feather tipped with white, and 10 primaries; the forktails. They have some superficial resemblance to the wagtails of the family Motacillidæ. There are only three genera and less than a dozen species, of Asia and lands further east. Also written Enicuridæ.

Henicurus (hen-i-kū'rus), n. [NL., also improp. Enicurus (C. J. Temminck, 1838), < Gr. ἑνικός, single (in zoölogical use implying 'singular'), + οὐρά, tail.] 1. In ornith., the typical genus of the family Henicuridæ.—2. In entom.: (a) A genus of beetles, of the family Malacodermidæ, founded by Stephens in 1830. There are many European and a few South American species. H. hirtus is an example. (b) A genus of flies. Walker.

henkt, n. An obsolete form of ink.

Henlean (hen'lē-an), a. Pertaining to the German anatomist Henle (1809–85).—Henlean membrane, the fenestrated membrane of Henle, the third or outer layer of the inner coat of an artery, consisting of a network of elastic fiber.

hen-mold (hen'mōld), n. A kind of black spongy soil.

henna (hen'ä), n. [= F. henné, hinné, < Ar. hennā, name of the plant. Cf. alcanna, alkenna, alhenna, and alkanet.] 1. The Egyptian privet or flower of Paradise, Lawsonia inermis, of the family Lythraceæ, a shrub bearing opposite entire leaves and numerous small and fragrant white flowers. It was called by Mohammed "chief of the flowers of this world and the next." It is cultivated extensively in Egypt. The powdered leaves form a large article of export to Persia and the Turkish possessions, where they are used as a dye, and in the form of a paste as a cosmetic. (See def. 2.) They produce a reddish-brown color, and in Europe are employed in dyeing leather. Henna is considered the best hedge-plant in India.

Branch of Henna (Lawsonia inermis), with flower and fruit.

2. A paste made from the leaves of this plant by mixture with catechu, used in the East by women to stain their nails, finger-tips, and eyelids, and by men to dye their beards. The reddish-orange color it imparts is not permanent. It is often deepened to black by the addition of other ingredients.

hennet, adv. A Middle English form of hen[2].

hennery (hen'ėr-i), n.; pl. henneries (-iz). [< hen[1] + -ery.] A place where fowls are kept; a poultry-yard.

Henrician (hen-rish'an), n. and a. [< ML. Henricianus, < Henricus, Latinized form of MHG. Heinrīh, Heimrīch, OHG. Heimarīh, Heimirīh, G. Heinrich, E. Henry, a proper name.] I. n. 1. One of a sect of religious reformers in Switzerland and southern France in the twelfth century, followers of Henry of Lausanne.—2. A follower or an adherent of the Emperor Henry IV., who opposed Gregory VII. in favor of the antipope Clement III.

II. a. Pertaining to or effected by Henry VIII. of England; supporting the religious movement or laws of Henry VIII.

Already had Doctor Richard Smith, reader of Divinity in Oxford, a versatile and unfortunate man, been compelled by the Archbishop to retract the chief articles of the Henrician settlement of religion.
R. W. Dixon, Hist. Church of Eng., xv.

Henriquezia (hen-ri-kwē'zi-ä), n. [NL. (Richard Spruce, 1854), < Henriquez, a proper name.] A genus of dicotyledonous sympetalous plants, belonging to the family Rubiaceæ, and giving name to a tribe Henriquezieæ. The 4-cleft limb of the calyx is deciduous by a transverse section; there are 5 slender stamens in the throat of the corolla; the capsule is large, woody, 2-celled, 2-valved, and shaped like a bean; and the cells are 4-seeded. The genus includes five species of handsome trees, natives of the Amazon valley and British Guiana, with stout branches and verticillate, leathery, oblong or obovate, entire leaves.

Henriqueziеæ (hen″ri-kwē-zī'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Henriquezia + -eæ.] A tribe of dicotyledonous sympetalous plants, of the family Rubiaceæ, distinguished by having a 2-lipped imbricate corolla and from 2 to 4 broadly winged seeds in each of the two cells of the capsule. The tribe contains two genera, natives of tropical South America, tall trees with large elliptical coriaceous leaves and large deciduous stipules.

hen-roost (hen'röst), n. A place where poultry rest at night.

henry (hen'ri), n.; pl. henries or henrys (-riz). [From Joseph Henry, 1797–1878.] An electrical unit, the induction in a circuit when the electromotive force induced in this circuit is one international volt while the inducing current varies at the rate of one ampere per second.

hen's-bill (henz'bil), n. The sainfoin, Onobrychis Onobrychis, a papilionaceous plant common in Europe; also, any of the species of Onobrychis.

hen's-foot (henz'fůt), n. [A translation of the Latin pes pulli, the ancient name of the plant given from the resemblance of its leaves to a hen's claw (Theophrastus, p. 812).] An umbelliferous weed, Caucalis daucoides, of chalky soils in central and southern Europe and the Orient. Also called bur-parsley and hedgehog-parsley.

Hensloviaceæ (hen-slō-vi-ā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Henslowia + -aceæ.] A family of plants proposed by Lindley in 1836 for the sole genus Henslowia of Wallich (not of Blume), subsequently placed by him in the Hydrangeaceæ. The genus is now referred to Crypteronia.

Henslovian (hen-slō'vi-an), a. [< Henslow (see def.) + -ian.] Pertaining to J. S. Henslow (1796–1861), an English botanist.—Henslovian membrane, the cuticle of plants, of which Henslow was one of the discoverers.

Henslowia (hen-slō'i-ä), n. [NL., named after J. S. Henslow: see Henslovian.] 1. An untenable name for Dendrotrophe, a genus of dicotyledonous plants of the family Santalaceæ, with monœcious or dicœcious flowers, the lobes of the perianth 5 or 6 in number and open to the epigynous disk, an inferior ovary, the stamens 5 or 6 in number and inserted at the base of and opposite to the perianth-lobes, and drupaceous 1-seeded fruit. The genus includes 13 species of shrubs, often parasitic on trees: the species are natives of India, China, and the Malay archipelago.
2. The name given by Wallich in 1832 to Crypteronia, a genus of plants now made the type of the family Crypteroniaceæ.

Henslowieæ (hen-slō-ī'ē-ē), n. pl. [< Henslowia + -eæ.] A family of plants introduced by Reichenbach in 1841 for the genus Henslowia of Blume, and placed by him in the Fagineæ, as related to the beech, oak, etc.

hensman†, n. An obsolete variant of henchman.

hent[1] (hent), v. t. [< ME. henten (pret. hente, pp. hent), also hinten (spelled hyntyn, Prompt. Parv.), seize, snatch, catch, < AS. gehentan, seize, hentan, seize (the simple form only thrice, in legal formula implying 'pursue and seize,' i. e. arrest), prob. akin to hunt, q. v. henwoodite (hen'wůd-īt), n. [After W. J. Henwood (1805–75), an English mining engineer.] A hydrous phosphate of aluminium and copper, occurring in spherical forms of a bright-blue color in Cornwall, England.

henxman†, n. An obsolete variant of henchman. Holland.

heo†, pron. See he[1].

he-oak (hē'ōk), n. [Cf. she-oak, a tree of the same genus.] A somber-looking Australian tree, Casuarina stricta, having thread-like, jointed, furrowed, pendent branches, without leaves, but with small toothed sheaths at the joints.

Heopitheci (hē″ō-pi-thē'sī), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ἑως, Attic form of ἠώς, dawn (the east: see Eos), + πίθηκος, an ape.] The catarrhine or old-world monkeys and apes collectively as distinguished from the platyrrhine: all the former belong to the eastern hemisphere, where none of the latter are found: thus distinguished from Hesperopitheci.

heopithecine (hē″ō-pi-thē'sin), a. Pertaining to or having the characters of the Heopitheci.

heore†, pron. See he[1].

heorotaire (hē'ō-rō-tãr), n. [F. héorotaire (Audebert and Vieillot, 1802–7), appar. a Frenchified form of some supposed native name.] One of several small sickle-billed sun-birds of the family Dicæidæ which are peculiar to the Sandwich Islands, as Drepanis pacifica, and especially Vestiaria coccinea, Himatione sanguinea, and H. virens, the plumage of which is used by the islanders in the manufacture of articles of clothing. See cut under Drepanis.

hep[1], n. See hip[2].

hep[2]†, n. An obsolete form of heap.

hepar (hē'pär), n. [NL., in LL. the liver, L. ★a kind of fish, < Gr. ἧπαρ (ἥπατ-) = L. jecur = Skt. yakrit, yakan, the liver.] 1. In anat., the liver. Also called jecur.—2. In old chem., one of various compounds of sulphur with the metals, having a brown-red or liver color.

hepatalgia (hep-ạ-tal'ji-ạ), n. [NL., < Gr. ἧπαρ (ἥπατ-), the liver, + ἄλγος, pain.] Neuralgia of the liver.

hepatemphraxis (hep-ạ-tem-frak'sis), n. [< Gr. ἧπαρ (ἥπατ-), the liver, + ἐμφραξις, stoppage, < ἐμφράσσειν, stop up, obstruct, < ἐν, in, + φράσσειν, fence in, stop up.] In pathol., hepatic obstruction.

hepatic (hē-pat'ik), a. and n. [= F. hépatique = Sp. hepático = Pg. hepatico = It. epatico, < LL. hepaticus, < Gr. ἡπατικός, of the liver, < ἧπαρ (ἥπατ-), the liver.] I. a. 1. In anat. and physiol., of or pertaining in any way to the liver.

> The bile is of two sorts, the cystick, or that contained in the gall-bladder, which is a sort of repository for the gall, and the hepatick, or what flows immediately from the liver. Arbuthnot, Aliments, p. 10.

2. In zoöl., liver-colored; dark brownish-red; hepaticous: as, the hepatic tanager, Pyranga hepatica.—Hepatic air† or gas†, sulphureted hydrogen gas.—Hepatic aloes. See aloes, 1.—Hepatic artery, an artery supplying the liver. It arises from the celiac axis.—Hepatic canal, duct. See duct.—Hepatic colic, flexure, flux, etc. See the nouns.—Hepatic lobe of the carapace of a brachyurous crustacean, a small lateral division bounded behind by the cervical groove, and internally by the protogastric lobe. See cut under Brachyura.—Hepatic mercurial ore, cinnabar.—Hepatic pyrites, iron disulphid; marcasite.—Hepatic tubes, the enteric canal and liver of Crustacea. Gegenbaur, Comp. Anat. (trans.), p. 275, fig. 143.—Hepatic veins, the veins returning the blood from the liver. In man they usually discharge by three trunks into the inferior vena cava.

II. n. 1. A medicine acting on the liver.—2. One of the Hepaticæ.

Hepatica (hē-pat'i-kạ), n. [NL., lit. liver-colored, fem. of LL. hepaticus, < Gr. ἡπατικός, of the liver: see hepatic. Cf. Gr. ἡπατῖτις, liverwort.] 1. The liverleaf, Hepatica Hepatica (Anemone Hepatica). The genus Hepatica of Linnæus is regarded by some authors as a subgenus of Anemone.—2. [l. c.] Any liverwort; a cryptogamic plant of the family Hepaticæ.

Liverleaf (Hepatica Hepatica). a, fruit cut longitudinally.

Hepaticæ (hē-pat'i-sē), n. pl. [NL., pl. of Hepatica.] A class of small moss-like or thalloid plants of lax cellular texture, usually procumbent and emitting rootlets from beneath; the liverworts. They have the capsule irregularly dehiscent or indehiscent, with spores mixed with thin thread-like cells and containing elaters. The sexual reproductive organs are of two kinds, antheridia and archegonia, the matured archegonium forming the capsule. Asexual reproduction occurs under three forms: by innovations, by gemmæ, and by runners. The liverworts and mosses together form the series Bryophyta. The liverworts differ from the mosses in having their stems bilateral, leaves 2-ranked and without mid-vein, capsule never dehiscent by a special lid, and elaters mixed with the spores. They grow for the most part in moist places upon the ground, upon rocks, or the bark of trees, and a few are even aquatic. They are all chlorophyl-bearing, and green or brownish-green in color. The class Hepaticæ, which was first proposed by Adanson in 1763, is now divided into four families: Ricciaceæ, Marchantiaceæ, Anthocerotaceæ, and Jungermanniaceæ.

hepatical (hē-pat'i-kal), a. [< hepatic + -al.] Same as hepatic. [Rare.]

hepaticell (hē-pat'i-sel), n. [< hepati(c) + cell.] A hepatic cell; one of the ultimate form-elements of the liver. Coues.

hepaticologist (hē-pat-i-kol'ō-jist), n. [< hepaticology + -ist.] One interested in or an authority upon the Hepaticæ.

hepaticology (hē-pat-i-kol'ō-ji), n. [< NL. Hepatica + Gr. -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] The science or study of the Hepaticæ.

hepaticous (hē-pat'i-kus), a. [< Gr. ἡπατικός, of the liver: see hepatic.] In zoöl., resembling liver, as in form or color.

hepatine (hep'ạ-tin), n. [< Gr. ἧπαρ (ἥπατ-), the liver, + -ine[2].] An iron-containing nucleoproteid of the liver.

hepatisation, etc. See hepatization, etc.

hepatite (hep'ạ-tīt), n. [< L. hepatites, liver-stone, hepatitis, an unknown precious stone, < Gr. ἡπατίτης*, found only in fem. ἡπατῖτις, of or in the liver, liver-colored, also liverwort, < ἧπαρ (ἥπατ-), the liver: see hepatic.] A fetid variety of barium sulphate, or barite, occurring in compact or cleavable masses. Under friction or the application of heat it exhales a fetid odor, ★due to the presence of carbonaceous matters.

hepatitis (hep-ạ-tī'tis), n. [NL., < Gr. ἧπαρ (ἥπατ-), liver, + -itis. Cf. hepatite.] In pathol., inflammation of the liver.

hepatization (hep″ạ-ti-zā'shọn), n. [< hepatize + -ation.] 1. Consolidation of substance or tissue, as of the lungs in pneumonia, resulting in a liver-like solidification.

> The changes advance unequally [in pneumonia], so that, whilst one portion of the lung is in the stage of red hepatisation, another may be in the grey stage — hence the mottled marble appearance of the consolidation.
> Quain, Med. Dict., p. 875.

2†. The act of impregnating with sulphureted hydrogen gas.

Also spelled hepatisation.

Gray hepatization, in pathol., the second stage of infiltration of the lung in pneumonia.—Red hepatization, the first stage of consolidation of the substance of the lung in pneumonia. The change from the red color to the gray is due to diminished congestion, and to loss of color on the part of the extravasated red blood-corpuscles.

hepatize (hep'ạ-tīz), v. t.; pret. and pp. hepatized, ppr. hepatizing. [< Gr. ἡπατίζειν, be like the liver or liver-colored, < ἧπαρ (ἥπατ-), the liver: see hepatic.] 1. To convert by engorgement and effusion into a substance resembling liver: as, a hepatized lung, in pneumonia.—2†. To impregnate with sulphureted hydrogen.

> On the right of the river were two wells of hepatised water. Barrow.

Also spelled hepatise.

hepatocele (hep'ạ-tō-sēl), n. [NL., < Gr. ἧπαρ (ἥπατ-), the liver, + κήλη, a tumor.] In pathol., hernia of the liver.

hepatocystic (hep″ạ-tō-sis'tik), a. [< Gr. ἧπαρ (ἥπατ-), the liver, + κύστις, bladder.] In anat., pertaining jointly to the liver and the gall-bladder.

hepato-enteric (hep″ạ-tō-en-ter'ik), a. [< Gr. ἧπαρ (ἥπατ-), the liver, + ἔντερα, the intestines.] In anat., pertaining jointly to the liver and the intestine; passing from the liver to the intestine: applied to the bile-duct.

hepatogastric (hep″ạ-tō-gas'trik), a. [< Gr. ἧπαρ (ἥπατ-), the liver, + γαστήρ, the stomach.] In anat., relating to or connected with both the liver and the stomach: as, the hepatogastric omentum or epiploön.

hepatogenous (hep-ạ-toj'e-nus), a. [< Gr. ἧπαρ (ἥπατ-), the liver, + -γενής, producing: see -genous.] Arising in or produced from the liver.

hepatography (hep-ạ-tog'rạ-fi), n. [< Gr. ἧπαρ (ἥπατ-), the liver, + -γραφία, < γράφειν, write.] A description of the liver.

hepatolithiasis (hep″ạ-tō-li-thī'ạ-sis), n. [NL., < Gr. ἧπαρ (ἥπατ-), the liver, + λιθίασις, the stone (a disease): see lithiasis.] In pathol., the formation of stone-like concretions in the liver.

hepatologist (hep-ạ-tol'ō-jist), n. [< hepatology + -ist.] A student of hepatology; a specialist in diseases of the liver.

> Dr. Harley, the English hepatologist and nephrologist.
> Sci. Amer., N. S., LVIII. 98.

hepatology (hep-ạ-tol'ō-ji), n. [< Gr. ἧπαρ (ἥπατ-), the liver, + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] The science of or a treatise on the liver.

hepatopancreas (hep″ạ-tō-pang'krē-as), n.; pl. hepatopancreates (-pang-krē-ā'tēz). [< Gr. ἧπαρ (ἥπατ-), the liver, + πάγκρεας, the pancreas.] In zoöl., a glandular organ of many invertebrates, the so-called liver, supposed to have both a hepatic and a pancreatic function.

> In the Invertebrata the secretions of many glands, which are generally called "liver," but which would be more appropriately termed hepato-pancreas, exercise a digestive action upon starch and albumen, and at the same time secrete bye-products and colouring matters similar to those found in the bile of vertebrates.
> Claus, Zoölogy (trans.), p. 59.

hepatophyma (hep″ạ-tō-fī'mạ), n.; pl. hepatophymata (-ma-tạ). [NL., < Gr. ἧπαρ (ἥπατ-), the liver, + φῦμα, a suppurating tumor, lit. a growth, < φύειν, produce, pass. φύεσθαι, grow.] In pathol., a suppurative swelling of the liver.

hepatoportal (hep″ạ-tō-pōr'tạl), a. [< hepat(ic) + portal.] In anat., of or pertaining to the hepatic portal system; portal, in an ordinary sense: distinguished from reniportal.

hepatorrhea, hepatorrhœa (hep″ạ-tō-rē'ạ), n. [NL. hepatorrhœa, < Gr. ἧπαρ (ἥπατ-), the liver, + ῥοία, a flow, flux, < ῥεῖν, flow.] A morbid flow of bile.

hepatoscopy (hep-ạ-tos′kō-pi), n. [< LGr. ἡπατοσκοπία, an inspecting of the liver, < ἡπατοσκόπος, inspecting the liver, soothsaying, < Gr. ἧπαρ (ἥπατ-), the liver, + σκοπεῖν, inspect, view.] Among the ancients, divination by inspection of the livers of animals.

hepatotomy (hep-ạ-tot′ō-mi), n. [< Gr. ἧπαρ (ἥπατ-), the liver, + τομή, a cutting, < τέμνειν, ταμεῖν, cut.] In surg., an incision into the liver.

hepato-umbilical (hep″ạ-tō-um-bil′i-kal), a. [< Gr. ἧπαρ (ἥπατο-), the liver, + L. umbilicus, the navel.] Pertaining to the liver and to the umbilicus: applied to the fibrous cord, the so-called round ligament of the liver, which passes from the liver to the navel, and is the remains of the umbilical vein.

hep-bramble (hep′bram″bl), n. [Not found in ME.; < AS. heóp-bremel, heóp-brymel, < heópe, hip, + bremel, bramble: see hip[2] and bramble.] The dogrose, Rosa canina.

hep-brier (hep′brī″ėr), n. [Hip-brier* not found; < hep, hip[2], + brier.] Same as hep-bramble.

hepe[1]†, n. and v. A Middle English form of heap.

hepe[2]†, n. A Middle English form of hip[2].

Hephæstian (hē-fes′ti-ạn), a. [< Hephæstus + -ian.] Of or pertaining to the god Hephæstus or Vulcan, or to fire or the arts of metal or smithery; made or done by Hephæstus.

Hephæstus (hē-fes′tus), n. [NL., < Gr. Ἥφαιστος.] In Gr. myth., the god of fire and the metallic arts, son of Zeus and Hera, and one of the great Olympians, identified by the Romans with their Vulcan, who became assimilated to him. He was the creator of all that was beautiful and mechanically wonderful in Olympus. Volcanoes were held to be his smithies, and the Cyclopes were his journeymen. In art he was represented as a bearded man, usually with the short sleeveless or one-sleeved tunic (exomis) and the conical cap, and holding the smith's hammer and tongs.

Hephæstus conducted back to Olympus. (From a Greek red-figured vase.)

Hephthænura (hef-thē-nū′rạ), n. [NL.] Same as Ephthianura.

hephthemim (hef′thē-mim), n. [< hephthemimeres.] Same as hephthemimeres.

hephthemimeral (hef-thē-mim′ẹ-ral), a. [< hephthemimeres + -al.] In pros., of or pertaining to a group or series of seven half-feet; pertaining to or consisting of three feet and a half. —Hephthemimeral cesura, a cesura after the thesis or metrically accented syllable (called by many the arsis) of the fourth foot. This cesura is not infrequent in the dactylic hexameter, especially in combination with the tritheminieral cesura.

hephthemimeres (hef-thē-mim′ẹ-rēz), n. [LL., < Gr. ἑφθημιμερής, < ἑπτά, = E. seven, + ἡμι-, half, + μέρος, a part.] In pros., a group or catalectic colon consisting of seven half-feet. Also hephthemim.

Hepialidæ, Hepialus. See Epialidæ, Epialus.

hepper (hep′ėr), n. [Cf. happer.] A smolt, or young salmon of the first year. [Prov. Eng.]

hepta-. [< Gr. ἑπτά, in comp. ἑπτα-, = L. septem = E. seven: see seven.] An element in many compound words of Greek origin or formation, meaning 'seven.'

heptace (hep′tạ-sē), n. [< Gr. ἑπτά, = E. seven, + ἀκή, a point.] A summit of a polyhedron formed by the concurrence of seven faces. Kirkman.

heptachord (hep′tạ-kôrd), n. [< Gr. ἑπτάχορδος, seven-stringed, < ἑπτά, = E. seven, + χορδή, string, chord, cord.] In Gr. music: (a) A diatonic series of seven tones, containing five whole steps and one half-step (between the third and fourth tones). (b) The interval of the major seventh. (c) An instrument with seven strings.

heptachronous (hep-tak′rō-nus), a. [< LL. heptachronus (Marius Victorinus), < Gr. ἑπτάχρονος (Draco), < ἑπτά, = E. seven, + χρόνος, time.] In anc. pros., having a magnitude of seven primary or fundamental times; heptasemic.

heptacolic (hep-tạ-kol′ik), a. [< Gr. ἑπτάκωλος, of seven verses or members, < ἑπτά, = E. seven, + κῶλον, member: see colon[1].] In anc. pros., consisting of seven cola or series: as, a heptacolic period.

heptad (hep′tad), n. [Also written, as F., heptade; < LL. heptas (heptad-), < Gr. ἑπτάς (ἑπταδ-), the number seven, < ἑπτά = E. seven. Cf. monad, dyad, etc.] 1. The sum of seven units; the number seven. —2. In chem., an atom whose equivalence is seven atoms of hydrogen, or which can be combined with, substituted for, or replaced by seven atoms of hydrogen. —3. In music, in the duodenal system of analysis, a scheme of seven tones, formed by uniting two duodenal cells of four tones. A heptad based on C would be E♭ G—A♭ C E—F A, and would contain all the tones that can enter into consonant triads with the tonic of the heptad, C. See duodene.

heptadecad (hep-tạ-dek′ad), n. [< Gr. ἑπτά, = E. seven, + δεκάς (δεκαδ-), a decad.] In music, in the duodenal system of analysis, a scheme of twenty-four tones, formed by uniting seven decads whose tonics are the tones of a given heptad. See heptad and duodene.

heptaglot, heptaglott (hep′tạ-glot), n. and a. [< Gr. ἑπτά, = E. seven, + γλῶττα, the tongue, a language.] I. n. A book in seven languages.

II. a. Written in or using seven languages.

It was in connection with this polyglott [Walton's] that E. Castle produced his famous Heptaglott Lexicon (London, 2 vols. folio, 1669). Encyc. Brit., XIX. 417.

heptagon (hep′tạ-gon), n. [< Gr. ἑπτάγωνος, seven-cornered, < ἑπτά, = E. seven, + γωνία, a corner, angle.] 1. In geom., a polygon of seven sides. —2. In fort., a place that has seven bastions for defense.

heptagonal (hep-tag′ō-nal), a. [< heptagon + -al.] Having seven angles or sides.—Heptagonal numbers, the series of numbers 1, 7, 18, 34, etc., of the form $1 + \frac{5}{2}n + \frac{3}{2}n^2$.

heptagyn (hep′tạ-jin), n. In bot., a plant of the Linnean order Heptagynia.

Heptagynia (hep-tạ-jin′i-ạ), n. pl. [NL.: see heptagynous.] An order of the Linnean artificial classification of plants, characterized by having seven styles or distinct carpels.

heptagynian (hep-tạ-jin′i-ạn), a. [As heptagynous + -ian.] In bot., same as heptagynous.

heptagynious (hep-tạ-jin′i-us), a. In bot., same as heptagynous.

heptagynous (hep-taj′i-nus), a. [< Gr. ἑπτά, = E. seven, + γυνή, female (in mod. bot. a pistil).] Having seven styles; specifically, pertaining to or having the characters of the Heptagynia.

heptahedral (hep-tạ-hē′drạl), a. [< heptahedron + -al.] Having seven faces.

heptahedron (hep-tạ-hē′drọn), n. [< Gr. ἑπτά, = E. seven, + ἕδρα, seat, base, = E. settle[1].] A solid figure with seven faces.

heptahexahedral (hep-tạ-hek-sạ-hē′drạl), a. [< Gr. ἑπτά, = E. seven, + ἕξ, = E. six, + ἕδρα, a seat, base, = E. settle[1].] Having or presenting seven ranges of faces one above another, each range containing six faces.

heptal (hep′tạl), a. [< Gr. ἑπτά, = E. seven, + -al.] Same as hebdomadal.—Heptal cycle. See cycle[1].

heptameride (hep-tam′ẹ-rid or -rīd), n. [< Gr. ἑπτά, = E. seven, + μερίς (μεριδ-), a part, < μέρος, a part.] Anything consisting of seven parts; specifically, that which separates into seven parts.

heptameron (hep-tam′ẹ-ron), n. [For heptaemeron* or heptemeron*, < Gr. ἑπταήμερον, neut. of ἑπταήμερος, Ionic contr. ἑπτήμερος, of seven days, < ἑπτά, = E. seven, + ἡμέρα, a day.] A book containing the transactions of seven days. The "Heptameron" of Margaret of Angoulême, Queen of Navarre (1492–1549), is a collection of stories supposed to have been related during seven days, modeled on the "Decameron" of Boccaccio.

heptamerous (hep-tam′ẹ-rus), a. [< Gr. ἑπτά, = E. seven, + μέρος, a part.] In bot., consisting of seven members or parts; having the parts in sevens.

heptameter (hep-tam′e-tėr), n. [< L. heptametrum (Diomedes, Servius), < Gr. ἑπτάμετρον (Heliodorus), a measure of seven verses, < ἑπτά, = E. seven, + μέτρον, measure.] In pros., a verse consisting of seven measures. Heptameter is a term not much used; in books on modern versification it is generally equivalent to heptapody.

Heptanchus (hep-tang′kus), n. [NL., < Gr. ἑπτά = E. seven.] A genus of cow-sharks, of the family Notidanidæ or Hexanchidæ, having seven gill-sacs, whence the name. H. indicus is a widely distributed Pacific species.

heptander (hep-tan′dėr), n. [NL. heptandrus: see heptandrous.] In bot., a plant of the Linnean class Heptandria.

Heptandria (hep-tan′dri-ạ), n. pl. [NL.: see heptandrous.] The seventh class in the Linnean artificial system of plants, characterized by seven stamens.

heptandrian (hep-tan′dri-ạn), a. Same as heptandrous.

heptandrious (hep-tan′dri-us), a. Same as heptandrous.

heptandrous (hep-tan′drus), a. [< NL. heptandrus, < Gr. ἑπτά, = E. seven, + ἀνήρ (ἀνδρ-), man (in mod. bot. a stamen).] In bot., having seven stamens; specifically, belonging to the Linnean class Heptandria.

heptane (hep′tān), n. [So called as containing seven atoms of carbon; < Gr. ἑπτά, = E. seven, + -ane.] A paraffin having the formula C_7H_{16}. Normal heptane, a mobile colorless liquid, is contained in petroleum. It is also obtained from the resin of Pinus Sabiniana, which yields nearly pure heptane when subjected to dry distillation.

Heptanesian (hep-tạ-nē′si-ạn), a. [< Gr. Ἑπτάνησος, Heptanesus (see def.), lit. 'seven islands,' < ἑπτά, = E. seven, + νῆσος, island.] Pertaining to the Heptanesus, a name given by the Greeks to the Ionian Islands, a group consisting of seven islands.

Since 1863 the whole Heptanesian territory has been incorporated with the kingdom of Greece.
Encyc. Brit., XIII. 205.

heptangular (hep-tang′gū-lär), a. [< Gr. ἑπτά, = E. seven, + L. angulus, an angle.] Having seven angles.

heptapetalous (hep-tạ-pet′ạ-lus), a. [< Gr. ἑπτά, = E. seven, + πέταλον, a leaf (in mod. bot. a petal).] In bot., having seven petals in the corolla.

heptaphony (hep′tạ-fō-ni), n. [< Gr. ἑπτάφωνος, seven-voiced (of a colonnade with seven echoes), < ἑπτά, = E. seven, + φωνή, a voice, sound.] The union of seven sounds.

heptaphyllous (hep-tạ-fil′us), a. [< Gr. ἑπτάφυλλος, seven-leafed, < ἑπτά, = E. seven, + φύλλον, a leaf.] Having seven leaves.

heptapodic (hep-tạ-pod′ik), a. [< heptapody + -ic.] In pros., consisting of or containing seven feet; being or constituting a heptapody: as, a heptapodic verse or period.

heptapody (hep-tap′ō-di), n. [< Gr. as if ἑπταποδία*, < ἑπτά, = E. seven, + πούς (ποδ-) = E. foot.] In pros., a meter, period, or verse consisting of seven feet. According to the principles of ancient metrics, a heptapody exceeds the limits of a colon, a single colon never containing more than six feet. See heptameter.

heptarch (hep′tärk), n. [< Gr. ἑπτά, = E. seven, + ἀρχός, a ruler: see heptarchy.] A heptarchist.

heptarchic (hep-tär′kik), a. [< heptarchy + -ic.] Pertaining to a sevenfold government; constituting or consisting of a heptarchy; specifically, in Eng. hist., of or pertaining to the heptarchy. See heptarchy.

The Saxons practised this mode of division for fixing the several extents of their heptarchic empire.
T. Warton, Hist. Kiddington, p. 69.

heptarchist (hep′tär-kist), n. [< heptarchy + -ist.] A ruler of one division of a heptarchy; especially, in Eng. hist., one of the heptarchic kings.

In 752, the Saxon heptarchists, Cuthred and Ethelbald, fought a desperate battle at Beorgford, or Burford.
T. Warton, Hist. Kiddington, p. 48.

heptarchy (hep′tär-ki), n.; pl. heptarchies (-kiz). [< NL. heptarchia, < Gr. as if ἑπταρχία*, < ἑπτά, = E. seven, + ἀρχή, rule, < ἄρχειν, rule.] A government by seven persons; also, a group of seven kingdoms or governments: in the latter sense used only in English history, of the seven principal Anglo-Saxon kingdoms of Kent, Sussex, Wessex, Essex, Northumbria, East Anglia, and Mercia. There was no formal division into seven kingdoms, but their number varied at different times, and frequently a particular kingdom, as Northumbria or Mercia, obtained the preponderance. The period of the heptarchy is regarded as ending in 829, when Egbert, king of Wessex, became overlord of the other kingdoms.

This Heptarchy, or Division of this Island into seven Kingdoms, came not in all at once.
Baker, Chronicles, p. 5.

heptasemic (hep-tạ-sē′mik), a. [< LL. heptasemos, < Gr. ἑπτάσημος, < ἑπτά, = E. seven, + σημεῖον, a sign, mark, mora, < σῆμα, a sign, mark. Cf. disemic, dodecasemic, etc.] In anc. pros., containing or amounting to seven moræ or units of time; having a magnitude of seven normal shorts. An epitrite (⏑ – – –, – ⏑ – –, – – ⏑ –, – – – ⏑), or an irrational trochaic or iambic dipody of epitritic form, is really or apparently heptasemic.

heptasepalous (hep-tạ-sep′ạ-lus), a. [< Gr. ἑπτά, = E. seven, + NL. sepalum, a sepal.] In bot., having seven sepals.

heptaspermous (hep-tạ-spėr′mus), a. [< Gr. ἑπτά, = E. seven, + σπέρμα, seed.] In bot., having seven seeds. [Rare.]

heptastich (hep'ta-stik), n. [< Gr. ἑπτά, = E. seven, + στίχος, a line.] In pros., a strophe, stanza, or poem consisting of seven lines or verses.

heptastichous (hep-tas'ti-kus), a. [< Gr. ἑπτά, = E. seven, + στίχος, a row.] In bot., having the leaves arranged in seven spiral rows, the eighth leaf of the series being over the first. This is a condition rarely found in nature.

heptastrophic (hep-ta-strof'ik), a. [< Gr. ἑπτάστροφος, < ἑπτά, = E. seven, + στροφή, a strophe: see strophe.] In anc. pros., consisting of or containing seven strophes or stanzas: as, a heptastrophic song or poem.

heptasyllabic (hep"ta-si-lab'ik), a. [< LL. heptasyllabus, < Gr. ἑπτασύλλαβος, < ἑπτά, = E. seven, + συλλαβή, syllable: see syllable.] Containing or consisting of seven syllables. The second half of the elegiac pentameter is always heptasyllabic.

Heptateuch (hep'ta-tūk), n. [< NL. heptateuchus, < Gr. ἑπτά, = E. seven, + τεῦχος, a tool, implement, later also a book. Cf. Pentateuch.] The first seven books of the Old Testament.

The last two (Joshua and Judges) contain the history of the Jews in the promised land under the theocratic government historically developed in the preceding five, or the Pentateuch.

heptatomic (hep-ta-tom'ik), a. [< Gr. ἑπτά, = E. seven, + ἄτομος, an atom.] Same as heptavalent.

Fluorine (mon- and heptatomic).
Amer. Jour. Sci., 3d ser., XXXII. 405.

Heptatrema (hep-ta-trē'mä), n. [NL., < Gr. ἑπτά, = E. seven, + τρῆμα, hole.] The typical genus of Heptatremidæ, containing myzonts which have generally seven pairs of branchial apertures, but occasionally only six. Also called Bdellostoma and still earlier Eptatretus.

Heptatremidæ (hep-ta-trem'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Heptatrema + -idæ.] A family of hyperotretous myzonts, represented by the genus Heptatrema, with seven or six pairs of lateral branchial apertures. Also called Bdellostomidæ, and originally Eptatretidæ.

heptavalent (hep-tav'a-lent), a. [< Gr. ἑπτά, = E. seven, + L. valen(t-)s, ppr. of valere, have power: see valid.] In chem., equivalent to seven atoms of hydrogen in combining or saturating power: applied to an atom which can be substituted for or replaced by seven atoms of hydrogen. Also heptatomic.

heptene (hep'tēn), n. [< Gr. ἑπτά, = E. seven, + -ene.] Same as heptylene.

heptyl (hep'til), n. [< Gr. ἑπτά, = E. seven, + ὕλη, matter.] The hypothetical radical (C_7H_{15}) of heptyl alcohol and its derivatives.—Heptyl alcohol, $C_7H_{15}OH$, a colorless liquid having an agreeable smell, boiling at 347° F. It is obtained by the reduction of œnanthyl aldehyde. Several isomeric alcohols are known.

heptylene (hep'ti-lēn), n. [< heptyl + -ene.] A hydrocarbon (C_7H_{14}) belonging to the ethylene series. It exists in several isomeric forms. That obtained by the distillation of Boghead coal is a colorless mobile liquid having a peculiar alliaceous odor, and is soluble in alcohol. Also heptene.

hepwort (hep'wėrt), n. [< hep + wort[1].] The dogrose, Rosa canina.

her (hėr), pron. See under he[1].

her. An abbreviation of heraldry.

Hera, Here[7] (hē'rä, -rē), n. [LL., < Gr. Ἥρα, Ionic Ἥρη, Hera.] In Gr. myth., the greatest feminine divinity of Olympus, queen of heaven, wife and sister of Zeus, and inferior in power to him alone. She was the type of virtuous womanhood, and of the wife and mother. In art she is represented as a majestic woman, fully clad in flowing draperies, characteristically with the stephane or crown on her brow, and bearing a long scepter. By the Romans Hera was early identified with their Juno, originally a distinct divinity; and the Latin name is now commonly given to the Greek goddess.

Hera.—Statue in Museo Nazionale, Naples.

Here comes to-day,
Pallas and Aphrodite, claiming each
This meed of fairest.
Tennyson, Œnone.

Heraclean, Heracleian (her-a-klē'an), a. [< L. Heraclēus, < Gr. Ἡράκλειος, pertaining to Heracles: see Hercules.] Pertaining to Heracles or Hercules; Herculean. Also spelled Heraklean.—Heraclean stone (Latin lapis Heracleus, Greek λίθος Ἡρακλεία), the magnet; so called from its power of attraction.

The power of the Heracleian stone was well known to the ancients as a matter of curiosity.
Pop. Sci. Mo., XIII. 266.

Heracleidan, a. and n. See Heraclidan.

Heracleonite (hē-rak'lē-ō-nīt), n. [< Heracleon (see def.) + -ite[2].] Eccles., a follower of Heracleon, a Valentinian Gnostic of the second century, noted as a commentator on the Gospel of John.

Heracles, n. See Hercules.

Heracleum (her-a-klē'um), n. [NL., < Gr. ἡρακλεία, a plant so called, fem. of Ἡράκλειος, Ἡρακλῆς, Hercules.] A genus of dicotyledonous choripetalous plants founded by Linnæus, belonging to the family Apiaceæ and the tribe Peucedaneæ, characterized by its broadly obovate, strongly compressed wing-margined fruit. The genus embraces about 80 species of perennial or biennial herbs, with alternate leaves, and generally white flowers in compound umbels. They are chiefly natives of the temperate regions of the old world. H. lanatum is the only American species. It is known as the cow-parsnip or hogweed, and is eaten by some of the native tribes of North America. A Kamchatkan species yields, when properly treated, a sweet exudation which is employed in the preparation of a distilled spirit. H. Sphondylium, a European species, is used for feeding pigs and sometimes as a domestic remedy.

Branch with Umbel and Leaf of Cow-parsnip (Heracleum lanatum). a, flower; b, fruit; c, fruit cut transversely.

Heraclid (her'a-klid), n. [< L. Heraclīdes, pl. Heraclīdæ, < Gr. Ἡρακλείδης, pl. Ἡράκλειδαι, the descendants, as they claimed, of Hercules, < Ἡρακλῆς, Ἡρακλέης, > L. Hercules, in Gr. myth. the most famous of the heroes: see Hercules.] A descendant of Heracles (Hercules); specifically, one of the Heraclidan or Dorian aristocracy of Sparta, who claimed descent from Hercules through his son Hyllus. Also Heraklid.

Heraclidan, Heracleidan (her-a-klī'dan), a. and n. [< Heraclid + -an.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the Heracleidæ, or descendants of Heracles (Hercules).

On Suli's rock, and Parga's shore, Exists the remnant of a line
Such as the Doric mothers bore;
And there, perhaps, some seed is sown,
The Heracleidan blood might own.
Byron, Don Juan, iii. 86 (song, st. 13).

II. n. A Heraclid.
Also Herakleidan.

Heraclitan (her-a-klī'tan), a. and n. [< Heraclitus (see Heraclitean) + -an.] Same as Heraclitean.

Heraclitanism (her-a-klī'tan-izm), n. [< Heraclitan + -ism.] Same as Heraclitean.

Heraclitean (her"a-klī-tē'an), a. and n. [< L. Heraclitēus, Gr. Ἡρακλείτειος, pertaining to Heraclitus (pl. Ἡρακλείτειοι, the disciples of Heraclitus), < Ἡράκλειτος, L. Heraclitus.] I. a. Pertaining to the philosopher Heraclitus of Ephesus (who lived about 535–475 B. C.). His work, of which fragments are preserved, was in a prose so sententious, and his opinions were so paradoxical, that the Greeks complained much of his obscurity. He placed great stress upon the element of mediation and continuity in things, especially in time, saying that nothing is or is not, but that all things are in a state of flux—that is, are just in the passage between existence and non-existence, at once going out of being and coming into a new being. The physics of Heraclitus formed the basis of the corresponding part of the Stoical doctrine. Heraclitus maintained the relativity of knowledge in an extreme form, holding that we know nothing of the being of things but only their appearances. His morality was sober, earnest, and a little misanthropical. Also Heraclitic.

II. n. A follower of Heraclitus.

The extreme Heracliteans, as Cratylus, rejected the proposition, or combination of words, as expressing a unity and permanence not to be found in things.
Encyc. Brit., XIV. 784.

Also Heraclitan.

Heracliteanism (her"a-klī-tē'an-izm), n. [< Heraclitean + -ism.] The philosophical doctrine of Heraclitus. Also Heraclitanism.

Reading the Ephesian doctrine with the eyes of a Cynic, and the Cynic ethics in the light of Heracliteanism, he [Zeno] came to formulate his distinctive theory of the universe far in advance of either. Encyc. Brit., XXII. 562.

Heraclitic (her-a-klit'ik), a. [< Heraclitus (see Heraclitean) + -ic.] Same as Heraclitean.

The Eleatic doctrine that only unity has real being, the Heraclitic counter-doctrine that only in change, in the many, is truth to be found. Encyc. Brit., XIV. 784.

Heræon, Heræum (hē-rē'on, -um), n. [NL., < Gr. Ἡραῖον (sc. ἱερόν), a place sacred to Hera, < Ἥρα, Ἥρη, Hera: see Hera.] In Gr. antiq., a temple or sanctuary of Hera (Juno).

Heraion (hē-rī'on), n. Same as Heræon.

Heraklean, Herakleidan. See Heraclean, Heraclidan.

herald (her'ald), n. [Early mod. E. also herault, heraut, harrot, < ME. herald, herauld, heraud, harawd, herowd, herod, harrold, etc., = D. heraut = late MHG. heralt, herolt, erhalt, G. herold (> Sw. härold = Dan. herold), < OF. heralt, heraut, F. héraut = Sp. haraldo, heraldo, also faraute = Pg. arauto, also faraute = It. araldo, < ML. haraldus, heraldus, a herald; of OHG. origin. The word appears also as a proper name, Icel. Haraldr, late AS. Harald, Harold, E. Harold (ult. of G. origin: the reg. AS. form would have been Hereweald*; it occurs reversed in Waldhere) = OS. Hariolt (Diez, etc.), in ML. Chariovaldus, answering to an OHG. Hariwalt* (or Hariwalto*), Heriwalt* (the alleged OHG. Heriold, Hariold, Arioald, Ariovald, are later reflections); < OHG. hari, heri (= AS. here, Icel. herr, etc.), army (see harry), + -walt (= AS. -weald), in comp., strength (OHG. -walto = AS. -wealda, ruler), < waltan (= AS. wealdan, etc.), rule, have power: see wield. The same first element occurs in harbor[1], harborough, harbinger, heriot, etc.: see harbor[1], etc. The particular sense given to herald may have been influenced by OHG. foraharo, a herald, < forharēn, proclaim, < fora, fore, + harēn, cry out.] 1. An officer sent by a sovereign, a general, or other person of high authority to another, or to an army or public assembly, with a formal message or proclamation, or employed in related duties. The specific office of herald has existed from early historical times; but as still maintained, as in Great Britain, it is merely nominal or restricted to subsidiary functions. In the middle ages the herald was an important adjunct of armies and courts. His person was inviolable. His costume was emblazoned with the armorial bearings of his chief, and constituted an official dress which it was a high offense for another person to assume. As armorial bearings became a matter of careful record, the herald was especially charged with the proper depicting and blazoning of achievements, and with the supervision of the assumption of bearings by those who were entitled to them and their prohibition to others, and hence with the genealogy of noble families and the descent of titles. At times questions of precedence, and of the marshaling of ceremonial processions and the like, were referred to heralds. Compare pursuivant and king-at-arms. See Herald's College, below.

An hawrawde hyes before, the beste of the lordes.
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 3014.

The next Day after the Battel, French Heralds came to ask leave to bury their Dead, and had it.
Baker, Chronicles, p. 171.

As I watched the gates,
Lodged on my post, a herald is arrived
From Cæsar's camp. Addison, Cato, ii. 1.

The heralds then proclaimed silence until the laws of the tourney should be rehearsed. Scott, Ivanhoe, xii.

2. In extended modern use, any official messenger, especially one charged with a message of defiance, a proposition of peace, or the like. —3. A proclaimer; a publisher; a crier; an announcer of important tidings. [In this sense the word is now much used as the specific name of various newspapers.]

Shall the loud Herald our Success relate,
Or mitred Priest appoint the solemn Day?
Prior, Ode to the Queen, st. 26.

The image of the world is the herald of the divine power and wisdom. Bacon, Fable of Pan.

After my death I wish no other herald,
No other speaker of my living actions. . . .
But such an honest chronicler as Griffith.
Shak., Hen. VIII., iv. 2.

4. A forerunner; a precursor; a harbinger: sometimes used poetically in apposition or attributively.

It was the lark, the herald of the morn.
Shak., R. and J., iii. 5.

Now the herald lark
Left his ground-nest, high towering to descry
The morn's approach. Milton, P. R., ii. 279.

She with a subtle smile in her mild eyes,
The herald of her triumph, drawing nigh
Half-whisper'd in his ear. Tennyson, Œnone.

5. The red-breasted merganser, Mergus serrator, more fully called herald-duck. See earl-duck, harle. Rev. C. Swainson, 1885. [Shetland

Isles.]—6. A noctuid moth, Scoliopteryx libatrix: a collectors' name. See Gonoptera.—Herald-at-arms, in the middle ages, the herald or pursuivant when acting as regulator of a just or tourney, or when deciding upon the bearings allowed to be worn by any person; hence, a general term for a herald.

There was a Herald at Arms sent lately from Paris to Flanders, who by Sound of Trumpet denounced and proclaimed open War against the King of Spain.
Howell, Letters, I. vi. 18.

Heralds' College, or College of Arms, a royal corporation in England, instituted in the fifteenth century. Its members are the earl marshal, three kings-at-arms, six heralds, and three pursuivants; and its chief business is the granting of armorial bearings or coats of arms, and the tracing and preservation of genealogies. In Scotland the corresponding functions belong to the Lyon Court. See Lyon king-at-arms, under king-at-arms.

herald (her′ald), v. t. [< OF. herauder, heraulder, herald; from the noun.] To proclaim; give tidings of as a herald; announce.

We are sent
To give thee, from our royal master, thanks;
Only to herald thee into his sight, not pay thee.
Shak., Macbeth, i. 3.

She smiled, but something in her smile
Was like the heralding of tears,
When lonely pain the grieved heart bears.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, II. 52.

[< OF. heraulderie, < heralt, heraut, herald: see herald.] 1. The office or duty of a herald; specifically, the art and science of genealogy and precedence; the science of honorary distinctions, and especially of armorial bearings. In modern times heraldry is reduced to the department of armorial delineation, blazonry, and the right of certain persons to certain bearings, except when, as in England, it has to do with marshaling processions, and with the rare ceremonies at which heraldic proclamations are made.

The law of heraldry in war is positive.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, i. 15.

To woo a wench with empty hands
Is no good heraldry; therefore let's to the gold,
And share it equally; 'twill speak for us
More than a thousand compliments or cringes.
Fletcher (and another), Sea Voyage, iii. 1.

Heraldry became a handmaid of chivalry, and the marshalling of badges, crests, coat-armour, pennons, helmets and other devices of distinction grew into an important branch of knowledge. Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 471.

Heraldry is another element by means of which archæology provides trustworthy canons of criticism in relation to written and unwritten mediæval records.
Encyc. Brit., II. 343.

Cf. *arbor*².] 1. A collection of dried plants systematically arranged; a hortus siccus. In the United States a standard herbarium-sheet has been adopted, and all plants are prepared to fit this. The sheets are 16½ inches long and 11½ inches wide, and the paper, which is white, smooth, and stiff, weighs about 24 pounds to the ream. For many European herbariums a smaller size was originally adopted, which it is inexpedient to change. The plants are attached to these sheets either by small strips of gummed paper or silk, or by gluing one side of the specimen. The sheets are then inclosed in thick double sheets of heavy manila paper called genus-covers. Each genus-cover contains a single genus, unless this is too large. Where the species of a genus are very numerous, they are placed in thin covers, called species-covers. The name of the genus or species is written in the left-hand lower corner of the cover. The specimens are kept in cases, which consist of a series of compartments 18 inches deep, 12 inches wide, and 5 or 6 inches high, the case having dust-tight doors.

2. A book or other contrivance for preserving dried specimens of plants.—3. An edifice or place in which plants are preserved for botanical purposes.

Herbartian (hėr-bär′ti-an), a. and n. I. a. Pertaining to the eminent German philosopher Johann Friedrich Herbart (1776–1841), or to his system of philosophy. The philosophy of Herbart is characterized by a view of formal logic which holds the conception of continuity (as well as various other fundamental notions) to be self-contradictory. He maintained that the metaphysically real is a plurality of simple beings connected by real relationship consisting in a sort of attraction. He sought to express the fundamental principles of ontology and psychology by means of algebraical formulæ, whence his philosophy is sometimes called exact realism. The Herbartian philosophy has exerted considerable influence upon the development of psychology in Germany.

II. n. One who accepts the philosophical doctrines of Herbart.

herbary (hėr′ba-ri), n.; pl. herbaries (-riz). [Also herbery; in part < herb + -ery, but ult. < LL. herbarium: see herbarium. Cf. OF. herberie, botany.] A garden of herbs.

An herculean robustness of mind, and nerves not to be broken with labour. Burke, Appeal to Old Whigs.

3. [cap. or l. c.] Very difficult or dangerous: in allusion to the Herculean labors: as, a herculean task.

But what's the end of thy Herculean labours?
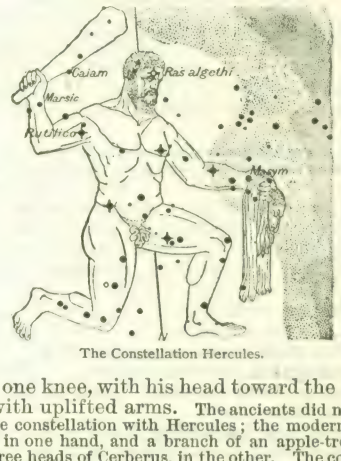
B. Jonson, Masques [at Court.



The Farnese Hercules.—Statue of the school of Lysippus, in Museo Nazionale, Naples.

Hercules (hėr′kū-lēz), n. [L.; in voc., as a familiar oath, hercules, hercule, hercle, mehercle; Etruscan Hercle, accom. of Gr. Ἡρακλῆς, earlier Ἡρακλέης, lit. having or showing Hera's glory, < Ἥρα, Hera, + κλέος, glory, fame: see glory.] 1. In Gr. and Rom. myth., a mighty hero, originating in Greek legend, but adopted by the Romans, and worshiped as the god of physical strength, courage, and related qualities. According to the mythical account, his father, Zeus (Jupiter), destined him to the sovereignty of Tiryns by right of his mother, Alcmene, granddaughter of Perseus, but was thwarted by Hera (Juno). After Hercules had performed wonderful deeds in behalf of Thebes, his birthplace, Hera consented to his being made immortal on condition of his accomplishing certain superhuman feats for his rival Eurystheus of Tiryns, in which he succeeded. These feats, called the twelve labors of Hercules, were as follows: (1) the strangling of the Nemean lion; (2) the killing of the Lernean hydra; (3) the capture of the Ceryneian stag; (4) the capture of the Erymanthian boar; (5) the cleaning of the Augean stables; (6) the slaughter of the Stymphalian birds; (7) the capture of the Cretan bull; (8) the capture of the man-eating mares of Diomedes; (9) the securing of the girdle of Hippolyta, queen of the Amazons; (10) the fetching of the red oxen of Geryones; (11) the procuring of the golden apples of the Hesperides; (12) the bringing to the upper world of the dog Cerberus, guardian of Hades. The subject of this most famous of the Herculean legends (of comparatively late date) is distinguished as the Tirynthian Hercules from other personifications of Hercules worshiped in different places and countries (as the Cretan or the Egyptian Hercules, etc.), under the same or other names, the attributes of these various personifications being essentially the same, but their legendary history being different. Hercules is represented as brawny and muscular, with broad shoulders, generally naked, or draped merely in the skin of the Nemean lion, the head of the lion being often drawn over that of the hero as a helmet. He is usually armed with a club, sometimes with a bow and arrows.

Leave that labour to great Hercules;
And let it be more than Alcides' twelve.
Shak., T. of the S., i. 2.

My Eustace might have sat for Hercules;
So muscular he spread, so broad of breast.
Tennyson, Gardener's Daughter.

2. One of the ancient constellations, between Lyra and Corona Borealis, representing a man upon one knee, with his head toward the south, and with uplifted arms. The ancients did not identify the constellation with Hercules; the moderns place a club in one hand, and a branch of an apple-tree, with the three heads of Cerberus, in the other. The constellation contains one star of the second magnitude (β), nine of the third, and twelve of the fourth.

The Constellation Hercules.

3. A form of drop-hammer. See the extract.

The Hercules, a ponderous mass of iron attached to a vertical guide rod, which was lifted originally by a gang of men with ropes, but afterwards by steam power, and allowed to fall by its own weight. Encyc. Brit., XI. 425.

4. Same as Hercules-beetle.—Hercules' allheal, a perennial umbelliferous plant, Opopanax Opopanax, a native of southern Europe. The roots and seeds are said to be similar in flavor and quality to the parsnip. Also called poundwort.—Hercules' club, a weapon mentioned in the seventeenth century as consisting of a heavy head of wood with nails driven into it and furnished with a handle: apparently a weapon extemporized for the defense of a fortified place.—Hercules' Pillars. See pillar.

Hercules-beetle (hėr′kū-lēz-bē″tl), n. A very large Brazilian lamellicorn beetle, Megasoma or Dynastes hercules. A large horn projects from the head of the male, and there is a smaller similar projection

Pg. hereditario = It. ereditario, < L. hereditarius, of or relating to an inheritance, inherited, < heredita(t-)s, heirship, inheritance: see heredity.] 1. In law: (a) Descending by inheritance; transmitted or transmissible in the line of descent by force of law; passing to or held by an heir or heirs: as, a hereditary monarchy, office, or estate; hereditary privileges; hereditary bondage.

These old fellows
Have their ingratitude in them hereditary.
Shak., T. of A., ii. 2.

The community or kingdom comes to be regarded by the sovereign as the hereditary possession of his family.
Calhoun, Works, I. 84.

At first elective, as kingships habitually are, this [of Poland] continued so — never became hereditary.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 494.

(b) Holding by inheritance; deriving from ancestors by force of law, as rank, social condition, or property: as, a hereditary peer, proprietor, or bondman.

When . . . a powerful body of hereditary nobles surround the sovereign, they oppose a strong resistance to his authority. Calhoun, Works, I. 85.

His highness the duke . . . had been married very young, and his son, the hereditary prince, may be said to have been the political sovereign of the state.
Thackeray, Barry Lyndon, x.

2. Pertaining to or resulting from successive generation; transmitted in a line of progeny; passing naturally from parent to offspring: as, hereditary descent; a hereditary line; hereditary features, qualities, or diseases.

Wearing that yoke
My shoulder was predestined to receive,
Born to the hereditary stoop and crease.
Browning, Ring and Book, I. 206.

The peculiarity may be congenital and hereditary, as it is when a certain stature is characteristic of the brothers, sisters, and collateral relatives of a parent.
Amer. Jour. Psychol., I. 175.

3. Native; patrimonial; ancestral: as, one's hereditary home or occupation; a hereditary opinion or prejudice.—4. Acting from natal tendency or endowment; having inherited the character or qualifications of; being by force of birth: as, the Bachs were hereditary musicians; the Rothschilds are hereditary financiers.—Act of the Hereditary Excise. See excise[2].—Hereditary monarchy. See monarchy.

hereditism (hē-red'i-tizm), n. [< heredity + -ism.] The principle of heredity; the doctrine of hereditary transmission, as of political rule. [Rare.]

At last, hereditism expired in America, . . . because the people were determined not to have a king, and were animated by republican aspirations.
★ Nineteenth Century, XX. 315.

heredity (hē-red'i-ti), n. [= F. hérédité = Pr. heretat = Sp. heredad = Pg. herdade = It. eredità, < L. heredita(t-)s, heirship, inheritance, in concrete an inheritance, < heres (hered-), an heir: see heir, and heritage, inherit.] 1. Hereditary descent or transmission, as of physical or mental qualities; hereditary succession or influence.

He is a monarchist by centuries of heredity.
N. A. Rev., CXLIII. 106.

Let us engage in some exciting sport, dear — such as reviewing the family portraits, with genealogical applications; perhaps we may discover something startling in the line of heredity. J. W. Palmer, After his Kind, p. 281.

2. Specifically, in biol.: (a) The influence of parents upon offspring; transmission of qualities or characteristics, mental or physical, from parents to offspring. See atavism.

By heredity is meant the tendency manifested by an organism to develop in the likeness of its progenitor.
Pop. Sci. Mo., XII. 176.

(b) A general name for the facts of inheritance or the transmission of physical or mental characteristics from parent to offspring.

That wheat produces wheat — that existing oxen have descended from ancestral oxen — that every unfolding organism eventually takes the form of the class, order, genus, and species from which it sprang — is a fact which, by force of repetition, has acquired in our minds almost the aspect of a necessity. It is in this, however, that Heredity is principally displayed: the phenomena commonly referred to it being quite subordinate manifestations. H. Spencer, Prin. of Biology, § 80.

3. Metaphorically, the cause of inheritance, or the principle to which inheritance is due, or the agent that brings about inheritance.

heredium (hē-rē'di-um), n. [L., < heres (hered-), an heir.] In early Rom. law, the homestead or hereditary domain allotted as the private property of a citizen, and which was inheritable and alienable. It comprised space for house, yard, and garden — usually about one and a quarter acres.

herefor (hēr-fôr'), adv. [= G. hiervor, hierfür = Dan. herfor = Sw. härför; as here[1] + for[1].] For this. [Rare.]

All three classes of these writers must be consulted for obtaining a complete acquaintance with heresiology.
Blunt, Dict. of Sects (1874), p. 184.

heresy (her'e-si), n.; pl. heresies (-siz). [< ME. heresye, heresie, eresie, < OF. heresie, heregie, F. hérésie = Pr. heregia, eretgia = Sp. herejía = Pg. heregia, heresia = It. eresia, heresy, < L. hæresis, a school of thought (philosophical or religious), LL., eccl., heretical religious doctrine, heresy, < Gr. αἵρεσις, a taking, selection, a philosophical principle or set of principles and those who profess such principles, a sect, school, eccl. a religious sect or party, heresy, < αἱρεῖν, take, mid. αἱρεῖσθαι, take to oneself, choose.] 1. Any doctrine, opinion, or set of opinions at variance with the established standards of any system, school of thought, or party; an opinion or a doctrine tending to create schism or division; an untenable or a disturbing doctrine of any kind, as in philosophy, science, politics, morality, etc.

Such trespasses in speach (whereof there be many) as geue dolour and disliking to the eare & minde, by any foule indecencie or disproportion of sound, situation, or sence, they be called, and not without cause, the vicious parts or rather heresies of language.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 129.

Popes, conclaves, and religious orders rose up against the Copernican heresy.
Macaulay, Sadler's Law of Population.

2. Specifically, in theol., an opinion or a doctrine rejected by the authorities of a church as contrary to the established creed of that church; an interpretation or a theological view of a sacred writing or other standard of religion, or of any distinctive part of it, opposed to that authoritatively established or generally accepted: as, the antinomian heresy. To the Roman Catholic any opinion contrary to the teachings of his church, to the Protestant any opinion contrary to the accepted interpretation of the Scripture, is a heresy. The error must be held by a professed believer; pagan and infidel doctrines are not heresies. Roman Catholic divines distinguish between formal heresies, or tenets contrary to the doctrines of the church which are wilfully and pertinaciously held, and material heresies, or tenets that are heretical but are not so pertinaciously held as to involve the guilt of heresy.

There shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them. 2 Pet. ii. 1.

After the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers. Acts xxiv. 14.

Heresie is in the Will and choice profestly against the Scripture; error is against the Will, in misunderstanding the Scripture after all sincere endeavours to understand it rightly. Milton, True Religion.

A second offence is that of heresy, which consists not in a total denial of Christianity, but of some of its essential doctrines, publicly and obstinately avowed.
Blackstone, Com., IV. iv.

Antipodal heresy. See antipodal. = Syn. See comparison under heretic.

heretic (her'e-tik), n. and a. [Formerly heretick, early mod. E. also eretick; < ME. heretik, eretik (cf. I am an heretic, if it be sound doctrine that pleasure tastes best after sorrow. Donne, Letters, lxxxiv.

Constantine easily believed that the heretics, who presumed to dispute his opinions, or to oppose his commands, were guilty of the most absurd and criminal obstinacy.
Gibbon, Decline and Fall, xxi.

2. Specifically, in theol., a professed believer who adopts and persistently maintains religious opinions contrary to the accepted standards of his church. See heresy, 2.

This yere [xii. Hen. VIII.] one Luther was accountyd an eretyck, and on a Sonday, that was the xij. day of Maij, in the presence of the Lorde Legate, and many other Byshops and Lordys of England, the sayd Luther was openly declared an heretyck at Powles Crosse, and all his bokes burned.
Arnold's Chron. (2d ed. 1520, repr. 1811), p. lii.

= Syn. Heretic, Schismatic, Sectary, Dissenter, Nonconformist. Heretic is an opprobrious epithet for a professed believer who holds religious opinions contrary to the established or dominant beliefs. A schismatic is one who seeks to sunder or divide into different organizations or parties those who are of essentially the same religious faith. A sectary or sectarian is one who sets the welfare of his own sect or denomination above that of the church universal, often pushing its interests at the cost of the general Christian welfare. This word has been much used opprobriously of those who stand out against an original or more powerful organization. A dissenter or nonconformist is one who dissents from an established religion, or does not conform to it; specifically and in actual use these words apply almost exclusively to those Protestants in Great Britain who worship apart from the Established Church of England, as the Presbyterians, Baptists, and Independents.

If a person was so unfortunate as to be a bravo, a libertine, or a gambler, that was no reason for making him a heretic too. Macaulay, Von Ranke's Hist. Popes.

Unity was Dante's leading doctrine, and therefore he puts Mahomet among the schismatics, not because he divided the Church, but the faith.
Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 108.

Anno 1663, divers sectaries in religion beginning to spread themselves there [in the Virginia colonies], great restraints were laid upon them, under severe penalties, to prevent their increase. Beverley, Virginia, i. ¶ 79.

James the Second was at open war with the Church, and found it necessary to court the Dissenters.
Macaulay, John Bunyan.

The great body of non-conformists rejected the delusive offers of the King, and stood firmly by their principles.
Macaulay, Mackintosh's Hist. Revolution.

II. a. Pertaining to heresy; believing heresy.

Eschewe thou a man eretike aftir oon and the secounde correccioun. Wyclif, Tit. iii. 10.

That saying of their father Cres, is still running in my head, that they may be dispensed with in their obedience to an heretic prince, while the necessity of the times shall oblige them to it. Dryden, Religio Laici, Pref.

heretical (hē-ret'i-kal), a. [< OF. heretical = Sp. heretical; as heretic + -al.] Containing or characterized by heresy; contrary to established opinions or principles; contrary to an accepted standard of religious faith.

This Queen [Katharine Parr], as being an earnest Protestant, had many great Adversaries, by whom she was accused to the King to have Heretical Books found in her Closet. Baker, Chronicles, p. 291.

The law of heresy is reformed, but not made less stringent, and it is no longer heretical to speak against the pope. Stubbs, Medieval and Modern Hist., p. 257.

heretically (hē-ret'i-kal-i), adv. In a heretical manner; with heresy.

He ignorantly and heretically held against the bishop.
Strype, Bp. Aylmer.

herier†, n. See herrier.

heriot (her'i-ọt), n. [Formerly also hariot, harriot; < ME. heriet, i. e., heryet*, < AS. heregeatu, military equipment, as a technical term heriot, < here, army, + geatu*, only in pl. geatwa, geatwe, equipment, equipments, arms. The term was early extended from its lit. sense.] In Eng. law, a feudal service, tribute, or fine, as the best beast or other chattel, payable to the lord of the fee on the decease of the owner, landholder, or vassal. Originally the heriot consisted of military furniture, or of horses and arms, which went to equip the vassal's successor. Heriots from freeholders are now rare, but heriots from copyholders are not so. The distinction between heriot and relief is that the former implies the immediate succession of the heir, who pays the heriot in recognition of his having succeeded, and the latter is paid in recognition of the fact that the lord has recovered his ownership, but has consented to make, as it were, a new concession to the heir. Compare farleu.

What stranger soever dye in the lordshipe, the lord shall have his beast [best] beast for an harriot, or horse if he haue any. English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 433.

"It was in my lease," said Sam, "to pay a mare-colt every year over and above my rent, besides a six-year old mare for a harriet, whenever the new heir came in." "Heriot, I suppose you mean, Sam."
T. Winthrop, Edwin Brothertoft, iv.

Heriot custom, a heriot due by a custom of the manor, which qualifies the legal relation of its lord and his tenants. — Heriot service, a heriot due in respect of the particular estate held, as on a special reservation in a grant or lease of lands.

heriotable (her'i-ọt-a-bl), a. [< heriot + -able.] Subject to the payment of a heriot.

To plague the Pagans heritably borne.
Stirling, Domes-day, Ninth Houre.

heritage (her'i-tāj), n. [< ME. heritage, eritage, < OF. heritage (F. héritage = Pr. heretatge = OSp. heredage = It. ereditaggio), an inheritance, heritage, patrimony, < heriter, inherit, < LL. hereditare, inherit, < L. heres (hered-), heir: see heir, and cf. hereditable, inherit, etc.] 1. That which is inherited as a material possession; an inheritance or inherited estate; specifically, in Scots law, heritable estate; realty.

The whiche is the same Lond that oure Lord behighten us in Heritage. Mandeville, Travels, p. 3.

I . . . will bring them again, every man to his heritage, and every man to his land. Jer. xii. 15.

2. That which is given or received as a permanent possession or right; that which is allotted or appropriated; hence, portion; part: used in the Bible for the chosen people, the body of saints, or the church, as God's portion of mankind.

Proceed we cheerely in our Pilgrimage Towards our happy promis'd Haeritage.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Decay.

This is the portion of a wicked man with God, and the heritage of oppressors, which they shall receive of the Almighty. Job xxvii. 13.

Spare thy people, O Lord, and give not thine heritage to reproach, that the heathen should rule over them.
Joel ii. 17.

While the hollow oak our palace is,
Our heritage the sea.
A. Cunningham, A Wet Sheet and a Flowing Sea.

3. That which comes from the circumstances of birth; a condition or quality transmitted by ancestors; inherited lot or portion: as, a heritage of luxury, poverty, suffering, or shame.

The people's charity was your heritage, and I would see which of you deserves his birthright.
Beau. and Fl., Thierry and Theodoret, v. 1.

Lord of himself — that heritage of woe!
Byron, Lara, i. 2.

To apprize a heritage. See apprize[2].

heritance† (her'i-tans), n. [Early mod. E. herytaunce; < OF. heritance, heritage, < heriter, inherit: see heritage.] Heritage; inheritance.

And all the Countre of Troya ys the Turkes owen contre by herytaunce. Torkington, Diarie of Eng. Travell, p. 19.

heriter†, n. [< OF. heritier, < L. hereditarius, an heir: see hereditary, heritage.] An heir.

He helde ones hys cosyn germaine, the vicount of Chateau Bein, who is the heryter, eighte moneths in the toure of Orlaise in prison.
Berners, tr. of Froissart's Chron., II. xxiv.

Heritiera (he-rit-i-ē'rä), n. [NL. (Aiton, 1789), named after C. L. L'Héritier, a French botanist of the 18th century.] A genus of dicotyledonous plants, belonging to the family Sterculiaceæ, tribe Sterculieæ. It is characterized by its small, reddish, imperfect, apetalous flowers, 5-toothed calyx, staminal column bearing 5 anthers, and fruit consisting of 5 indehiscent 1-seeded hard carpels. The genus consists of 4 or 5 species, handsome trees of considerable size, with entire alternate leaves, and flowers in axillary panicles, natives of the coasts of tropical Asia and Australia. H. Fomes is the red mangrove or sunder tree of India. It produces a valuable dark wood, used in India for boats, bridges, and house-building. H. littoralis of Burma is the looking-glass tree, a name that is also applied to the other species.

heritor (her'i-tor), n. [A Latin-seeming form of heriter, ult. < L. hereditarius, hereditary: see heriter.] In Scots law, the proprietor of a heritable subject; a proprietor or landholder in a parish.

If ony heritor or farmer wad pay him four punds Scots out of each hundred punds of valued rent, . . . Rob engaged to keep them scaithless. Scott, Rob Roy, xxvi.

heritrix (her'i-triks), n. [A Latin-seeming fem. to heritor.] A female heritor.

herket, v. A Middle English form of hark.

herknen†, v. A Middle English form of harken.

Hermæa (hėr-mē'ä), n. [NL., < Gr. Ἑρμαῖος, of Hermes: see Hermes.] A genus of sea-slugs, gastropods of the family Æolididæ, or giving name to the Hermæidæ, having numerous gills and broad flattened or folded tentacles, as H. bifida. H. cruciata is a New England species.

Hermæa bifida.

hermæid (hėr-mē'id), n. A gastropod of the family Hermæidæ.

Hermæidæ (hėr-mē'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Hermæa + -idæ.] A family of nudibranchiate or notobranchiate gastropods, taking name from the genus Hermæa.

Hermaic (hėr-mā'ik), a. [< Gr. Ἑρμαϊκός, of or like Hermes: see Hermes.] 1. Of or relating to Hermes or Mercury. Cudworth. — 2. Of or pertaining to Hermes Trismegistus; Hermetic: as, "Hermaic subtlety," W. Mathews, Getting on in the World, p. 124.

Hermaical (hėr-mā'i-kal), a. [< Hermaic + -al.] Same as Hermaic.

hermandad (er-màn-däth'), n. [Sp., a brotherhood, < hermano, a brother, < L. germanus, kindred: see german[1], germane.] In Spain, originally, a voluntary organization (the Santa Hermandad or Holy Brotherhood) for the maintenance of public order. The first hermandad was formed in Aragon in the thirteenth century, and another in Castile and Leon a few years later, chiefly to resist the exactions and robberies of the nobles. They soon assumed general police and judicial powers, under royal sanction; and at the end of the fifteenth century the organizations were united and extended over the whole kingdom. The hermandad was soon afterward reorganized as a regular national police, which has been superseded in later times by a civic guard on the model of the French gendarmerie.

There was no attempt to establish that iron bulwark of despotism, a standing army: at least, none nearer than that of the voluntary levies of the hermandad, raised and paid by the people. Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., ii. 26.

Hermanneæ (hėr-man′ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Lindley, 1847), ⟨ Hermannia + -eæ.] A tribe of the Sterculiaceæ: same as Hermannieæ.

Hermannia (hėr-man′i-ạ), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1753), named after Paul Hermann, professor of botany at Leyden in the 17th century. The proper name G. Hermann, D. Herman, Harmen, E. Herman, Harmon, etc., means 'a soldier,' being in AS. heremann (OHG. hariman, heriman, MHG. herman, etc.), ⟨ here, army, + mann, man. See harry, herald, etc.] A genus of dicotyledonous choripetalous plants, belonging to the family Sterculiaceæ, tribe Hermannieæ, distinguished mainly by its 5-cleft calyx, 5 petals with hollowed claws, 5 stamens with filaments oblong or dilated above, many-ovuled ovary, and 5-valved capsule with reniform seeds. The genus has about 120 species, chiefly South African—shrubs with toothed or incised alternate leaves, and yellow or red nodding flowers in the axils of the leaves or in a terminal cluster. Three species occur in Texas and Mexico.

Hermannieæ (hėr-ma-nī′ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., ⟨ Hermannia + -eæ.] A tribe of plants, of the family Sterculiaceæ, typified by the genus Hermannia, characterized by marcescent petals, chiefly monadelphous stamens, and capsular fruit. They inhabit the warmer regions of both hemispheres.

hermaphrodeity (hėr-maf-rō-dē′i-ti), n. [Irreg. ⟨ hermaphrod(ite) + -eity.] Hermaphroditism. [Rare.]

Some do believe hermaphrodeity,
That both do act and suffer.
B. Jonson, Alchemist, ii. 1.

hermaphrodism (hėr-maf′rō-dizm), n. A shortened form of hermaphroditism.

Hermaphrodita (hėr-maf-rō-dī′tạ), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of L. hermaphroditus, taken as an adj.: see hermaphrodite.] In De Blainville's classification (1825), one of three subclasses of his Paracephalophora, contrasted with Dioica and Monoica, and containing the orders Cirribranchiata (tooth-shells), Cervicobranchiata (limpets), and Scutibranchiata (sea-ears, limpets). It corresponds somewhat to the Linnean genus Patella.

Hermaphroditanthæ (hėr-maf″rō-di-tan′thē), n. pl. [NL., ⟨ Gr. ἑρμαφρόδιτος, hermaphrodite, + ἄνθος, a flower.] 1. A general classifying name for plants with hermaphrodite flowers. —2. A suborder of the Araceæ, including Calla and related forms. Schott, 1832.

hermaphrodite (hėr-maf′rō-dit), n. and a. [= F. hermaphrodite = Sp. hermafrodita, hermafrodito = Pg. hermaphrodita = It. ermafrodito, ⟨ L. hermaphroditus, ⟨ Gr. ἑρμαφρόδιτος, a hermaphrodite, so called from Ἑρμαφρόδιτος, Hermaphroditus, in myth. son of Hermes (Mercury) and Aphrodite (Venus); according to the legend, he became united in one body with the nymph Salmacis while bathing in her fountain; ⟨ Ἑρμῆς, Hermes, + Ἀφροδίτη, Aphrodite.] I. n. 1. A human being in whom the sexual characteristics of both sexes are to some extent, really or apparently, combined; also, one of the higher animals which is similarly deformed. Such monstrosities are really of one sex or the other, but are generally imperfectly developed with respect to either. They are hence specifically called spurious hermaphrodites.

Nor man nor woman, scarce hermaphrodite.
Drayton, Moon Calf.

A very Hermaphrodite of doubtful sex between both.
Holland, Livy, XXXI. xii.

2. One of those lower animals which normally possess the parts of generation of both the male and the female. Such animals are called true hermaphrodites. They are those which have both an ovary and a testis, or a female and a male genital gland, in one and the same individual, as is very often the case among mollusks and worms. The essential organs of both sexes may exist simultaneously, or the animal may be male at one time and female at another. A variation of this case is seen in some animals, as earth-worms, which are hermaphroditic yet copulate, each impregnating the other. True hermaphrodites occur only as an anomaly among vertebrates, but there are authentic instances of the development of a testis on one side of the body and an ovary on the other.

Intermediate forms, "hermaphrodites," occurring as great rarities. Bateson.

3. In bot., a flower that contains both the stamen and the pistil perfectly developed, or the male and female organs of generation, within the same floral envelop or on the same receptacle. See perfect.

II. a. Same as hermaphroditic.— Hermaphrodite brig, flower, gland, etc. See the nouns.

hermaphroditic (hėr-maf-rō-dit′ik), a. [⟨ hermaphrodite + -ic.] Affected with or pertaining to hermaphroditism; having the character of a hermaphrodite; being of both sexes.

Look on me, and with all thine eyes,
Male, female, yea, hermaphroditic eyes.
B. Jonson, Staple of News, i. 1.

hermaphroditical (hėr-maf-rō-dit′i-kạl), a. [⟨ hermaphroditic + -al.] Same as hermaphroditic.

Cry down, or up, what they like or dislike in a brain or a fashion, with most masculine, or rather hermaphroditical authority. B. Jonson, Epicœne, i. 1.

hermaphroditically (hėr-maf-rō-dit′i-kạl-i), adv. As a hermaphrodite.

hermaphroditism (hėr-maf′rō-dī-tizm), n. [= Sp. hermafroditismo = Pg. hermaphroditismo; as hermaphrodite + -ism.] The state of being a hermaphrodite; union, real or apparent, of the two sexes in the same individual. Also hermaphrodism.

Many Turbellarians, especially the Accœla, display the phenomenon known as "successive hermaphroditism," the male organs of an individual attain to maturity first, and the female organs become ripe subsequently. During copulation, therefore, one individual is physiologically a male and the other a female. Encyc. Brit., XIX. 174.

True hermaphroditism exists only when the essential organs of reproduction, both kinds of germ-glands, are united in one individual. Either an ovary is then developed on the right and a testis on the left, or vice versâ; or testes and ovaries are developed on both sides, one more, the other less perfectly.
Haeckel, Evol. of Man (trans.), II. 423.

Dimidiate hermaphroditism, true hermaphroditism of the kind which consists in the development of a testis on one side of the body and an ovary on the other, in animals which are normally of opposite sexes. This condition has been not infrequently observed.

Hermas (hėr′mas), n. [NL.] A genus of dicotyledonous choripetalous plants, founded by the younger Linnæus in 1781, belonging to the family Apiaceæ and the tribe Mulineæ, characterized by its conspicuous petaloid calyx-lobes, filiform petals, and dorsally compressed fruit. The genus embraces 5 species of perennial cespitose herbs, with radical undivided leaves and crowded compound umbels of white or dark-purple flowers, natives of the Cape of Good Hope. The epidermis of the leaves of H. gigantea, separated from the veins and midrib, is used by the Hottentots as a tinder, and is also made into miniature socks, gloves, etc.

hermelet†, n. A Middle English form of hairmeal. Chaucer.

hermeline†, n. Same as ermine.

hermeneut (hėr′mē-nūt), n. [⟨ Gr. ἑρμηνευτής, an interpreter, ⟨ ἑρμηνεύειν, interpret, ⟨ ἑρμηνεύς, an interpreter, usually referred to Ἑρμῆς, Hermes, as the tutelary god of skill, the arts and sciences, speech, writing, etc.: see Hermes.] An interpreter; one who explains; an exegete; specifically, one of the hermeneutæ. [Rare.]

hermeneutæ (hėr-mē-nū′tē), n. pl. [NL., ⟨ Gr. ἑρμηνευταί, pl. of ἑρμηνευτής: see hermeneut.] Interpreters employed in the early church to translate the service into the language of the worshipers, when the language used by the ministrant was different from that of his hearers.

hermeneutic (hėr-mē-nū′tik), a. [⟨ Gr. ἑρμηνευτικός, of or for interpreting, ⟨ ἑρμηνευτής, an interpreter: see hermeneut.] Of, pertaining to, or of the nature of interpretation or explanation; explanatory: as, hermeneutic theology (that is, the art of interpreting the Scriptures).

hermeneutically (hėr-mē-nū′ti-kạl-i), adv. By interpretation; according to the established principles of interpretation.

hermeneutics (hėr-mē-nū′tiks), n. [Pl. of hermeneutic: see -ics. Cf. Gr. ἑρμηνευτική (sc. τέχνη, art), hermeneutics.] The art or science of interpretation; also, the study of or instruction in the principles of interpretation, especially of the Scriptures.

We have to deplore that the field of sacred hermeneutics has lately too often been made an arena of fierce fightings and uncharitable disputations. Dr. C. Wordsworth.

No legend, no allegory, no nursery rhyme, is safe from the hermeneutics of a thoroughgoing mythologic theorist. E. B. Tylor, Prim. Culture, I. 287.

Biblical hermeneutics, that branch of theological science which treats of the principles of the interpretation of Scripture.

hermeneutist (hėr-mē-nū′tist), n. [⟨ hermeneut-ic + -ist.] One versed in hermeneutics; an expounder of the principles of interpretation.

Hermes (hėr′mēz), n. [Gr. Ἑρμῆς, Doric Ἑρμᾶς, contr. of Ἑρμέας, Epic Ἑρμείας, the messenger of the gods; a deity of varied attributes, some of which connect him with the etymologically identical Skt. Sārameya, in the dual, two dogs (having, among other epithets, that of çarvara, spotted, = Gr. Κέρβερος, L. Cerberus, q. v.) who guarded the way to the abode of the dead, and also acted as messengers of Yama, ⟨ Saramā, a messenger of Indra, + -eya, a suffix of relation or descent.] 1. In Gr. myth., the herald and messenger of the gods, protector of herdsmen, god of science, commerce, invention, and the arts of life, and patron of travelers and rogues, son of Zeus (Jupiter) and Maia, born on Mount Cyllene in Arcadia. He was the guide (psychopompos) of the shades of the dead to their final abode. In art he is represented as a vigorous youth, beardless after the archaic period, and usually but slightly draped, with caduceus, petasus, and talaria as attributes. The Roman Mercury, a god of much more material and sordid character, became identified with Hermes. See the cut of Hermes of Praxiteles, under Greek, a.

Hermes, from an Apulian crater, end of the 4th century B. C. (From "Monumenti dell' Instituto," IV.)

The basest horn of his hoof is more musical than the pipe of Hermes. Shak., Hen. V., iii. 7.

That moly,
That Hermes once to wise Ulysses gave.
Milton, Comus, l. 637.

2. [l. c.; pl. hermæ (-mē).] In Gr. antiq., a head or bust supported upon a quadrangular base, which corresponds roughly in mass to the absent body, and often bears in front a phallus as an indication of the sex. The bust was often double-faced, as if representing two individuals back to back. These monuments were so called because the god Hermes was frequently so represented. Such statues of him were placed at the doors of houses in Athens, and at the corners of streets, in his character as tutelary divinity of highways and boundaries, in gymnasia, and in other public places. The hermæ were held in great reverence as guarding or symbolizing many of the common interests of life. Compare gaine.

Double Hermes, in Central Museum, Athens.

3. The Egyptian god Thoth, as identified with the Greek Hermes.— Hermes Trismegistus [Gr. Ἑρμῆς τρὶς μέγιστος, L. Hermes Trimaximus, 'thrice-greatest Hermes'], a name of the Egyptian god Thoth, under which many Greek works (forty-two according to Clement of Alexandria) were ascribed to him in the second century A. D. (See Hermetic, 2.) The Egyptians called Thoth "twice greatest," and the Greek writers of these books called him "thrice greatest."

Hermesian (hėr-mē′si-ạn), a. [⟨ Hermes (see def.) + -ian.] Pertaining to Georg Hermes. See Hermesianism.

Hermesianism (hėr-mē′si-ạn-izm), n. [⟨ Hermesian + -ism.] In Rom. Cath. theol., a rationalizing theory of the relation of reason to faith, propounded by Georg Hermes (1775–1831), a German Roman Catholic theologian, and accepted by many German Catholics, but condemned after his death by the Holy See.

Hermetic (hėr-met′ik), a. [⟨ ML. Hermeticus, relating to Hermes or to alchemy or chemistry, ⟨ Hermes, Hermes, with reference to Hermes Trismegistus, regarded as the author of occult sciences, and esp. of alchemy (philosophia hermetica): see Hermes, and Hermes Trismegistus, under Hermes.] 1. Of or pertaining to Hermes. —2. [cap. or l. c.] Pertaining to Hermes Trismegistus, or to the theosophy, cosmogony, and later alchemy and astrology associated with his name; alchemic. Thoth, the Egyptian Hermes, was supposed to have written certain sacred books of the Egyptian priests, which treated of the doctrine and ritual of religion and various natural sciences. In the second century after Christ, these true Hermetic books having been forgotten (for they were always kept secret), other books appeared, containing a jumble of incongruous theosophical and philosophical ideas, bearing the name of Hermes Trismegistus as their author, and assumed to be the ancient sacred books of Egypt. They were doubtless written by Alexandrian Neo-Platonists. To them were added alchemical and astrological books attributed to the same author.

Their seals, their characters, hermetic rings.
B. Jonson, Underwoods, lxii.

Among the numerous students of hermetick philosophy, not one appears to have desisted from the task of transmutation from conviction of its impossibility, but from weariness of toil or impatience of delay, a broken body or exhausted fortune. Rambler, No. 63.

It is well known that I have approached more nearly to projection than any other hermetic artist who now lives.
Scott, Kenilworth, xviii.

In solitude and utter silence did the disciples of the Hermetic Philosophy toil from day to day, from night to night. Longfellow, Hyperion, iii.

3. [l. c.] Of or pertaining to a hermes: as, a hermetic column.—Hermetic art, alchemy; chemistry.

The dream of the philosopher's stone induces dupes, under the more plausible delusions of the hermetic art, to neglect all rational means of improving their fortunes.
Burke.

Hermetic column, a column terminated by the head and shoulders of a man; a hermes.—Hermetic medicine, an old system of medicine, founded upon chemical doctrines; spagyric medicine.—Hermetic seal, an alchemic or chemical seal; an air-tight closure of a vessel effected by fusion, soldering, or welding.

Not nature, but grace and glory, with an hermetic seal, give us a new signature.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 67.

Hermetical (hėr-met'i-kal), a. [< Hermetic + -al.] Same as Hermetic.

And what the hermetical philosophy saith of God is in a sense verifiable of the thus ennobled soul, that its centre is every where, but its circumference no where.
Glanville, Vanity of Dogmatizing, xxiv.

hermetically (hėr-met'i-kal-i), adv. 1. According to the Hermetic books; agreeably with Hermetic philosophy; esoterically; secretly.—2. In a hermetic manner; chemically; specifically, by means of fusion: as, a vessel hermetically sealed or closed.

This little tube was open at one end, and the other . . . was hermetically sealed. Boyle, Works, I. 21.

hermetics (hėr-met'iks), n. [Pl. of hermetic: see -ics.] Hermetic philosophy; the body of doctrine contained in the Hermetic books; secret science; esoterism: a term popularly confounded with alchemy, and conceived to indicate the art of manipulating salt, sulphur, and mercury in some incomprehensible manner whereby the philosopher's stone might be produced.

Herminia (hėr-min'i-ä), n. [NL. (Latreille, 1802), < L. Herminia, fem. of Herminius, a Roman name.] The typical genus of moths of the family Herminiidæ, having slender, not pilous, palpi, with the third joint much shorter than the second. There are many species in all quarters of the globe.

Herminiidæ (hėr-mi-nī'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Herminia + -idæ.] A family of geometrid moths, taking name from the genus Herminia, having the wings not angulate, and the front not prominent. There are upward of 60 genera. Some of the species are known as snout-moths. Also written Herminida, Herminidæ.

Herminium (hėr-min'i-um), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1735), < Gr. ἑρμίς or ἑρμίν, a bedpost, < ἔρμα, a prop, support.] A genus of monocotyledonous plants, belonging to the family Orchidaceæ and tribe Orchideæ. Its distinguishing features are its spurless lip, very short column, erect emarginate anther, naked glands to the pollinia, and oblong erect capsule. The genus consists of 6 species of low slender herbs, with few, generally narrow, leaves and small flowers, densely racemed or spiked, growing in the temperate and mountainous regions of Europe and Asia. H. Monorchis is the musk-orchis of Europe. It has a slender stem 3 to 6 inches high, and yellowish-green flowers in a terminal spike.

hermit (hėr'mit), n. [The form heremite, more correctly eremite, as now pronounced, is directly from the LL. eremita, ML. improp. heremita (see eremite); the form hermit is old, < ME. hermite, heremite, eremite, < OF. hermite, ermite, iermite, F. ermite, hermite = Pr. ermita = Sp. Pg. eremita = It. eremita, romito (cf. OF. hermitain = Pr. hermitan = Sp. ermitaño = Pg. ermitão, < ML. eremitanus), < LL. eremita, ML. often improp. heremita, < Gr. ἐρημίτης, a hermit, prop. adj., of the desert, < ἐρημία, a solitude, desert, wilderness, < ἔρῆμος, desolate, lonely, solitary, akin to ἠρέμα, quietly, gently, softly, Goth. rimis, rest, quiet, Skt. √ ram, stop, rest, be content.] 1. One who dwells alone, or with but few companions, in a desert or other solitary place, for religious meditation, or from a desire to avoid society. See anchoret.

The most perfect hermits are supposed to have passed many days without food, many nights without sleep, and many years without speaking.
Gibbon, Decline and Fall, xxxvii.

2†. A beadsman; one bound to pray for another.

In thy dumb action I will be as perfect
As begging hermits in their holy prayers.
Shak., Tit. And., iii. 2.

For those of old,
And the late dignities heap'd up to them,
We rest your hermits. Shak., Macbeth, i. 6.

3. In zoöl., one of sundry animals of solitary or secluded habits. See the compounds.

The house-hunting adventures of the hermits [hermit-crabs] have been so frequently described that a repetition is useless. Amer. Naturalist, XXII. 894.

False hermit. See false.—Syn. 1. Monk (see anchoret), ★ascetic, solitary.

hermitage (hėr'mi-tāj), n. [< ME. hermitage, heremytage, eremitage, < OF. hermitage, ermitage, F. ermitage, hermitage (= Pr. ermitatge = Pg. eremitagem = It. eremitaggio, romitaggio), < hermite, ermite, a hermit: see hermit.] 1. The habitation of a hermit or of a company of hermits; a hermit's cell or hut, usually in a desert or solitary place; hence, any secluded habitation.

A litle lowly Hermitage it was,
Downe in a dale, hard by a forests side.
Spenser, F. Q., I. i. 34.

A court does some man no harm, when another finds temptation in a hermitage. Donne, Sermons, xxix.

A chapel, and thereby
A holy hermit in a hermitage.
Tennyson, Holy Grail.

2. [cap.] A French wine produced from vineyards on the sides of a hill rising from the river Rhône near Valence, in the department of Drôme: so called from a hermitage which anciently existed there. The red Hermitage is the most celebrated and most abundant; very little of the white Hermitage is made, and still less of the straw-colored or paille. Also Ermitage.

Two more [drops] of the same kind heightened it into a perfect Languedoc; from thence it passed into a florid Hermitage. Addison, Tatler, No. 131.

hermitary (hėr'mi-tā-ri), n.; pl. hermitaries (-riz). [< hermit + -ary[1]. Cf. ML. heremitarius, n., a hermit, < heremita, eremita, a hermit.] A hermit's cell annexed to an abbey; a hermitage.

hermit-bird (hėr'mit-bėrd), n. 1. A hummingbird of the genus Phaëthornis, as the Cayenne hermit-bird, P. superciliosus.—2. A South American barbet or puff-bird of the genus Monasa; a nun-bird. There are several species.

hermit-crab (hėr'mit-krab'), n. A crab of the family Paguridæ (which see). This crab has neither a long hard tail like a shrimp or crawfish, nor yet a short one doubled underneath like ordinary crabs, but a soft fleshy one requiring to be covered and protected. To this end it takes possession of and occupies a cast-off shell of some univalve mollusk, such as a periwinkle or a small whelk. The crab backs into the shell, inserting the tender abdomen in the spire, and filling the aperture of the shell with his claws and other hard parts, thus guarding his otherwise unprotected and vulnerable rear. In moving about, the crab carries his house with him, like a snail with his shell on his back, and quits it for another only when he outgrows it. In many cases sea-anemones grow on the shell, the triple association furnishing an excellent example of commensalism. (See cut under cancrisocial.) There are several genera and numerous species of hermit-crabs; the commonest belong to Pagurus and Eupagurus. (See cut under Eupagurus.) The Diogenes crab, a species of Cenobita, belongs here. The most common hermit-crab on the Atlantic coast of the United States is the short-armed hermit, Eupagurus pollicaris, attaining a large size and inhabiting the shells of such mollusks as Pyrula and Natica. It is called by the fishermen jack-in-the-box, thief, and stone-lobster, and is believed by some to turn into a lobster.

hermit-crow (hėr'mit-krō'), n. The chough, Fregilus or Pyrrhocorax graculus. See cut under chough.

hermitess (hėr'mi-tes), n. [< hermit + -ess. Cf. equiv. OF. hermitresse.] A female hermit.

The violet is truly the hermitess of flowers.
Parthenia Sacra (1633), p. 38.

hermitical (hėr-mit'i-kal), a. [< hermit + -ical. Cf. heremitical, eremitical.] Pertaining or suited to a hermit or to retired life; eremitical (the more common word).

You describe so well your hermitical state of life that none of your ancient anchorites could go beyond you, for a cave in the rock, with a fine spring, or any of the accommodations that befit a solitary. Pope, to E. Blount, xi.

hermit-thrush (hėr'mit-thrush'), n. A very common true thrush of North America, found in nearly all parts of the continent. It is about 7¼ inches long, olive above shading into rufous on the tail, white below tinged with pale tawny, and profusely spotted on the breast with dark brown. It is a shy and secluded inhabitant of woodland and undergrowth, migratory and insectivorous, and a fine songster. It nests on the ground, laying 4 or 5 pale-bluish eggs. There are two subspecies of the hermit-thrush, Turdus aonalaschkæ pallasi, T. a. auduboni, and the original species T. aonalaschkæ. See cut in next column.

hermit-warbler (hėr'mit-wâr'blėr), n. The western warbler, Dendræca occidentalis, one of several relatives of the common black-throated green warbler (D. virens) of the United States.

Hermit-thrush (Turdus aonalaschkæ pallasi).

It is 5 inches long, 7¾ in extent of wings, ashy-gray above tinged with olive and streaked with black, the top and sides of the head rich yellow marked with black, the throat and breast black, ending in a convex border sharply contrasted with the white of the other under parts. It is found from the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific.

hermodactyl (hėr-mō-dak'til), n. [< LGr. ἑρμοδάκτυλος, a plant identified by some with Colchicum autumnale, by others with Iris tuberosa; lit. 'Hermes's finger,' < Ἑρμῆς, Hermes, + δάκτυλος, finger.] In phar., a dried bulbous root, probably obtained from Colchicum variegatum or checker-flower, formerly brought from Turkey in considerable quantities, and used for soothing pain in the joints.

Hermogenean (hėr-mō-jē'nē-an), a. and n. [< L. Hermogenes, < Gr. Ἑρμογένης, Hermogenes (< Ἑρμῆς, Hermes, + -γενης, -born), + -e-an.] I. a. Of or pertaining to Hermogenes or his doctrines. See II.

II. n. A follower of Hermogenes, who lived near the close of the second century, and who held matter to be eternal and the source of all evil, but in other respects was an orthodox Christian.

Hermogenian (hėr-mō-jē'ni-an), a. and n. [< LL. Hermogenianus, a. and n., < L. Hermogenes, < Gr. Ἑρμογένης, Hermogenes: see Hermogenean.] I. a. 1. Same as Hermogenean.—2. Of or pertaining to Hermogenianus, a noted Roman jurist who lived in the fourth century, the writer of several works on jurisprudence, and the reputed compiler of the "Codex Hermogenianus," or Hermogenian code. See code.

The Gregorian and Hermogenian Codes were arranged upon a different principle.
Maine, Early Law and Custom, p. 367.

II. n. Same as Hermogenean.

hern[1]† (hėrn), n. [< ME. herne, hyrne, < AS. hyrne, a corner, < horn, a horn, a projecting point. Cf. corner, ult. < L. cornu = AS. E. horn.] A corner.

As yonge clerkes . . .
Seken in every halke and every herne
Particuler sciences for to lerne.
Chaucer, Franklin's Tale, l. 393.

The stone that wos reprovyd
Of men that were biggand,
In the hede of the hirne
Is now made liggande.
MS. Cantab. Ff. v. 48, f. 91. (Halliwell.)

hern[2] (hėrn), pron. [E. dial., < her + -n, adj. formative. Cf. hisn.] Hers. [Prov. Eng. and U. S.]

His heart kep' goin' pity-pat,
But hern went pity Zekle.
Lowell, The Courtin'.

hern[3] (hėrn), n. [< ME. hern, herne, contr. of heroun, heiron, heron: see heron.] Same as heron.

I come from haunts of coot and hern.
Tennyson, The Brook.

hern[4]†, n. An obsolete form of harn.

hern[5] (hėrn), n. [Cornish.] The pilchard. Also hernan.

Hernandia (hėr-nan'di-ä), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1753), after Dr. Hernandez, a Spanish botanist. The Sp. proper name Hernandez, Hernando, formerly Fernandez, Fernando, F. Ferdinand, G. Ferdinand, is of OHG. origin.] A genus of dicotyledonous archichlamydeous plants, the type of the family Hernandiaceæ. Characterized by its laterally dehiscent anthers, stamens as many as the 6-8 segments of the perianth and opposite them, and 1-celled ovary with broad stigma. The genus includes 8 species of trees with monœcious yellowish flowers, 3 in an involucre, the central one sessile and fertile, and the lateral ones staminate with short pedicels. The leaves are alternate, entire, ovate or peltate, and the drupe is inclosed in the enlarged involucre. The plants grow in the tropical regions of both hemispheres. H. sonora, or jack-in-a-box, is so called from the noise made by the wind whistling through its persistent involucels. The juice of the leaves is a powerful depilatory, destroying the hair without pain wherever it is applied. The wood is light; that of H. Guianensis takes fire readily from a flint and steel, and is used in the same way as amadou.

Jack-in-a-box (Hernandia sonora).

Hernandiaceæ (hėr-nan-di-ā′sē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Hernandia + -aceæ.] A family of plants, typified by the genus Hernandia, established by Endlicher in 1836, included by some authors in the Lauraceæ.

Hernandieæ (hėr-nan-dī′ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Hernandia + -eæ.] A division of apetalous plants, made by Lindley (1847) a tribe of the Daphnaceæ with Hernandia as the type, and by others a tribe of the Lauraceæ, now included in the family Hernandiaceæ.

hernant-seeds (hėr′nant-sēdz), n. pl. The seeds of Hernandia ovigera, used in dyeing. [Trade-name.]

hernepan†, n. See harn-pan.

herner† (hėr′nėr), n. [Early mod. E. also hearnor; contr. of heroner, as hern[3] of heron: see ★heroner.] Same as heroner. Cotgrave.

hernia (hėr′ni-ą), n. [= F. hernie = Pr. Sp. Pg. hernia = It. ernia, < L. hernia, a rupture, hernia.] In surg., a tumor formed by the displacement and protrusion of a part which has escaped from its natural cavity by some aperture, and projects externally; rupture: as, hernia of the brain, of the thorax, or of the abdomen. Hernia of the abdomen, the most common form, consists of the protrusion of some part of the viscera through a natural or an accidental aperture in the inner wall of the abdomen, the external skin generally remaining unbroken. It is named specifically from its situation. —Cerebral hernia, protrusion of the brain through an opening in the cranial walls.—Crural hernia. Same as femoral hernia.—Femoral hernia, a hernia descending beside the femoral vessels. Also called crural hernia.—Inguinal hernia, a hernia of the intestine or omentum which descends through the abdominal rings.—Lumbar hernia, a hernia in the loins or lumbar region.—Oblique inguinal hernia, a hernia whose course is that of the spermatic cord, through the inguinal canal: opposed to direct inguinal hernia.—Phrenic hernia, a hernia projecting through the diaphragm into one of the pleural cavities.—Strangulated hernia, a hernia so tightly compressed in some part of the channel through which it has been protruded as not to be reducible by ordinary means, as by the application of pressure, and to interfere with the circulation in the protruded part.—Umbilical hernia, hernia of the intestine at the navel; exomphalos.

hernial (hėr′ni-ąl), a. [= OF. hernial; as hernia + -al.] Pertaining to or connected with hernia. Also hernious.

Herniaria (hėr-ni-ā′ri-ą), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1753), < L. hernia, hernia: see hernia and def.] A genus of small prostrate plants, belonging to the tribe Paronychieæ of the family Silenaceæ. It is chiefly distinguished by its 5-cleft perianth, short style with 2 stigmas, annular embryo, and inferior radicle. The genus includes about 20 species of annual or perennial herbs, with small entire leaves, scarious stipules, and minute green flowers, crowded in the axils. They are natives of Europe, Asia, and Africa, and were formerly supposed to be useful in the cure of hernia; hence the generic name and the common name rupturewort.

herniated (hėr′ni-ā-ted), a. [< hernia + -ate[1] + -ed[2].] Affected with hernia; enveloped in a hernial sac.

In another class of cases the herniated loop becomes fixed to the abdominal wall by adhesions after reduction. N. Y. Med. Jour., XL. 304.

hernioid (hėr′ni-oid), a. [< hernia + -oid.] Resembling hernia.

In this place may be mentioned the curious and sometimes puzzling hernioid protrusions to be met with in some plants. Bessey, Botany, p. 29.

herniology (hėr-ni-ol′ō-ji), n. [< L. hernia, hernia, + Gr. -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] 1. That branch of surgery which treats of ruptures.—2. A treatise on ruptures.

herniotomy (hėr-ni-ot′ō-mi), n. [< L. hernia, hernia, + Gr. τομή, a cutting, < τέμνειν, ταμεῖν, cut.] In surg., the operation of cutting for hernia; celotomy.

hernious (hėr′ni-us), a. [< hernia + -ous.] Same as hernial.

hernsew† (hėrn′sū), n. [Early mod. E. also hearnsewe, hernsue; a contr. of heronsew, q. v. Cf. hernshaw[2].] Same as heronsew. [Prov. Eng.]

Leaving me to stalk here, . . .
Like a tame her'nshew for you.
B. Jonson, Staple of News, i. 1.

hernshaw[1]† (hėrn′shâ), n. A variant of hernsew, heronsew, taken by Cotgrave as from hern (heron) and shaw, a wood.

Haironnier [F.], a heron's nest or ayrie; a herneshaw, or shaw or wood wherein herons breed. Cotgrave.

hernshaw[2] (hėrn′shâ), n. [Formerly also hernshew, a contr. of heronshaw; a var. of hernsew, heronsew (appar. not by association with hernshaw[1], a heronry, which appears to be later): see heronsew.] 1†. A heron; a heronsew.

As when a cast of Faulcons make their flight,
At an Herneshaw, that lyes aloft on wing.
Spenser, F. Q., VI. vii. 9.

2. In her., the representation of a heron, crane, or stork (all appearing alike).—To know a hawk from a hernshaw. See under hand-saw.

hero (hē′rō), n.; pl. heroes (-rōz). [= OF. heroe, F. héros = Sp. héroe = Pg. heroe = It. eroe, < L. heros, pl. heroes, < Gr. ἥρως, a hero, usually a warrior, but in Homer a comprehensive term, and orig. applied to any freeman, being appar. = Skt. vīra, a man, a hero, = L. vir, a man, = Goth. wair = AS. wer, a man: see wergild, werwolf.] 1. In classical myth., a superior being, distinguished from ordinary men chiefly by greater physical strength, courage, and ability, at the time of the Homeric poems still regarded as mortal, but from the time of Hesiod (about the eighth century B. C.) regarded as intermediate in nature between gods and men (a demigod), and immortal. Except in the case of Hercules, the Greek cult of heroes was essentially local, each country, region, or even town holding its own in especial honor. Thus Theseus was the national hero of Attica, Ajax was especially honored in Salamis, Amphiaraus at Orchomenus; while Lycurgus became a hero in Sparta, and Hesiod himself in Bœotia. The ancient veneration of heroes was to some extent parallel with that now paid to the saints of Christianity.

Kings and queens, and heroes old,
Such as the wise Demodocus once told
In solemn songs at King Alcinous' feast.
Milton, Vac. Ex., l. 47.

2. A man of distinguished valor, intrepidity, or enterprise in danger; a prominent or central personage in any remarkable action or event; one who exhibits extraordinary courage, firmness, fortitude, or intellectual greatness in any course of action.

Behold Achilles' promise fully paid,
Twelve Trojan heroes offer'd to thy shade.
Pope, Iliad, xxiii.

It would not do to have too many heroes and saints. An army made up wholly of generals would win no battles.
J. F. Clarke, Self-Culture, p. 38.

3. The principal male personage in a poem, play, or story, or the person who has the chief place and share in the transactions related, as Achilles in the Iliad, Odysseus (Ulysses) in the Odyssey, Æneas in the Æneid.

The shining quality of an epic hero, his magnanimity, his constancy, his patience, his piety, . . . raises first our admiration. Dryden, Æneid, Ded.

Why not a summer's as a winter's tale? . . .
Heroic if you will, or what you will,
Or be yourself your hero. Tennyson, Princess, Prol.

4. A person regarded as heroic; one invested by opinion with heroic qualities.

The war was a popular one, and as a natural consequence, soldiers and sailors were heroes everywhere.
Mrs. Gaskell, Sylvia's Lovers, xli.

No one is a hero to his valet. Proverb.

heroa, n. Plural of heroum, heroön.

heroarchy (hē′rō-är-ki), n.; pl. heroarchies (-kiz). [< Gr. ἥρως, a hero, + ἀρχή, rule, < ἄρχειν, rule.] See the extract.

All dignities of rank, on which human association rests, are what we may call a Heroarchy (Government of Heroes)—or a Hierarchy, for it is "sacred" enough withal!
Carlyle, Heroes and Hero-Worship, i.

Herodiæ (he-rō′di-ē), n. pl. [NL., fem. pl.] Same as Herodii, 2. Nitzsch.

Herodian[1] (hē-rō′di-ąn), a. and n. [< LL. Herodianus, < Herodes, < Gr. Ἡρώδης, Herod, < ἥρως, a hero, + -δης, patronymic suffix.] I. a. Pertaining to Herod the Great, king of the Jews, or to the family of Herod or its partizans.

We are no advocates of that Herodian policy which profanely and sacrilegiously would subject the things of God to the will of Cæsar.
Bp. Chr. Wordsworth, Church of Ireland, p. 172.

II. n. A member of a party among the Jews in the time of Christ and the apostles, adherents of the family of Herod. The Herodians constituted a political party rather than a religious sect. Some writers suppose that they were for the most part Sadducees in religion.

The Herodians appear as supporters of the claim of the Roman Emperors to receive tribute-money from the Jews.
H. B. Hackett, Smith's Bible Dict., p. 1054.

herodian[2] (he-rō′di-ąn), n. One of the Herodii or Herodiones.

Herodias (he-rō′di-as), n. [NL., also written Herodius (LL. herodius) and prop. Erodius, < Gr. ἐρωδιός, a heron: see Ardea.] A genus of large white herons or egrets. H. egretta is the great white egret of North America. H. alba is the corresponding European form. See cut under egret.

Herodii (he-rō′di-ī), n. pl. [NL., pl. of Herodius.] 1. In the broadest sense, same as Herodiones or Pelargomorphæ.—2. In a more restricted sense, the heron series of altricial grallatorial birds: a suborder or superfamily excluding storks and ibises. The leading family is Ardeidæ. Also Herodiæ.

Herodiones (he-rō-di-ō′nēz), n. pl. [NL., pl. of LL. herodio(n-), also herodius, a bird, perhaps the stork, < Gr. ἐρωδιός, a heron: see Herodias.] An order of birds, the altricial desmognathous grallatores, or herons, storks, ibises, spoonbills, and their allies, corresponding to Herodii in a broad sense, or to Pelargomorphæ. In some uses of the name certain incongruous forms have been included, but are now eliminated. The Culirirostres and the Grallatores of some authors are correspondent groups. The Herodiones are divisible into three suborders, Ibides, Pelargi, and Herodii.

The group here noted [Herodiones] corresponds to the Pelargomorphæ of Huxley, the Ciconiiformes of Garrod (minus Cathartidæ), the Grallatores altinares of Sundevall, and includes the Herodiæ, Pelargi, and Hemiglottides of Nitzsch—respectively the Heron series, the Stork series, and the series of Ibises and Spoonbills.
Coues, Key to N. A. Birds, p. 648.

herodionine (he-rō-di-ō′nin), a. [< Herodion-es + -ine[1].] Of or pertaining to the Herodiones; heron-like; ardeine, in a broad sense.

Herodius (he-rō′di-us), n. [NL.] Same as Herodias.

Herodotean (hē-rod-ō-tē′ąn), a. [< Herodotus + -e-an.] Pertaining to, characteristic of, or in the style of Herodotus, a Greek historian of the fifth century B. C., called the "father of history."

Roger of Hoveden is quite Herodotean both in the faithfulness of his personal relations and in the wish to incorporate in his chronicle all that he can gather touching the geography and history of strange lands.
Stubbs, Medieval and Modern Hist., p. 148.

heroess† (hē′rō-es), n. [< hero + -ess. Cf. Gr. ἡρώισσα, contr. ἡρῶσσα, fem. of ἥρως, hero: see hero.] A female hero; a heroine.

But all th' heroesses in Pluto's house,
That then encounter'd me, exceeds my might
To name or number. Chapman, Odyssey, xi.

heroic (hē-rō′ik), a. and n. [Formerly heroick; = F. héroïque = Sp. heroico = Pg. heroico = It. eroico, < L. heroicus, < Gr. ἡρωϊκός, of or for a hero, < ἥρως, a hero: see hero.] I. a. 1. Having or displaying the character or attributes of a hero; daring; intrepid; determined: as, a heroic warrior or explorer.

He [Henry IV.]
From John of Gaunt doth bring his pedigree,
Being but fourth of that heroic line.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., ii. 5.

The Heroic Sufferer for principle and generous affection wins the love of all uncorrupted hearts.
Channing, Perfect Life, p. 179.

2. Of or pertaining to heroes; suitable to the character of a hero; bold, daring, noble, or commanding in proportions, form, or quality: as, a heroic statue or monument; a heroic poem or symphony; a heroic enterprise; specifically, in art, larger than life: said of a statue, or a figure in a picture. See heroic size, below.

Goe on both hand in hand, O Nations, never to be disunited; be the Praise and the Heroick Song of all Posterity.
Milton, Reformation in Eng., ii.

An heroic poem, truly such, is the greatest work which the soul of man is capable to perform.
Dryden, Æneid, Ded.

I would have every thing to be esteemed as heroic which is great and uncommon in the circumstances of the man who performs it. Steele, Tatler, No. 202.

While the golden lyre
Is ever sounding in heroic ears Heroic hymns. Tennyson, Tiresias.

3. Having recourse to extreme measures; boldly experimental; daring; rash: as, heroic treatment.

Here again an improvement on the heroic practice of Alva and Romero. Motley, United Netherlands, III. 456.

Heroic age, in Gr. hist. or myth., the age when the heroes are supposed to have lived, a semi-mythical period preceding that which is truly historic. See hero, 1.—Heroic size, in the fine arts, any size larger than life: usually taken as a size intermediate between that of life and the colossal: as, a statue of heroic size.—Heroic verse, a form of verse adapted to the treatment of heroic or exalted themes: in classical poetry, the hexameter; in English, as also in German, the iambic of ten syllables; and in French, the Alexandrian (which see). The following is an example of English heroic verse:

Achilles' wrath, to Greece the direful spring
Of woes unnumbered, heavenly goddess, sing!
Pope, Iliad, i. 1.

=Syn. Gallant, Valiant, etc. (see brave), daring, fearless, dauntless.

II. n. 1†. A hero.

Many other particular circumstances of his [Homer's] gods assisting the ancient heroics might justly breed offence to any serious reader. Jackson.

2. A heroic verse: most frequently used in the plural, sometimes sarcastically in the sense of bombast, or extravagant expressions of admiration or praise: as, to go into heroics over a picture.

Tom Otway came next, Tom Shadwell's dear Zany,
And swears for heroics, he writes best of any.
Rochester, Trial of Poets for the Bays.

heroical (hē-rō′i-kal), a. [< heroic + -al.] Same as heroic. [Rare.]

Tho' heroical be properly understood of demi-gods, as of Hercules and Æneas, whose parents were said to be, the one celestiall, the other mortal, yet it is also transferred to them who for their greatness of mind came near to God.
Drayton, England's Heroical Epistles, To the Reader.

Many noble gentlemen and heroical spirits were to venture their honours, lives and fortunes.
R. Peeke (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 626).

heroically (hē-rō′i-kal-i), adv. In a heroic manner; with signal valor or fortitude; courageously; intrepidly; audaciously: as, the wall was heroically defended.

He [Lord Craven] and the Duke of Albemarle (the noted Monk) heroically stayed in town during the dreadful pestilence. Pennant, London, p. 214.

The garden bloomed and faded ten times over before Miss Manners found herself to be forty-six years old, which she heroically acknowledged one fine day to the census-taker. R. T. Cooke, Somebody's Neighbors, p. 42.

heroicalness (hē-rō′i-kal-nes), n. The quality of being heroic; heroism. Sir K. Digby. [Rare.]

heroicly (hē-rō′ik-li), adv. [< heroic + -ly[2].] Like a hero; heroically. [Rare.]

Samson hath quit himself
Like Samson, and heroickly hath finish'd
A life heroick. Milton, S. A., l. 1710.

heroicness (hē-rō′ik-nes), n. Heroicalness. [Rare.]

heroicomic (hē″rō-i-kom′ik), a. [= F. héroï-comique; as heroic + comic.] Blending the heroic and the ludicrous; consisting of lofty burlesque: as, a heroicomic poem.

heroicomical (hē″rō-i-kom′i-kal), a. [< heroicomic + -al.] Same as heroicomic.

heroid (hē-rōid), n. [= F. héroïde, < Gr. ἡρωίς (ἡρωιδ-), of heroic verse, < ἥρως, a hero: see hero.] A poem in the epistolary form, expressive of heroic sentiments: from the Heroides or heroic epistles of Ovid.

heroify (hē-rō′i-fī), v. t.; pret. and pp. heroified, ppr. heroifying. [< hero + -i-fy.] To make heroic; give a heroic character to. [Rare.]

This act of Weston has heroified the profession.
Brummel.

heroine (her′ō-in), n. [< OF. heroine, F. héroïne = Sp. heroina = Pg. heroina = It. eroina, < L. heroina, a demigoddess, heroine, < Gr. ἡρωίνη, a heroine, prop. fem. of ἡρώινος, adj., of a hero, < ἥρως, a hero: see hero.] 1. A female hero; a heroic woman.

Heroes' and heroines' shouts confusedly rise; . . .
Like Gods they fight, nor dread a mortal wound.
Pope, R. of the L., v. 41.

When dames and heroines of the golden year
Shall . . . rain an April of ovation round
Their statues, borne aloft. Tennyson, Princess, vi.

2. The principal female character in a poem, play, story, or romance, or the woman who plays the most important part.

"Take Lilia, then, for heroine," clamour'd he,
"And make her some great Princess, six feet high."
Tennyson, Princess, Prol.

heroism (her′ō-izm), n. [= F. héroïsme = Sp. Pg. heroismo = It. eroismo; as hero + -ism.] The qualities of a hero, as courage, intrepidity, fortitude, etc.; heroic character or action.

If the Odyssey be less noble than the Iliad, it is more instructive; the Iliad abounds with more heroism, this with more morality. W. Broome, Notes to the Odyssey.

Heroism is the self-devotion of genius manifesting itself in action. Hare.

Heroism, like cowardice, is contagious.
J. H. Ewing, We and the World.

=Syn. Valor, gallantry, daring, boldness, fearlessness. See brave and heroic.

heroistic (hē-rō-is′tik), a. [< hero + -ist + -ic.] Pertaining to or exhibiting heroism; relating to a hero or heroine. [Rare.]

Agreeably, however, to the heroistic account of her, not only was she not called Ursula, but, etc.
The Nation, Aug. 18, 1881, p. 141.

heroize (hē′rō-īz), v. t.; pret. and pp. heroized, ppr. heroizing. [< hero + -ize.] To make or represent as heroic. [Rare.]

As in all other heroized forms of the god of the dead, there is both a terrible and a wise and beneficent side in the character of Minos. Encyc. Brit., XVI. 478.

heron (her′on), n. [(1) Early mod. E. also hearon; < ME. heroun, heyroun, heiron, < OF. hairon, also heron, F. héron, dial. égron = Pr. aigron = Sp. airón = Cat. agro = It. aghirone, airone, a heron; with aug. suffix -on, -one, < OHG. heigir, MHG. heiger, a heron, = Icel. hegri = Sw. häger = Dan. hejre, a heron. (2) The Scand. forms answer better to OHG. hehara, a magpie, a jay, MHG. heher, G. heher, häher, a jay, jackdaw, = AS. higora, higera, a magpie, or jay-woodpecker (cf. E. dial. heighaw, a woodpecker). (3) A third group of forms appears in MHG. reiger, G. reiher = MLG. reiger = D. reiger = OS. hreiera = AS. hrāgra, a heron. These groups are not related, except as they may all be ult. imitative. Cf. W. cregyr, a screamer, a heron, < creg, cryg, hoarse; L. graculus, graculus, a jackdaw; and E. crake[2] and crow[2]. From the same source (OHG. through OF.) comes E. egret, q. v. Hence contr. hern[3], q. v.] A long-legged, long-necked, long-billed, slender-bodied wading bird; any bird of the family Ardeidæ, but especially of the subfamily Ardeinæ. Herons, including egrets, bitterns, etc., have the bill cleft below the eyes, naked lores, scaly legs bare above the shank, long toes fitted for perching, a comb on the nail of the middle toe, ample rounded wings, and short tail; the plumage is loose, and often develops graceful flowing plumes, whence the name egret; a constant characteristic is the presence of two or more pairs of powder-down tracts, or patches of greasy pulviplumes. Herons are aquatic, and feed on fish and other creatures which they stalk for and capture by spearing with the sharp bill; they generally nest in trees, and lay two or three greenish, whole-colored, elliptical eggs. (See heronry.) They are nearly cosmopolitan, and include numerous species of several modern genera, such as Ardea, Herodias, Nyctiardea, and Botaurus. The common heron of Europe is Ardea cinerea, represented in America by the great blue heron, A. herodias, 3½ to 4 feet long, and nearly 6 feet in expanse. The great white heron of Florida, A. occidentalis, is still larger; the goliath heron of Africa, A. goliath, is probably the largest of all. White herons or egrets are of medium and small size. Night-herons are smaller, and green herons among the least of all. Bitterns are herons of the subfamily Botaurinæ. Boat-billed herons form the subfamily Cancrominæ. See Ardeidæ, Herodiones, and cuts under Ardea, bittern[1], and egret.

Herons seem encumbered with too much sail for their light bodies. Gilbert White, Nat. Hist. of Selborne, xlii.

And the heron, the shuh-shuh-gah,
From her nest among the pine-trees,
Gave a cry of lamentation.
Longfellow, Hiawatha, v.

heroner†, n. [< ME. heroner, heronere, < OF. haironnier, q. v., a falcon trained to fly at the heron, < hairon, a heron: see heron. Hence contr. herner, q. v.] A falcon trained to fly at the heron, exclusively or principally.

Ech for his vertu holden is for deere,
Both heroner and faucon for ryvere.
Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 413.

heronry (her′on-ri), n.; pl. heronries (-riz). [< heron + -ry.] A place where herons breed in large numbers. Most kinds of herons congregate in hundreds, sometimes thousands, to breed in woods or swamps, constructing loose bulky nests of sticks, etc., which are placed on trees or bushes, less frequently on the ground. The birds resort year after year to the same places, and some of these heronries have become historical.

The heronry at Cressi-hall, which is a curiosity I never could manage to see. Fourscore nests of such a bird on one tree is a rarity which I would ride half as many miles to have a sight of.
Gilbert White, Nat. Hist. of Selborne, xxii.

Pine Island has a heronry. The American, XIV. 238.

heron's-bill (her′onz-bil), n. A name of plants of the genus Erodium, of the family Geraniaceæ, particularly E. cicutarium and E. moschatum, from the supposed resemblance of the long-beaked fruit to the head and breast of a heron. Also called stork's-bill.

heronsew (her′on-sū), n. [Early mod. E. also heronsewe, herunsew, heronseugh, heronshaw, hernsew, hernshew, hernshaw, etc.: ME. heronsewe, < OF. heronceau*, earlier heroncel, AF. herouncel, a heron (with dim. suffix -cel, -ceau, as also in F. lionceau, OF. liuncel, dim. of lion, lion, grifoncel, dim. of grifon, griffin), equiv. to OF. haironneau, F. héronneau (with dim. -eau, -el), < hairon, F. héron, a heron: see heron.] A small or young heron; a heron in general. [Now only prov. Eng.]

I wol nat tellen of her strange sewes,
Ne of her swaunes, ne of her heronsewes.
Chaucer, Squire's Tale, l. 60.

And the heronsewe shall be arayed in the same maner without ony moysture, & he shulde be eten with salte and poudre. Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 278.

heronshaw† (her′on-shâ), n. [Also contr. hernshaw[2], q. v.] A variant of heronsew.

So have wee seene a hawke cast off at an heron-shaw, to looke and flie a quite other way.
Bp. Hall, Quo Vadis?, p. 59.

heroögony (hē-rō-og′ō-ni), n. [< Gr. ἥρως, a hero, + -γονία, generation: see -gony.] A begetting or an imaginative creation of heroes; a genealogy of heroes. [Rare.]

A brief and abruptly terminated heroogony or generation of heroes by immortal sires from mortal mothers.
Encyc. Brit., XI. 777.

heroölogist (hē-rō-ol′ō-jist), n. [< heroölogy + -ist.] One who writes or discourses of heroes. Warton. [Rare.]

heroölogy (hē-rō-ol′ō-ji), n. [< Gr. ἡρωολογία, a tale of heroes, < ἥρως, a hero, + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] A body of legendary or traditional lore relating to heroes; a history of or a treatise on heroes. [Rare.]

From the above specimens in Tacitus we may conclude that all the Teutonic races had a pretty fully developed Heroology. Grimm, Teut. Mythol. (trans.), I. 366.

heroön, n. See heroum.

Herophilist (hē-rof′i-list), n. [< Herophilus (see def.) + -ist.] A disciple of Herophilus, leader of one of the earliest schools of medicine in Alexandria (about 300 B. C.), and one of the first exact anatomists.

The Herophilists still reverenced the memory of Hippocrates, and wrote numerous commentaries on his works.
Encyc. Brit., XV. 801.

Hero's fountain. See fountain.

heroship (hē′rō-ship), n. [< hero + -ship.] The character, condition, or career of a hero.

He, . . . his three years of heroship expired,
Returns indignant to the slighted plow.
Cowper, Task, iv. 644.

If he refused to sign, his heroship was lost.
L. Wallace, Ben-Hur, p. 347.

heroum, heroön (hē-rō′um, -on), n.; pl. heroa (-ä). [L. heroum, < Gr. ἡρῷον (sc. ἱερόν or ἕδος), the shrine or temple of a hero, neut. of ἡρῷον, ἡρῷος, of a hero, < ἥρως, a hero: see hero.] In Gr. antiq., a temple or shrine sacred to the memory of a hero, often erected over his reputed tomb.

The group [at Tegea] of Epochos supporting the wounded Ankæos, whose axe was falling from his hand, was probably rendered much as in the reliefs representing this hunt on the heroön at Gjölbaschí in Lycia, now in Vienna.
A. S. Murray, Greek Sculpture, II. 289.

hero-worship (hē′rō-wėr″ship), n. The worship of heroes, practised by ancient nations of antiquity; hence, reverence paid to heroes or great men, or to their memory.

Hero-worship, heartfelt prostrate admiration, submission, burning, boundless, for a noblest godlike Form of Man — is not that the germ of Christianity itself?
Carlyle, Heroes and Hero-Worship, i.

hero-worshiper (hē′rō-wėr″ship-ėr), n. One who pays reverence to, or who entertains extravagant admiration for, a hero or heroes.

But all women rave about him; for women are all hero-worshippers. Scribner's Mag., III. 632.

herp. An abbreviation of herpetology.

herpes (hėr′pēz), n. [= F. herpès (OF. herpet, ★m., herpete, f.) = Sp. herpe = Pg. herpes = It. erpete, < L. herpes, < Gr. ἕρπης (ἕρπητ-), herpes, lit. a creeping (so called from the tendency of the eruption to creep or spread from one part of the skin to another), < ἕρπειν = L. serpere, creep: see serpent.] 1. A cutaneous affection, also occurring sometimes on mucous membranes, characterized by the appearance of patches of distinct vesicles. Several forms of herpes are named, of which the principal are those given below.—2. [cap.] [NL.] In entom., a genus of weevils, of the family Curculionidæ, having as type H. porcellos, of Asiatic Turkey. Bedel, 1874.—Herpes facialis or labialis, herpes on the face, especially about the mouth, unaccompanied by neuralgia, and occurring in many acute febrile diseases; cold-sores.—Herpes zoster, herpes coinciding with the distribution of a sensory nerve, and accompanied by neuralgia, usually severe. The name originated in the resemblance to a girdle in cases of intercostal herpes zoster, but is used for the same disease when it occurs elsewhere. Also called shingles, zona, and zoster.

Herpestes (hėr-pes′tēz), n. [NL., appar. < Gr. ἑρπηστής, a reptile, < ἕρπειν, creep (see herpes), but said to be (irreg.) < ἑρπ(ετόν), a reptile, serpent, + ἐσθίειν, eat, devour. Cf. Spermestes, with similar termination.] The typical genus of ichneumons or mongooses of the subfamily Herpestinæ, formerly including the whole group, now restricted to such species as the Egyptian ichneumon or Pharaoh's rat (H. ichneumon), the mongoose of India (H. griseus), and several others. Illiger, 1811. See cut under ichneumon.

Herpestidæ (hėr-pes′ti-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Herpestes + -idæ.] The ichneumons rated as a family. See Herpestinæ.

Herpestinæ (hėr-pes-tī′nē), n. pl. [NL., < Herpestes + -inæ.] The dog-footed or cynopodous carnivorous quadrupeds of the old world, of the family Viverridæ, represented by the ichneumons and mongooses, having straight toes with blunt non-retractile claws. When the group is raised to the rank of a family, the Herpestinæ become still more restricted by the exclusion of such genera as Cynictis, Rhinogale, and Crossarchus, as respectively types of different subfamilies; but even in this narrow sense of the term the group contains upward of a dozen genera besides Herpestes, and the species are numerous.

Herpestis (hėr-pes'tis), n. [NL., < Gr. ἑρπηστής, a reptile: see Herpestes.] A name given by Gaertner in 1805 to Bacopa, a genus of plants, of the family Scrophulariaceæ, tribe Gratioleæ. It is distinguished by its calyx, the upper segment of which is large, ovate, and covering the rest, the other lobes narrow or linear, its cylindrical corolla, 4 stamens, and 2- or 4-valved capsule. It embraces about 50 species of small herbs, creeping or prostrate, with opposite, entire, or toothed leaves, and yellow, blue, or white flowers, mostly in axillary clusters or solitary. They are natives of the warm parts of both hemispheres. Bacopa Monniera, a wide-spread species, is the common water-hyssop, the expressed juice of which is used by the natives of India, when mixed with petroleum, to rub on parts affected with rheumatic pains. B. colubrina (Herpestis colubrina of Humboldt, Bonpland, and Kunth) is a native of Peru, where it is called yerba de colubra.

herpetic (hėr-pet'ik), a. [= F. herpétique = Sp. herpético = Pg. herpetico = It. erpetico, < Gr. ἕρπης (ἑρπητ-), herpes: see herpes.] Pertaining to or resembling herpes; partaking of the nature of herpes: as, herpetic patches.—Herpetic fever. See fever[1].

herpetical (hėr-pet'i-kal), a. [< herpetic + -al.] Same as herpetic.

herpetism (hėr'pe-tizm), n. [< herpes (herpet-) + -ism.] A constitutional tendency to herpes or similar affections. Thomas, Med. Dict.

Herpetodryas (hėr-pe-tod'ri-as), n. [NL., < Gr. ἑρπετόν, a reptile, serpent (see herpetoid), + δρυάς, a dryad, < δρῦς, a tree: see dryad.] A notable genus of ordinary colubriform serpents, usually referred to the family Colubridæ, having an elongate slender form adapted to arboreal life, and greenish and brownish coloration. H. carinatus is a South American species.

herpetoid (hėr'pe-toid), a. [< Gr. ἑρπετόν, a reptile, serpent (< ἑρπειν = L. serpere, creep: see serpent), + εἶδος, form.] Resembling a reptile; reptiliform; sauroid: as, the archæopteryx is a herpetoid bird.

herpetologic (hėr″pe-tō-loj'ik), a. [< herpetology + -ic.] Of or pertaining to herpetology.

herpetological (hėr″pe-tō-loj'i-kal), a. [< herpetologic + -al.] Same as herpetologic.

herpetologically (hėr″pe-tō-loj'i-kal-i), adv. In the manner or view of a herpetologist.

Dr. Günther considers that herpetologically Egypt must be included in the Palæarctic region, and many of the Egyptian snakes occur in Palestine.
Edinburgh Rev., CLXIII. 320.

herpetologist (hėr-pe-tol'ō-jist), n. [< herpetology + -ist.] One versed in herpetology, or engaged in the study of it.

The alleged monster does not fit into the existing classification of the herpetologists. The American, XII. 325.

herpetology (hėr-pe-tol'ō-ji), n. [< Gr. ἑρπετόν, a reptile, + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] 1. The science of reptiles, in a broad sense—that is, of reptiles proper and batrachians; the natural history of reptiles.—2. Reptiles collectively: as, the herpetology of Borneo.

When we consider the serpents of New Guinea more in detail, we shall be again struck with the resemblances which they present to the herpetology of Australia.
Nineteenth Century, XX. 88.

Also, erroneously, erpetology.

Herpetospondylia (hėr″pe-tō-spon-dil'i-ą), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ἑρπετόν, a reptile, + σπόνδυλος, Ionic and common dial. form of Gr. σφόνδυλος, a vertebra, joint.] One of the major groups into which Reptilia (excepting Pleurospondylia) are divisible, including the orders Plesiosauria, Lacertilia, and Ophidia, in all of which the dorsal vertebræ have transverse processes which are either entire or very imperfectly divided into terminal facets. The dorsal vertebræ and ribs are movable upon one another, and there is no plastron. The group thus defined is contrasted on the one hand with Perospondylia and on the other with Suchospondylia. See these words, and also Pleurospondylia.

Herpetotheres (hėr″pe-tō-thē'rēz), n. [NL., < Gr. ἑρπετόν, a reptile, + θηρᾶν, hunt, < θήρ, a wild beast.] A genus of South American hawks, the type and only species of which is H. cachinnans. Vieillot, 1818.

herpetotomist (hėr-pe-tot'ō-mist), n. [< herpetotomy + -ist.] A dissector of reptiles; a herpetological anatomist.

herpetotomy (hėr-pe-tot'ō-mi), n. [< Gr. ἑρπετόν, a reptile, + τομή, a cutting, < τέμνειν, ταμεῖν, cut.] The dissection of reptiles; a branch of zoötomy which treats of the anatomy of reptiles.

The reference is to the fact that herrings move in shoals; so W. ysgadan, herrings, < cad, an army, a host.] A clupeoid fish, Clupea harengus, of great economic importance and commercial value. It has an elongate form, and rather loose scales averaging about 57 transverse rows. The vomer has an ovate patch of teeth; the ventral serratures are weak; the color is bluish above and on the scales, varied with bright reflections. The herring inhabits the North Atlantic, especially in water of moderate depth. It is generally found not far from the coast, and in summer it comes into shallow water in countless myriads for the purpose of spawning. The spawning season varies according to temperature; in the Gulf of St. Lawrence it occurs in the spring, off the coast of Maine in September, at Cape Cod in November, and off Block Island in December. In Europe the visits of the herring to the shores depend likewise on temperature, and various regions have special varieties differing in size and slight structural characters. It is the object of very profitable fisheries, especially on the Norwegian, Dutch, and British coasts. The eggs are very small, and are discharged at the bottom of the water, where they adhere to rocks and seaweed, being scattered singly or in bunches over a vast extent of sea-bottom. The number of eggs to a female varies according to size, but averages about 10,000—in very large females many more. A closely related species, C. pallasi, is found in equal abundance in the North Pacific. The name is extended to the herring family, including the Clupeidæ, or shad, alewife, menhaden, pilchard, sprat, sardine, etc.—Black herring, a trade-name for a particular kind of cured fish.—Branch herring, the alewife, Pomolobus pseudoharengus. hesitatingly (hez′- or hes′i-tā-ting-li), adv. In a hesitating manner.

The best things done hesitatingly, and with an ill grace, lose their effect, and produce disgust rather than satisfaction or gratitude. A. Hamilton, Works, I. 168.

hesitation (hez- or hes-i-tā′shon), n. [= F. hésitation = Pr. heysitacio = Sp. hesitación = Pg. hesitação = It. esitazione, < L. hæsitatio(n-), < hæsitare, stick fast, stammer, etc.: see hesitate.] 1. The act of hesitating; a pausing or delay in determining or acting; suspension of judgment or decision from uncertainty of mind; a state of doubt.

With hesitation admirably slow,
He humbly hopes—presumes—it may be so.
Cowper, Conversation, l. 123.

It looks as if we held the fate of the fairest possessions of mankind in our hands, to be saved by our firmness or to be lost by hesitation. Emerson, Amer. Civilization.

It is not theory alone that can ever fully enable us to preserve the golden mean between faith and hesitation.
A. Sidgwick.

2. An irregular involuntary pausing in speech; awkward or embarrassed interruption of speech; stammering.

This hesitation arose, not from the poverty, but from the wealth of . . . [his] vocabulary. Macaulay, Lord Holland.

=Syn. Hesitation, Hesitancy; wavering, suspense, uncertainty, doubt, vacillation; faltering. Hesitation is perhaps more often used for the act of hesitating, hesitancy generally for the spirit, character, or frame of mind. Hesitation is more common.

hesitative (hez′- or hes′i-tā-tiv), a. [< hesitate + -ive.] Showing hesitation. Smart.

hesitator (hez′- or hes′i-tā-tor), n. [< hesitate + -or.] One who hesitates.

He was that apparent contradiction in terms, a bold hesitator—in the language of the hunting field, a "daring funker." Contemporary Rev., LIV. 620.

hesitatory (hez′- or hes′i-tā-tō-ri), a. [< hesitate + -ory.] Hesitating. [Rare.]

His being suspicious, dubious, cautelous, and not soon determined, but hesitatory at unusual occurrences in his office, made him pass for a person timidous, and of a fickle, irresolute temper. Roger North, Examen, p. 596.

Voice thin, creaky, querulous—hesitatory, and as if it couldn't be troubled to speak.
Carlyle, The Century, XXIV. 22.

hesp (hesp), n. 1. A dialectal variant of hasp. —2. The length of two hanks of linen thread.
E. H. Knight.

Hesper (hes′pėr), n. [< L. Hesperus, q. v.] Same as Hesperus, 1. [Poetical.]

Sad Hesper o'er the buried sun
And ready, thou, to die with him,
Thou watchest all things ever dim
And dimmer, and a glory done.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, cxxi.

Hesperia (hes-pē′ri-ą), n. [NL., < L. Hesperia, the west, < Hesperus, the evening star, the west: see Hesperus.] The typical genus of Hesperiidæ, containing small black-and-white species, such as H. tessellata. Fabricius, 1793. Also written Esperia.

Hesperia syrichtus. (Line shows natural size.)

Hesperian (hes-pē′ri-an), a. and n. [< L. Hesperius, western, < Gr. ἑσπέριος, western, < Ἕσπερος, Hesperus: see Hesperus.] I. a. 1. Western; situated at the west. [Poetical.]

The parting sun,
Beyond the earth's green cape and verdant isles Hesperian, sets. Milton, P. L., viii. 632.

2. Of or pertaining to the Hesperides.

The forests shining with Hesperian fruit and with the plumage of gorgeous birds. Macaulay, Moore's Byron.

3. [l. c.] Of or pertaining to the hesperians; having the characters of the family Hesperiidæ.

II. n. 1. An inhabitant of a western country.—2. [l. c.] A lepidopterous insect of the family Hesperiidæ; a skipper. See Castnioides. Also hesperid.

Let us now compare the foregoing detailed characters [of the yucca-borer] with the Castnians on the one hand and the Hesperians on the other. C. V. Riley.

Hesperid (hes′pe-rid), n. [< Herperid-es, n. pl.] 1. One of the Hesperides.

The damsels of the land, instead of nestling in chinchilla or sable's fur, stand about in a rural manner, much as did the Hesperids. P. Robinson, Under the Sun, p. 98.

2. [l. c.] Same as hesperian, 2.

Hesperidæ (hes-per′i-dē), n. pl. See Hesperiidæ.

Hesperideæ (hes-pe-rid′ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Hesperis (-id-) + -eæ.] 1. One of the orders established by Linnæus (1751) in his attempted natural arrangement of plants, including the genera Citrus, Styrax, and Garcinia.—2. A name sometimes used for the orange family.—3. An order used by Sachs, including the families Aurantiaceæ, Meliaceæ, Humiriaceæ, and Erythroxylaceæ.

Hesperides (hes-per′i-dēz), n. pl. [L., < Gr. Ἑσπερίδες, < Ἕσπερος, Hesperus: see Hesperus.] 1. In Gr. myth., nymphs who guarded, with the aid of a fierce serpent, the golden apples given by Ge (Earth) to Hera (Juno), in delightful gardens at the western extremity of the world, supposed to be in the region of Mount Atlas in Africa. Their origin and number (from three to seven) are variously given. [Erroneously used by Shakspere as a singular.]

Before thee stands this fair Hesperides,
With golden fruit, but dangerous to be touch'd.
Shak., Pericles, i. 1.

Ladies of the Hesperides, that seem'd Fairer than feign'd of old. Milton, P. R., ii. 357.

2. In bot., a class of plants founded by Endlicher, including his orders Humiriaceæ, Olacineæ, Aurantiaceæ, Meliaceæ, and Cedrelaceæ. Same as the Hesperideæ of Sachs. These families, many of which have been changed in name, are included by Engler and Prantl in the orders Geraniales and Santales.

Hesperidian (hes-pe-rid′i-an), a. [< Hesperides + -ian.] Of or pertaining to the Hesperides or their garden.

A Hesperidian tree, enwreathed by a serpent (symbol of a blessedness veiled in darkness and terrors).
C. O. Müller, Manual of Archæol. (trans.), § 431.

hesperidin (hes-per′i-din), n. [< hesperid-ium + *-in*2.] A glucoside ($C_{50}H_{60}O_{27}$) found in the spongy envelop of oranges and lemons. It forms white, tasteless microscopic crystals.

hesperidium (hes-pe-rid′i-um), n.; pl. hesperidia (-ą). [NL., < Hesperid-es + -ium, in allusion to the golden apples of the Hesperides.] In bot., a fleshy fruit with a leathery rind, formed from a free many-celled ovary: a mere variety of the berry. The term includes the orange, lemon, and related fruits. Morphologically, the rind is probably homologous with an outer whorl of barren carpels united by their edges in the manner of a polycarpellary one-celled ovary, and the elongated juice-filled cells of the pulp are true trichomes.

A succulent fruit (known technically as a hesperidium).
Pop. Sci. Mo., XXVIII. 603.

Hesperiidæ (hes-pe-rī′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Hesperia + -idæ.] A family of rhopalocerous lepidopterous insects, of which the genus Hesperia is the type; the skippers or hesperians. These small large-headed butterflies have a quick jerky flight, whence the name skipper. Representative species are Hesperia sylvanus and Thymele alveolus. Corresponding groups of hesperians are named Hesperida, Hesperidæ, Hesperides, and Hesperidi.

Hesperineæ (hes-pe-rin′ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Hesperis (-in-) + -eæ.] A section of the plant family Brassicaceæ, established by Reichenbach in 1837, typified by the genus Hesperis.

Hesperis (hes′pe-ris), n. [L., the queen's gillyflower, < Gr. ἑσπερίς, the night-scented gillyflower, peculiar fem. of ἑσπέριος, western: see Hesperian and Hesperides.] A genus of dicotyledonous choripetalous plants, founded by Linnæus, belonging to the family Brassicaceæ, tribe Sisymbrieæ. Its main characters are the two erect lobes of the stigma and elongated erect sepals. The genus includes about 24 species of biennial or perennial herbs, with mostly entire, ovate or oblong leaves, and rather large, loosely racemed, variously colored flowers. They grow in Europe and Asia. The common rocket or dame's-violet is H. matronalis, a native of Europe; other species are also called rocket.

Hesperisphinges (hes″pe-ri-sfin′jēz), n. pl. [NL., < Hesperia + sphinx.] In Latreille's system of classification, a division of crepuscular lepidopterous insects, corresponding nearly with the modern families Castniidæ and Agaristidæ: so called from being considered the connecting-link between the sphinxes and the diurnal Lepidoptera by means of the Hesperiidæ, a family of the latter division.

Hesperomys (hes-per′ō-mis), n. [NL. (Waterhouse, 1839), < Gr. ἑσπερος, western, + μῦς = E. mouse.] A genus equivalent to the tribe Sigmodontes, consisting of the American Muridæ, or murine rodents. As now restricted, the genus consists of the vesper-mice proper, or the ordinary native mice of America, of medium and small size, lithe form, with large ears and eyes, tail approximately as long as the body, fore feet small, hind feet long with scant-haired or naked 6-tuberculate soles, and the general pelage bicolored, sleek, and glossy. It is divided by Coues into numerous subgenera, those of North America being Vesperimus, Calomys, Onychomys, and Oryzomys. The last two are now used as generic names, and Hesperomys is antedated by Peromyscus.

Hesperopitheci (hes″pe-rō-pi-thē′sī), n. pl. [< Gr. ἑσπερος, western, the west, + πίθηκος, an ape.] The platyrrhine or American monkeys collectively: so called in distinction from the catarrhine or old-world Heopitheci. The two divisions are respectively conterminous with Platyrrhini and Catarrhini.

hesperopithecine (hes″pe-rō-pi-thē′sin), a. Pertaining to the Hesperopitheci.

Hesperornis (hes-pe-rôr′nis), n. [NL., < Gr. ἑσπερος, western, the west, + ὄρνις, a bird.] The typical genus of fossil birds of the family Hesperornithidæ. The best-known species is H. regalis, discovered in 1870 in the yellow chalk of the pteranodon beds of Kansas. O. C. Marsh, 1872.

Hesperornis may be tersely characterized as a gigantic diver, some six feet in length from the point of the bill to the end of the toes. . . . While the general configuration of the skeleton may be likened to that of a loon, the conformation of the sternum is ratite, like that of struthious birds, and the wings are rudimentary or abortive; . . . the jaws are long and furnished with sharp recurved teeth implanted in grooves.
Coues, Key to N. A. Birds, p. 826.

Hesperornithidæ (hes″pe-rôr-nith′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Hesperornis (-ornith-) + -idæ.] A family of fossil birds from the Cretaceous of North America, typified by the genus Hesperornis, and representing a prime division of the whole class Aves, having teeth implanted in grooves, saddle-shaped or heterocœlous vertebræ, ratite sternum, rudimentary wings, and short tail: conterminous with the subclass Odontolcæ.

Hesperus (hes′pe-rus), n. [L., the evening star, < Gr. Ἕσπερος, the evening star, prop. adj. (with or without ἀστήρ, star), of or at evening (also as noun, ἑσπερος or fem. ἑσπέρα, evening), hence western; orig. Fέσπερος* = L. vesper, m., vespera, f., evening: see vesper.] 1. The evening star; especially, the planet Venus as evening star (as morning star, called by the Greeks Phosphoros, and by the Romans Lucifer, 'light-bringer'): in mythology, personified as a son of Astræus and Eos (Aurora), or a son or brother of Atlas, and sometimes called the "father of the Hesperides." Also, poetically, Hesper.

Now glowed the firmament
With living sapphires; Hesperus, that led
The starry host, rode brightest.
Milton, P. L., iv. 605.

At evening the dewy Hesperus comes from the bosom of the mist, and assumes his station in the sky.
Longfellow, Hyperion, iii. 8.

2. [NL.] In entom., a genus of Staphylinidæ or rove-beetles. They are allied to Philonthus, but have thoracic setæ far from the margin, the lateral fold wide and short, and the metasternum strongly projecting in front in the form of a triangle. The European H. rufipennis and the North American H. baltimorensis are typical examples. The genus was founded by Fauvel in 1874.

Hesselbachian (hes-el-bak'i-an), a. Pertaining to the anatomist F. K. Hesselbach (1759–1816).—Hesselbachian triangle, a triangular space in the lower abdominal walls on each side, concerned in direct inguinal hernia, bounded below by Poupart's ligament, outwardly by the epigastric artery, and inwardly by the border of the rectus muscle.

Hesse's equation. See equation.

Hessian[1] (hesh'an), a. and n. [< Hessia, Latinized form of G. Hesse, Hessen, orig. a Teut. tribe-name, in L. Chatti (Tacitus), Gr. Χάττοι (Strabo).] I. a. Relating or pertaining to Hesse in Germany, or to the Hessians.—Hessian bit. See bit[1].—Hessian boots. See boot[2].—Hessian crucible, fly, etc. See the nouns.

II. n. 1. A native or an inhabitant of Hesse in Germany. The Hessians as a race are the representatives of the ancient Teutonic people the Catti (Chatti); they formed various minor states in Germany, of which the chief have been Hesse-Cassel (annexed to Prussia in 1866) and the grand duchy of Hesse, called Hesse-Darmstadt previous to 1866.

2. In the United States, as a term of reproach, a mercenary; a military or political hireling: from the employment of Hessian troops as mercenaries by the British government in the American revolution.—3. pl. A kind of long boots originally worn by Hessian soldiers; Hessian boots.

> Directly the Stranger saw the young men, he acted at them, eyeing them solemnly over his gilt volume as he lay on the stage-bank, showing his hand, his ring, and his Hessians. Thackeray, Pendennis, iv.

4. pl. A kind of coarse cloth, made of hemp, or, in modern times, of a mixture of hemp and jute, and used principally for bagging.

> Close textures, hessians.
> ★ U. S. Cons. Rep., No. 73½ (1887), p. 193.

Hessian[2] (hes'iạn), n. [< Hesse (see def.) + -ian.] In math., a functional determinant whose constituents are the second differential coefficients of a quantic, arranged in regular order. The name was given by Sylvester in 1853, after Dr. Otto Hesse of Königsberg, who showed the importance of this determinant. It is the Jacobian to the differential coefficients of a homogeneous function of any number of variables.

hessite (hes'īt), n. [After G. H. Hess of St. Petersburg (1802–50).] A rare silver telluride occurring in the Altai and elsewhere. Petzite is a variety containing also some gold.

hessonite (hes'on-īt), n. [Also, less prop., essonite; < Gr. ἧσσων, less, compar., with superl. ἥκιστος (see hekistotherm), going with μικρός, little, or κακός, bad, < ἧκα, softly.] A variety of garnet: same as cinnamon-stone.

hest (hest), n. [< ME. hest, heste (with excrescent t, as in against, whilst, etc., and with consequent shortening of the vowel), < AS. hæs, a command, hest (cf. behæs, behest: see behest), < hātan, bid, order, command: see hight[2].] 1. A command; bidding; injunction; behest. [Poetical or archaic.]

> To the ten heestis y haue not tende > Thoruȝ slouthe, wraththe, & glotenie.
> Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 99.

> Mar. What have you done?
> Seath. Obeyed your hests, madam; done your commands.
> B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd, ii. 2.

> Female attendance shall obey
> Your hest, for service or array.
> Scott, L. of the L., vi. 10.

2†. A promise.

> That thai had bene cumen right
> To the land of hest that tham was hight.
> Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 74.

> She nyl hire heste breken for no wight.
> Chaucer, Troilus, v. 355.

hestern† (hes'tėrn), a. [= OF. esterne, hesterne, < L. hesternus, of yesterday, yesterday's (= E. yester- in yesterday, etc.), < heri, yesterday: see yester-, yesterday.] Of yesterday; yester-.

> If a chronicler should misreport exployes that were enterprised but hestern day. Holinshed, Hist. Ireland.

hesternal (hes-tėr'nal), a. [< hestern + -al.] Of or pertaining to yesterday. [Rare.]

> I rose by candle-light, and consumed, in the intensest application, the hours which every other individual of our party wasted in enervating slumbers from the hesternal dissipation or debauch. Bulwer, Pelham, lvii.

hesthogenous (hes-thoj'e-nus), a. [Irreg. (more prop. esthogonous*) < Gr. ἑσθής, dress, clothing (< ἐννύναι, dress, clothe), + γόνος, offspring.] In ornith., ptilopædic; covered with down when hatched, as all præcocial and some altricial birds: opposed to gymnogenous or psilopædic.

> Hesthogenous—a word so vicious in formation as to be incapable of amendment, but intended to signify those [birds] that were hatched with a clothing of down.
> A. Newton, Encyc. Brit., XVIII. 31.

Hesvan, Heshvan (hes'-, hesh'van), n. [Heb.] The second month of the Jewish civil year, and the eighth of the sacred year, corresponding to the latter part of October and a part of November. It has 29 or 30 days.

Hesychasm (hes'i-kazm), n. [< Gr. ἡσυχασμός*, < ἡσυχάζειν, be still or quiet: see Hesychast.] The doctrine of the Hesychasts, a doctrine closely akin to that of the Quietists of later times. See Hesychast.

Hesychast (hes'i-kast), n. [< Gr. ἡσυχαστής, one who leads a still, retired life, a quietist, hermit, < ἡσυχάζειν, be still or quiet, < ἡσυχος, still, quiet.] One of a body of monks who lived on Mount Athos during the fourteenth century, and aimed to attain, by the practice of contemplation and asceticism, entire tranquillity and serenity of mind, and hence supernatural insight and divine light, with knowledge of the Deity. Also Omphalopsuchos and Massalian.

hesychastic (hes-i-kas'tik), a. [< Gr. ἡσυχαστικός, quieting (as music), also like a hermit, < ἡσυχάζειν, quiet, ἡσυχαστής, a quietist, hermit: see Hesychast.] Productive or expressive of quietude and serenity of mind.—Hesychastic episynthetа, in anc. pros., compound or episynthetic meters, the trochaic or iambic dipodies in which are epitritic in form (– ⏑ – – for – ⏑ – ⏑, and – – ⏑ – for ⏑ – ⏑ –). Also called dactylo-epitrites.

het[1] (het). Obsolete or provincial preterit and past participle of heat.

het[2]†. Obsolete (Middle English) preterit of hight[2].

het[3] (het), v. A dialectal variant of hit[1].

hetæra (he-tē'rạ), n.; pl. hetæræ (-rē). [NL., < Gr. ἑταίρα, Ionic ἑταίρη, Epic ἑτάρη, a female companion; in Attic use opposed to a lawful wife, and so with various shades of meaning from 'concubine' to 'courtezan'; fem. of ἑταῖρος, a companion, comrade, akin to ἕτης, a clansman, kinsman.] In ancient Greece, a woman, particularly a slave or a foreigner, devoted to public or private entertainment, making a profession of flute-playing, dancing, etc., and in some cases rising to high consideration for learning, talents, and the social arts; hence, a courtezan; an avowed concubine or female paramour. At Athens only daughters of full citizens could become, under the law, wives of citizens; thus, Aspasia of Miletus, the accomplished companion of Pericles, was, as a foreigner, classed as a hetæra. Also written hetaira, plural hetairai.

> Girls, Hetairai, curious in their art, > Hired animalisms. Tennyson, Lucretius.

> Like most philosophers of his age, he [Hutton] coquetted with those final causes which have been named barren virgins, but which might be more fitly termed the hetairæ of philosophy, so constantly have they led men astray.
> Huxley, Lay Sermons, p. 232.

hetæria (he-tē'ri-ạ), n. [L., < Gr. ἑταιρία, ἑταιρεία, companionship, association, brotherhood, a society, < ἑταῖρος, a companion, comrade: see hetæra.] An association of persons for a common end; specifically [cap.], a secret political society of Greeks, formed about the beginning of the nineteenth century, for the purpose of freeing Greece from the Turkish yoke.

hetærio (he-tē'ri-ō), n. [NL., < Gr. ἑταιρία, a society: see hetæria.] In bot., a collection of distinct indehiscent carpels, either dry upon a fleshy receptacle, as the strawberry, or dry upon a dry receptacle, as the ranunculus, or fleshy upon a dry receptacle, as the raspberry. Also, improperly, heterio, eterio.

hetærism (he-tē'rizm), n. [< Gr. ἑταιρισμός, the practice of a hetæra, < ἑταιρίζειν, to be a hetæra, < ἑταίρα, hetæra: see hetæra.] Open concubinage; specifically, in anthrop., the practice among some primitive races of common intercourse between the sexes; absence of the institution of marriage, or of lasting union between man and woman. Also written hetairism and, incorrectly, hetarism.

> The primitive condition of man socially was one of pure hetairism. Sir J. Lubbock, Orig. of Civilization, p. 67.

hetærist (he-tē'rist), n. [< Gr. ἑταιριστής, one who practises hetærism, < ἑταιρίζειν, to be a hetæra: see hetærism. In def. 2, < Hetæria + -ist.] 1. One who practises hetærism.—2. A member of the Greek political society Hetæria. Also written hetairist.

hetæristic (het-ē-ris'tik), a. [< hetærist + -ic.] Pertaining to, characterized by, or given to the practice of hetærism. Also written hetairistic.

> Even our poor relations, the anthropomorphous apes, are not hetæristic. Athenæum.

hetærolite (he-tē'rō-līt), n. [So called because associated with chalcophanite; < Gr. ἑταῖρος, a companion, + λίθος, a stone.] An imperfectly known mineral from Franklin Furnace, New Jersey, U. S. It is supposed to be an oxid of zinc and manganese allied to hausmannite.

hetaira, hetairism, etc. See hetæra, etc.

hetchel (hech'el), n. and v. Same as hatchel.

hete[1]†, n. and v. A Middle English form of heat.

hete[2]†, v. See hight[2].

heteracanth (het'ẹ-ra-kanth), a. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + ἀκανθα, spine.] In ichth., having asymmetrical dorsal and anal fin-spines, alternately broader on one side than on the other; not homacanth.

heteracmy (het-ẹ-rak'mi), n. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + ἀκμή, prime, maturity.] Proterogyny: said of flowers in which cross-fertilization is secured by the pistils maturing before the stamens: opposed to synacmy. A. W. Bennett (1870), in Journal of Botany, VIII. 316.

Heteractinida (het″ẹ-rak-tin'i-dä), n. pl. [NL., < Heteractis (-in-) + -ida.] Starfishes which have more than five rays: distinguished from Pentactinida.

heteradenic (het″ẹ-ra-den'ik), a. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + ἀδήν, gland.] Of glandular structure, but abnormally located: as, heteradenic tissue.

Heteralocha (het-ẹ-ral'ō-kạ), n. [NL., < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + ἄλοχος, spouse.] A genus of New Zealand sturnoid passerine birds, notable for the extraordinary sexual difference in the bill, which is comparatively short and quite straight in the male, and very long and curved in the female. The base of the bill is wattled in both sexes. H. acutirostris is the huia-bird. Cabanis, 1815. Also, improperly, Heterolocha. Also called Neomorpha.

Huia-birds (Heteralocha acutirostris): male, short bill; female, long curved bill.

Heteranthera (het″ẹ-ran-thē'rạ), n. [NL., < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + NL. anthera, anther.] A genus of monocotyledonous plants, founded by Ruiz and Pavon in 1794, belonging to the family Pontederiaceæ. It is distinguished by its salverform perianth, 3 stamens with erect anthers, and 1- or imperfectly 3-celled ovary. The genus includes 9 species of aquatic herbs, growing in mud or shallow water, with rounded, long-petioled or linear leaves, and blue, whitish, or yellowish flowers from a narrow spathe. They are all, except two African species, natives of North and South America. H. reniformis, of the eastern United States, is the mud-plantain; it has round kidney-shaped leaves and white flowers.

heterarchy (het'ẹ-rär-ki), n. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + ἀρχή, rule.] Government by an alien or aliens; foreign rule. Also, erroneously, eterarchy. [Rare.]

> It is a joy to think we have a king of our owne. Our owne blood, our owne religion; according to the motto of our princes (Ieh Dien): otherwise, next to anarchy is eterarchy. Bp. Hall, Christ and Cæsar.

heteratomic (het″ẹ-ra-tom'ik), a. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + ἄτομος, an atom: see atom.] Composed of atoms of different kinds.

heterauxesis (het″ẹ-râk-sē'sis), n. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + αὔξησις, increase: see auxesis.] In bot., irregular or unsymmetrical growth. It is a condition observed in the apex of growing organs of plants, superinduced by certain irregularities in the conditions upon which growth depends, such as variations in the osmotic properties of the cell-sap, in the physical properties of the primordial utricle, or in those of the cell-wall itself, giving rise to inequalities in the rate of growth of different parts of the organ, which in turn changes the direction of its growth.

> The rate of growth is usually not uniform in all parts of the transverse growing zones, so that the growth in length of an organ rarely, if ever, takes place in a straight line, but its apex nutates. This nutation we found to be due to spontaneous variations in the relative rate of growth of opposite sides of the organ, or, to express it in a single word, to spontaneous heterauxesis.
> Vines, Physiol. of Plants, p. 375.

heterio, n. See hetærio.

hetero-. [NL., L., etc., hetero-, < Gr. ἕτερο-, combining form of ἕτερος, the other (one of two), also (put loosely for ἄλλος, L. alius) another (of many), also other than usual, different; perhaps reduced from orig. ἄντερος* (?) = Skt. antaras = Goth. anthar = E. other: see other[1].] An element in compound words of Greek origin or formation, meaning 'other' or 'different': often opposed to homo-, 'same.'

heteroblastic (het″ẹ-rō-blas′tik), a. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + βλαστός, bud, germ.] Having a different histological origin, as when cartilage arises from periosteal cells: opposed to homoblastic.

This new cartilage is either homoblastic or heteroblastic.
H. Gadow, Nature, XXXIX. 150.

Heterobranchia (het″ẹ-rō-brang′ki-ä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + βράγχια, gills.] In zoöl., a classificatory name used in various senses. (a) In Lamarck's system of classification (1801–12), the lower one of two orders of his class Crustacea, containing the branchiopods, isopods, amphipods, etc., as distinguished from the Homobranchia or decapod crustaceans, the cirripeds being placed in a different class. (b) A section of gastropods with the gills variously formed, exposed or only slightly covered by a fold of the mantle, or contained in a closed lung-like cavity. The species are hermaphroditic. The term was used by Gray for the Opisthobranchiata, and was by Leuckart (1848) made one of six orders of the class Gasteropoda. (c) De Blainville's name (1825) for the tunicates or ascidians, as the fourth order of his Acephalophora or headless mollusks, divided into two families, Ascidiacea, or ordinary sea-squirts, and Salpacea, or salps. [Not in use.] Also Heterobranchiata.

heterobranchiate (het″ẹ-rō-brang′ki-āt), a. Pertaining to or having the characters of the Heterobranchia, in any sense.

Heterocarpeæ (het″ẹ-rō-kär′pē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + καρπός, fruit.] A class of algæ established by Kützing in 1843, including the tribes Trichoblasteæ and Choristocarpeæ. This classification has not been followed.

heterocarpian (het″ẹ-rō-kär′pi-ạn), a. Same as heterocarpous.

heterocarpous (het″ẹ-rō-kär′pus), a. [< Gr. ἑτερόκαρπος, bearing different fruit, < ἕτερος, other, different, + καρπός, fruit.] In bot., bearing fruit of two sorts or shapes.

heterocellular (het″ẹ-rō-sel′ū-lạr), a. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + NL. cellula, a cell: see cellula.] Consisting of unlike (that is, of variously differentiated or specialized) cells, as most animals: opposed to isocellular.

heterocephalous (het″ẹ-rō-sef′ạ-lus), a. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + κεφαλή, head.] In bot., having some flower-heads male and others female in the same individual: applied principally in the Compositæ.

Heterocera (het-ẹ-ros′ẹ-rä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + κέρας, horn.] A suborder of Lepidoptera, founded by Boisduval (1840), containing the nocturnal lepidopters or moths: contrasted with Rhopalocera or butterflies. They are so named from the diversity in the forms of the antennæ, which may be setaceous, fusiform, pectinate, or plumose, but are seldom if ever rhopalocerous or clubbed like those of butterflies. Leading forms of Heterocera are the sphingids, bombycids, arctiids, noctuids, geometrids, pyralids, tortricids, and tineids. The group corresponds to the Linnean genera Sphinx and Phalæna; it includes many families, among them those grouped as Microlepidoptera. See moth.

heterocerc (het′ẹ-rō-sėrk), a. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + κέρκος, tail.] Same as heterocercal.

heterocercal (het″ẹ-rō-sėr′kạl), a. [< heterocerc + -al.] In ichth., having an unequally divided tail or caudal fin. Contrasted with homocercal.

Heterocercal Tail of Fish.

heterocercality (het″ẹ-rō-sėr-kal′i-ti), n. [< heterocercal + -ity.] Same as heterocercy. Science, V. 341. [Rare.]

Heterocerci (het″ẹ-rō-sėr′sī), n. pl. [NL. (Zittel, 1887), < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + κέρκος, tail.] An order of ganoid fishes, including the families Palæoniscidæ and Platysomidæ: same as Lysopteri.

heterocercy (het′ẹ-rō-sėr″si), n. [< heterocerc + -y.] The state or quality of being heterocercal; inequality of the lobes of the caudal fin: opposed to homocercy.

Heteroceridæ (het″ẹ-rō-ser′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Heterocerus + -idæ.] A family of clavicorn beetles, typified by the genus Heterocerus. The dorsal segments of the abdomen are partly membranous, the first four ventral segments connate, the tarsi 4-jointed, the antennæ short and irregular, and the legs fossorial. MacLeay, 1825.

heterocerous (het-ẹ-ros′ẹ-rus), a. [< NL. Heterocerus, < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + κέρας, horn.] Having diversiform antennæ; pertaining to or having the characters of the Heterocera.

Heterocerus (het-ẹ-ros′ẹ-rus), n. [NL.: see heterocerous.] The typical genus of Heteroceridæ: so named from the irregularity of the 11-jointed antennæ, most of the joints of which form a club. The species are aquatic, burrowing in sand or mud along streams and in marshes by means of their strong fossorial legs.

Heterochelæ (het″ẹ-rō-kē′lē), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + χηλή, a hoof, claw.] In Latreille's system of classification, a division of crabs, containing those whose claws are longer in the male than in the female: contrasted with Homochelæ. It was composed of three tribes, Orbiculata, Trigona, and Hypophthalma. See these words.

Heterochromeæ (het″ẹ-rō-krō′mē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ἑτερόχρωμος, of different color (see heterochromous), + -eæ.] In Bentham and Hooker's system a subtribe of the Asteraceæ, characterized by having the disk hermaphrodite and mostly fertile, the corolla generally yellow, and a naked receptacle. It includes Aster, Erigeron, Boltonia, etc. It is substantially the Asterinæ of Engler and Prantl.

heterochromous (het″ẹ-rō-krō′mus), a. [< Gr. ἑτερόχρωμος, of different color, < ἕτερος, other, different, + χρῶμα, color.] In bot., having different members unlike in color; also, having the florets of the center or disk different in color from those of the circumference or ray: applied to a flower-head in the Compositæ.

heterochronia (het″ẹ-rō-krō′ni-ä), n. [NL.] Same as heterochrony.

Perls has suggested the use of the word heterotopia to designate a local heterology, and heterochronia a heterology in point of time, as when mucous tissue or cartilage develops in a place where it should normally only appear in the embryonic period.
Buck's Handbook of Med. Sciences, III. 401.

heterochronic (het″ẹ-rō-kron′ik), a. [< heterochron-ous + -ic.] Same as heterochronous.

heterochronism (het-ẹ-rok′rō-nizm), n. [< heterochron-ous + -ism.] Same as heterochrony.

heterochronistic (het″ẹ-rō-krō-nis′tik), a. [< heterochron-ous + -ist + -ic.] Same as heterochronous.

heterochronous (het-ẹ-rok′rō-nus), a. [< Gr. ἑτερόχρονος, of different times, < ἕτερος, other, different, + χρόνος, time.] Appearing at different times; not in genetic sequence; of or pertaining to heterochrony.

heterochrony (het-ẹ-rok′rō-ni), n. [< NL. heterochronia, < Gr. ἑτερόχρονος, of different times: see heterochronous.] In biol., a displacement, with reference to their order of appearance in time, of members of a genetically connected series, as of animal forms or organs; a disarrangement of the true ontogenetic sequence.

Entire organs which, during the serial genesis of the type, came comparatively late, come in the evolving individual comparatively soon. This, which Prof. Haeckel has called heterochrony, is shown us in the early marking out of the brain in a mammalian embryo, though in the lowest vertebrate animal no brain ever exists.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 233.

Heterocladia (het″ẹ-rō-klā′di-ä), n. [NL., < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + κλάδος, branch.] A monotypic genus of marine algæ, placed by Agardh in the family Rhodomelaceæ. H. australis, the only species, is a native of Australia. It has flat fronds composed of three layers of loose cellular tissue.

Heterocladieæ (het″ẹ-rō-klā-dī′ẹ-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Heterocladia + -eæ.] A tribe of marine algæ founded by Decaisne (1842), typified by the genus Heterocladia: placed by Agardh in the tribe Dasyeæ. See Heterocladia.

heterocline (het′ẹ-rō-klīn), a. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + κλίνη, bed (receptacle): see clinic.] In bot., producing the two kinds of flowers on separate receptacles: also same as heterocephalous.

heteroclital (het′ẹ-rō-klī-tạl), a. [< heteroclite + -al.] Same as heteroclite.

heteroclite (het′ẹ-rō-klīt), a. and n. [= F. hétéroclite = Sp. Pg. heteroclito = It. eteroclito, < LL. heteroclitus, < Gr. ἑτερόκλιτος, irregularly inflected, < ἕτερος, other, different, + κλιτός* (in comp.), verbal adj. of κλίνειν, bend, incline, decline, inflect, = E. lean[1]: see clinic and lean[1].]

I. a. 1. In gram., irregular in inflection. Hence —2. Deviating from ordinary forms or rules; irregular; anomalous. [Rare.]

Sir Toby Matthews, one of those heteroclite animals who finds his place anywhere.
Walpole, Anecdotes of Painting, II. iii.

II. n. 1. In gram., a word which is irregular or anomalous in declension or conjugation, or which deviates from the ordinary forms of inflection in words of a like kind. It is applied particularly to nouns having forms from different stems. Hence —2. A person or thing that deviates from the regular or proper form. [Rare.]

A substantial and severe collection of the heteroclites or irregulars of nature, well examined and described, I find not.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii. 121.

There are strange heteroclites in religion nowadays.
Howell, Letters, iv. 35.

It is a just and general complaint that indexes for the most part are heteroclites—I mean either redundant in what is needless, or defective in what is needful.
Fuller, Worthies, Norfolk.

heteroclitic (het″ẹ-rō-klit′ik), a. and n. [< heteroclite + -ic.] Same as heteroclite.

heteroclitical (het″ẹ-rō-klit′i-kạl), a. [< heteroclitic + -al.] Same as heteroclite.

Of sins heteroclitical, and such as want either name or precedent, there is ofttimes a sin even in their histories.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., vii. 19.

heteroclitous (het-ẹ-rok′li-tus), a. [< LL. heteroclitus: see heteroclite.] Same as heteroclite.

heterocyst (het′ẹ-rō-sist), n. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + κύστις, a bag, pouch.] In bot., one of a class of abnormal cells found in certain of the blue-green algæ. In the genus Nostoc, which may be taken as the type, the plants consist of rounded cells, loosely joined together in filaments, and usually embedded in a glutinous jelly. At irregular intervals in the filaments certain larger clear cells, the heterocysts, are produced. These heterocysts have differently colored watery cell-contents, and seem incapable of further development. They are probably connected in some way with reproduction, but their real nature is unknown. According to Farlow ("Marine Algæ of New England," p. 180), the term has been wrongly applied to certain of the basal cells of some of the species of Melobesia, the organs not being homologous.

heterodactyl, heterodactyle (het″ẹ-rō-dak′-til), a. [< NL. heterodactylus, < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + δάκτυλος, a finger or toe.] Having the digits irregular or peculiar in size, form, or position. Also heterodactylous.

Heterodactylæ (het″ẹ-rō-dak′ti-lē), n. pl. [NL., fem. pl. of heterodactylus: see heterodactyl.] In ornith., a group of picarian birds, distinguished from all other zygodactyl birds by having the second instead of the fourth toe reversed; the trogons, of the family Trogonidæ, considered as a superfamily. Sclater, 1880.

Heterodactyli (het″ẹ-rō-dak′ti-lī), n. pl. [NL., pl. of heterodactylus: see heterodactyl.] 1. In Blyth's system of classification (1849), the third division of his Strepitores, divided into the Trogonoides and Cypseloides, the former consisting of the trogons alone, the latter of the goatsuckers, swifts, and humming-birds.—2. Same as Heterodactylæ. See heteropelmous.

heterodactylous (het″ẹ-rō-dak′ti-lus), a. [< NL. heterodactylus: see heterodactyl.] 1. Same as heterodactyl.—2. In ornith., having that arrangement of the digits which is peculiar to trogons; of or pertaining to the Heterodactyli.

Heterodactylus (het″ẹ-rō-dak′ti-lus), n. [NL.: see heterodactyl.] 1. A genus of reptiles. Spix, 1825.—2. A genus of coleopterous insects. Guérin, 1841.

Heterodermeæ (het″ẹ-rō-dėr′mē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + δέρμα, skin, + -eæ.] An order of the Myxomycetes or slime-molds, proposed by Rostafinski in 1873. They are characterized by having the sporangia without capillitium, columella, or lime; the sporangium-wall delicate, and the spores and thickenings of the inner wall in one and the same sporangium usually of uniform color.

Heterodon (he-ter′ọ-don), n. [NL., < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + ὀδούς (ὀδοντ-) = E. tooth.] 1. A genus of innocuous colubriform serpents, having the rostral plate enlarged and recurved. There are several North American species, chiefly known as hog-nosed snakes, as H. simus or H. platyrhinus. They are unsightly blotched reptiles, Hog-nosed Snake (Heterodon platyrhinus).

with flattened heads, strikingly similar to some venomous serpents, as the copperhead or moccasin, but are perfectly harmless. Palisot de Beauvois, 1799.

2. [l. c.] A serpent of the genus Heterodon. Also heterodont.—3. One of several genera of mammals and mollusks. [Not in use.]

heterodont (het′ẹ-rō-dont), a. and n. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + ὀδούς (ὀδοντ-) = E. tooth.] I. a. Having different kinds of teeth; having the teeth differentiated into several distinct kinds, as incisors, canines, and molars: opposed to homodont.

In most cases . . . animals with Heterodont dentition are also Diphyodont. Flower, Encyc. Brit., XV. 352.

II. n. 1. A heterodont animal.—2. Same as heterodon, 2.

Heterodonta (het″ẹ-rō-don′tạ), n. pl. [NL.: see heterodont.] A section or order of dimyarian bivalve mollusks, with the few hinge-teeth distinctly separated as cardinal and lateral, alternating, and exactly fitting into pits in the opposite valve. It includes a large majority of living bivalves, as Veneridæ, Unionidæ, and many related families.

Heterodontia (het″ẹ-rō-don′shi-ạ), n. pl. [NL.: see heterodont.] In Blyth's edition of Cuvier, an order of implacental mammals, corresponding to the marsupialians or pouched mammals. [Not in use.]

Heterodontidæ (het″ẹ-rō-don′ti-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Heterodontus + -idæ.] Same as Cestraciontidæ.

heterodontoid (het″ẹ-rō-don′toid), a. [< Heterodontus + -oid.] Pertaining to or having the characters of the Heterodontidæ.

Heterodontus (het″ẹ-rō-don′tus), n. [NL.: see Heterodon.] 1. Same as Cestracion.—2. A genus of nitidulid beetles. Murray.

heterodox (het′ẹ-rō-doks), a. and n. [= F. hétérodoxe = Sp. Pg. heterodoxo = It. eterodosso, < Gr. ἑτερόδοξος, of another or different opinion, hence holding opinions other than the 'right' ones (opposed to ὀρθόδοξος, orthodox), < ἕτερος, other, different, + δόξα, opinion: see doxology.] I. a. 1. In theol., holding opinions not in accord with some generally recognized standard of doctrine, such as the creed of a church or the decrees of councils; not orthodox; heretical.

He asserted that I was heterodox; I retorted to the charge. Goldsmith, Vicar, ii.

Hence, in general—2. Not in accord with the established standard of belief.

This opinion will, we fear, be considered as heterodox. Macaulay, On History.

II.† n. An opinion not in accord with that which is generally accepted; a peculiar view.

On Thursday morning we had another session, in which was nothing done, but that it was reasoned whether that last heterodox should be retained. Hales, Golden Remains, Balcanqual's Letter from the [Synod of Dort, etc.

Not only a simple heterodox, but a very hard paradox it will seem, and of great absurdity, . . . if we say attraction is unjustly appropriated unto the loadstone. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., ii. 3.

heterodoxly (het′ẹ-rō-doks-li), adv. In a heterodox manner.

heterodoxness (het′ẹ-rō-doks-nes), n. The character of being heterodox.

heterodoxy (het′ẹ-rō-dok-si), n. [= F. hétérodoxie = Sp. Pg. heterodoxia = It. eterodossia, < Gr. ἑτεροδοξία, error of opinion, < ἑτερόδοξος, of another opinion: see heterodox.] 1. The quality or state of being heterodox: as, the heterodoxy of a doctrine, book, or person.

Heterodoxy was to a Jew but another name for disloyalty. Ep. Hurd, Works, VI. xx.

2. A heterodox belief or doctrine; a departure from an established standard or principle; a heresy.

Pelagianism and Samianism, with several other heterodoxies. South, Sermon to University of Oxford, Ded.

"I have heard frequent use," said the late Lord Sandwich, in a debate on the Test Laws, "of the words orthodoxy and heterodoxy; but I confess myself at a loss to know precisely what they mean." "Orthodoxy, my Lord," said Bishop Warburton, in a whisper—"orthodoxy is my doxy—heterodoxy is another man's doxy."
Quoted in Priestley's Memoirs, I. 572.

heterodromous (het-ẹ-rod′rō-mus), a. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + δρόμος, a running, < δραμεῖν, run.] Running or lying in different directions, as leaves on the stem and branches.—Heterodromous lever, a lever the fulcrum of which is between the weight and the power.

heterodromy (het-ẹ-rod′rō-mi), n. [As heterodromous + *-y*³.] In bot., a difference in direction of the genetic spiral in branch and parent axis: same as antidromy. Goebel.

heterœcious (het-ẹ-rē′shus), a. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + οἶκος, a house.] Pertaining to or characterized by heterœcism.

heterœcism (het-ẹ-rē′sizm), n. [As heterœcious + -ism.] In mycology, the development of different stages of the same growth on different host-plants; the production of the æcidiospores or conidia of a fungus on one host, and of its uredospores and teleutospores on another. One of the commonest examples is that afforded by the rust (Puccinia graminis) of wheat, oats, and some of the cultivated grasses. (See cut under Puccinia.) The first stage is passed upon the leaves of the barberry, where it constitutes what is known as the barberry-clustercups, or barberry-rust, Æcidium Berberidis. Later in the season, and usually after the rust has disappeared from the barberry, the uredo-stage makes its appearance upon the stem and leaves of wheat, oats, etc. The uredospores are soon produced, and by their rapid germination spread the disease until the whole of the host-plant may be more or less affected. In the fall the teleutospores are produced, which, lasting over the winter, germinate in the spring only upon the barberry-leaves, and begin again the cycle of growth.

heterœcismal (het″ẹ-rē-siz′mạl), a. [< heterœcism + -al.] In a heterœcious manner; passing through different stages, or producing different kinds of spores, on different host-plants.

heterogamous (het-ẹ-rog′ạ-mus), a. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + γάμος, marriage.] In bot., bearing two kinds of flowers which differ sexually, as in most Asteraceæ and many Cyperaceæ. In the Asteraceæ the ray-flowers of the capitulum or head may be either neuter or female, and those of the disk male. In the Cyperaceæ the male and female flowers are frequently borne in different spikes from the same root, or in different parts of the same spike.

heterogamy (het-ẹ-rog′ạ-mi), n. [As heterogam-ous + -y.] The state or quality of being heterogamous; mediate or indirect fertilization of plants. See extract under Chermes.

One or more generations of sexually produced young is now called heterogamy. Nature, XXX. 67.

Heterogangliata (het″ẹ-rō-gang-gli-ā′tạ), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of heterogangliatus*: see heterogangliate.] A name proposed by Professor Owen for all the Mollusca of Cuvier except the cirripeds, in accordance with a scheme of classification founded on the nervous system.

heterogangliate (het″ẹ-rō-gang′gli-āt), a. [< NL. heterogangliatus*, < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + γάγγλιον, ganglion.] Possessing a nervous system in which the ganglia are scattered and unsymmetrical, as mollusks; specifically, of or pertaining to the Heterogangliata.

heterogene† (het′ẹ-rō-jēn), a. [< F. hétérogène: see heterogeneous.] Same as heterogeneous.

All the guests are so mere heterogene
And strangers, no man knows another.
B. Jonson, Magnetick Lady, ii. 1.

heterogeneal (het″ẹ-rō-jē′nē-ạl), a. [As heterogene-ous + -al.] Heterogeneous. [Rare.]

This may be true, only in the Blood and Spirits of such fluid Parts, not in the solid and heterogeneal Parts. Howell, Letters, I. i. 31.

Inanimate substances, as water, wine, flesh, also magnitude, motion, and time, are wholes homogeneal continual; the bodies of animals, heterogeneal continual; numbers, as three, ten, are wholes homogeneal discrete; an army, the church, the world, heterogeneal and of the same denomination. Burgersdicius, tr. by a Gentleman.

★Heterogeneal numbers, numbers having opposite signs.

heterogeneity (het″ẹ-rō-jẹ-nē′i-ti), n. [= F. hétérogénéité = Sp. heterogeneidad = Pg. heterogeneidade = It. eterogeneità; as heterogene-ous + -ity.] The character or state of being heterogeneous; composition from dissimilar parts; difference in kind or quality; disparateness; dissimilarity.

Heterogeneity of function is the correlate of heterogeneity of structure; and heterogeneity of structure is the leading distinction between organic and inorganic aggregates. H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., § 36.

What a delightful heterogeneity pervades a book-lover's collection, even if it results only from the difference in size of first editions! J. R. Rees, Bookworm, p. 32.

Obviously, as it is through differentiation that an aggregate increases in heterogeneity, so it is through integration that an aggregate increases in definiteness, of structure and function. J. Fiske, Cosmic Philos., I. 337.

Law of heterogeneity, the proposition that every concept is susceptible of logical division—that, however minute a description may be, it must always leave room for further distinctions.

heterogeneous (het″ẹ-rō-jē′nē-us), a. [= F. hétérogène = Sp. heterogéneo = Pg. heterogeneo = It. eterogeneo, < ML. heterogeneus, < Gr. ἑτερογενής, of different kinds, in gram. of different genders, < ἕτερος, other, different, + γένος, kind, gender: see genus.] 1. Different in kind; widely dissimilar; unlike; foreign; incongruous.

If there be the least settlement or heterogeneous matter in any part of it [a liquor], shake it thoroughly, and it will be sure to show itself. South, Works, VI. vii.

Courtier and patriot cannot mix
Their het'rogeneous politics
Without an effervescence.
Cowper, Friendship, st. 22.

Relatively speaking, a tree is said to be heterogeneous as compared with the seed from which it has sprung; and an orange is heterogeneous as compared with a wooden ball. J. Fiske, Cosmic Philos., I. 336.

2. Composed of parts of different kinds; having widely unlike elements or constituents: opposed to homogeneous.

By a seemingly careless arrangement of his heterogeneous garb, he had endeavored to conceal or abate the peculiarity. Hawthorne, Scarlet Letter, iii.

An object is said to be heterogeneous when its parts do not all resemble one another. All known objects are more or less heterogeneous. J. Fiske, Cosmic Philos., I. 336.

Heterogeneous attraction. (a) An attraction between atoms, depending upon their being different in kind; chemical attraction. (b) The attraction between the different kinds of electricity and magnetism.—Heterogeneous body, a mechanical mixture of different chemical substances; especially, in the theory of attractions and in optics, a body whose parts are of unequal density.—Heterogeneous nouns in gram., nouns of different genders in the singular and plural: as, Latin locus, a place, which is of the masculine gender in the singular, but either masculine or neuter in the plural.—Heterogeneous number, a number composed of a whole number and a fraction.—Heterogeneous principle, a principle belonging to a different science from the one under consideration; a heteronymous principle.—Heterogeneous quantities, in physics, quantities of different dimensions, as a velocity and an acceleration.—Heterogeneous surds, in math., roots whose indices are different, as a square root and a cube root.

heterogeneously (het″ẹ-rō-jē′nē-us-li), adv. In a heterogeneous manner; so as to be heterogeneous; dissimilarly.

They [the houses] are small, and by the necessity of accumulating stores, where there are so few opportunities of purchase, the rooms are very heterogeneously filled. Johnson, Jour. to Western Isles.

heterogeneousness (het″ẹ-rō-jē′nē-us-nes), n. The character or condition of being heterogeneous; heterogeneity.

Dissimilitude of style, and heterogeneousness of sentiments, may sufficiently shew that a work does not really belong to the reputed author. Johnson, Note on Shakespeare's 3 Hen. VI.

heterogenesis (het″ẹ-rō-jen′e-sis), n. [NL., < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + γένεσις, generation.] 1. Production by an external cause—that is, a cause different from the effect. Also called heterogeny.—2. In biol.: (a) The spontaneous generation of animals and vegetables low in the scale of organization from inorganic elements; abiogenesis. (b) That kind of generation in which the parent, whether plant or animal, produces offspring differing in structure and habit from itself, but in which after one or more generations the original form reappears. Some forms of heterogenesis are called xenogenesis, parthenogenesis, geneagenesis, and alternate generation. See biogenesis, homogenesis.

By the other mode, the living parent was supposed to give rise to offspring which passed through a totally different series of states from those exhibited by the parent, and did not return into the cycle of the parent; this is what ought to be called Heterogenesis, the offspring being altogether and permanently unlike the parent. The term Heterogenesis, however, has unfortunately been used in a different sense, and M. Milne-Edwards has therefore substituted for it Xenogenesis, which means the generation of something foreign. Huxley, Lay Sermons, p. 353.

heterogenetic (het″ẹ-rō-jẹ-net′ik), a. [< heterogenesis, after genetic.] Pertaining to or of the nature of heterogenesis, in any sense.

Prof. Wundt calls his own theory of the will "the autogenetic theory," opposing it to the ordinary or "heterogenetic theory." Mind, XII. 289.

heterogenist (het-ẹ-roj′e-nist), n. [< heterogeny + -ist.] One who believes in the theory of spontaneous generation.

heterogeny (het-ẹ-roj′e-ni), n. [< Gr. ἑτερογενής, of different kinds: see heterogeneous.] Same as heterogenesis, 1.

Heteroglossa (het″ẹ-rō-glos′ạ), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + γλῶσσα, tongue: see glossa, 2.] A prime section of scutibranchiate gastropods. They have pellucid teeth in five to eight longitudinal rows and variable in form, the larger ones having opaque black tips; the shell is symmetrical; and the foot has no lateral branch. The group was instituted by J. E. Gray for the families Dentaliidæ, Tecturidæ, Leyetiidæ, Patellidæ, and Chitonidæ, which are distributed by recent authors among three orders.

heterogone (het′ẹ-rō-gōn), a. Same as heterogonous.

heterogonism (het-ẹ-rog′ō-nizm), n. [< heterogon-ous + -ism.] The state of being heterogonous. Also heterogony.

heterogonous (het-ẹ-rog′ō-nus), a. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + γόνος, generation.] In bot., having dissimilar reproductive organs: a term proposed by Asa Gray, in 1877, to include such flowers as are dimorphic or trimorphic in regard to the relative length of stamens and pistils. These flowers were first called diœcio-dimorphic by Torrey and Gray, in their "Flora of North America." Darwin, who was the first to interpret correctly the meaning, first termed this kind of blossom simply dimorphic (Jour. Linn. Soc. Lond., 1862, p. 77), but later, in 1877, in his "Forms of Flowers," he adopted Hildebrand's epithet heterostyled for it. These terms are, however, objectionable, since the differences affect the androecium, and even the pollen, as well as the style. Sometimes also heterogoneous, heterogone.—Heterogonous dimorphism, the production of two kinds of hermaphrodite flowers by different individuals of the same species, the flowers being essentially similar except in the androecium and gynœcium, but these reciprocally different in length or height, and the adaptations such that, by the agency of insects, the pollen from the stamens of the one sort reciprocally fertilizes the stigma of the other. This dimorphism has been detected in about 40 genera, belonging to 14 or 15 families, widely scattered through the vegetable kingdom. Gray, Structural Bot., p. 234.—Heterogonous trimorphism, a threefold heterogonism—that is, the occurrence in flowers of three reciprocally relative lengths of stamens and pistils. "The three forms may be conveniently called, from the unequal length of their pistils, the long-styled, mid-styled, and short-styled. The stamens also are of unequal length, and these may be called the longest, mid-length, and shortest." Darwin, Forms of Flowers, p. 138.

heterogony (het-ę-rog′ō-ni), n. [As heterogonous + -y.] Same as heterogonism. See heterogonous.

heterographic (het′ę-rō-graf′ik), a. [< heterography + -ic.] Of or pertaining to heterography.

heterography (het-ę-rog′ra-fi), n. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + -γραφία, < γράφειν, write.] Heterogeneous spelling; the use of the same letter or letters with different powers in different positions or in different words, as of c in call and cell, ough in rough, dough, and hough, etc.

Heterogyna (het-ę-roj′i-nä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of heterogynus: see heterogynous.] 1. In Latreille's system of classification, the first family of aculeate hymenopterous insects, the ants: so called from the two or three kinds of individuals, as males, females, and neuters: nearly equivalent to the modern families Formicidæ, Dorylidæ, Poneridæ, Myrmicidæ, Odontomachidæ, and Mutillidæ.—2. A group of fossorial hymenopterous insects, or digger-wasps, consisting of the families Mutillidæ and Scoliidæ, thus together contrasted with Fossores proper.

heterogynal (het-ę-roj′i-nal), a. [As heterogynous + -al.] Same as heterogynous.

heterogynous (het-ę-roj′i-nus), a. [< NL. heterogynus, < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + γύνη, female.] Having the females of two different kinds, one sexual, the other abortive or neuter, as the ants; specifically, pertaining to or having the characters of the Heterogyna.

heteroideous (het-ę-roi′dē-us), a. [< Gr. ἑτεροειδής, of another form or kind, < ἕτερος, other, different, + εἶδος, form.] Diversified in form. [Rare.]

Heterolepidæ (het′ę-rō-lep′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Heterolepis + -idæ.] In Günther's classification of fishes, same as Chiridæ or Hexagrammidæ.

heterologous (het-ę-rol′ō-gus), a. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + λόγος, proportion, relation. Cf. heterology.] 1. Containing or consisting of different elements or combinations; not homologous.

> Homologous forms may occur in parallel series which . . . can be called heterologous in their own series.
> Hyatt, Proc. Bost. Soc. Nat. Hist., XXIII. 117.

Specifically—2. In med., consisting of a tissue not normally found in that place at that period of life: as, a heterologous tumor.

> The more malignant heterologous tumors were attributed to a change in the blood.
> Buck's Handbook of Med. Sciences, III. 401.

heterology (het-ę-rol′ō-ji), n. [As heterologous + -y.] Abnormality; want or absence of homology or true morphological affinity; structural difference from a type or normal standard. Thus, cancer-cells exhibit heterology in comparison with healthy tissues.

> Perls has suggested the use of the word heterotopia to designate a local heterology, and heterochronia a heterology in point of time, as when mucous tissue or cartilage develops in a place where it should normally only appear in the embryonic period.
> Buck's Handbook of Med. Sciences, III. 401.

heteromallous (het′ę-rō-mal′us), a. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + μαλλός, a lock of wool.] In bot., having the leaves or branches turned in different directions, like the fibers of wool: applied to mosses. [Rare.]

heteromastigate (het′ę-rō-mas′ti-gāt), a. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + μάστιξ (μαστιγ-), a whip, flagellum, + -ate[1].] Having flagella of different kinds, a tractellum and a gubernaculum, as an infusorian: distinguished from isomastigate.

Heteromastigidæ (het′ę-rō-mas-tij′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Heteromastix (-tig-) + -idæ.] A family of cilioflagellate infusorians, represented by the genus Heteromastix. They have a short adoral fringe of cilia, one trailing and one vibratile flagellum, and a distinct anterior mouth close to the bases of the flagella. These animalcules are illoricate and free-swimming, plastic and changeable in form, and inhabit fresh water. The family has also been raised to the rank of an order named Heteromastigoda.

Heteromastix (het′ę-rō-mas′tiks), n. [NL., < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + μάστιξ, a whip, scourge.] 1. A genus of coleopterous insects. Boheman, 1858.—2. The typical genus of Heteromastigidæ, having a fringe of cilia along the ventral surface. H. proteiformis is an example. H. James Clark, 1868.

Heteromeles (het′ę-rō-mē′lēz), n. [NL., < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + μῆλον, apple.] A genus of plants, belonging to the family Malaceæ, and allied to Pyrus and Cratægus. H. arbutifolia is a shrub or small tree, with simple, coriaceous, dark, shining, evergreen, sharply serrate leaves, and white flowers in terminal corymbose panicles. It is very ornamental, from the contrast between the abundant bright-red fruit and the dark shining foliage. It is common in the coast ranges of California from Mendocino county to San Diego, and east to the Sierra Nevada, and is known as Christmas-berry, toyon, and California holly. The wood is dark reddish-brown in color, very heavy, hard, and close-grained, and susceptible of a beautiful polish.

Heteromera (het-ę-rom′ę-rä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ἑτερομερής, unequal: see heteromerous.] In Latreille's system of classification, a subordinal group of Coleoptera. It includes those beetles which have 5 tarsal joints of the first and second pair of legs, and only 4 such joints of the third pair, and is divided into Melasoma, Taxicornes, Stenelytra, and Trachelides. A later division of the Heteromera, by Westwood, is into Trachelida and Atrachelia. Leading families of the former are Meloidæ, Stylopidæ, and Anthicidæ; most of the latter division consists of the Tenebrionidæ.

heteromeran (het-ę-rom′ę-ran), n. One of the Heteromera; a heteromerous beetle.

Heteromeri (het-ę-rō-mē′rī), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + μηρός, thigh.] In ornith., in Garrod and Forbes's arrangement, a division of mesomyodian passeres, including the families Cotingidæ and Pipridæ, in which the femoral artery is developed contrary to the rule in birds: opposed to Homœomeri.

heteromeric (het′ę-rō-mer′ik), a. [As Heteromeri + -ic.] Of or pertaining to the Heteromeri; having the disposition of the femoral artery as in the Heteromeri.

heteromerous (het-ę-rom′ę-rus), a. [Cf. Heteromera; < Gr. ἑτερομερής, unequal, < ἕτερος, other, different, + μέρος, a part.] Diversiform; variously composed; having a heterologous composition; consisting of heteronomous parts. Specifically—(a) In entom., having a different number of joints in the different pairs of tarsi; pertaining to or having the characters of the Heteromera. (b) In chem., unrelated as to chemical composition. (c) In bot.: (1) Of flowers, having the members of adjoining cycles unequal in number. (2) Of lichens, having the gonidia or algal cells disposed within the thallus in one or more distinct layers, thus producing a stratification: opposed to homœomerous.

> The heteromerous thallus occurs in the large majority of species, and displays in fact a structure the main features of which can be clearly defined.
> De Bary, Fungi (trans.), p. 402.

Heterometabola (het′ę-rō-me-tab′ō-lä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + NL. Metabola, q. v.] A division of insects, including the Hemiptera, Orthoptera, Pseudoneuroptera, Physopoda, and Thysanura, which differ in their metamorphoses, but none of which show complete changes from larva to pupa and imago: in contradistinction to the Metabola, which undergo complete metamorphosis. Also called Homomorpha. Packard.

heterometabolous (het′ę-rō-me-tab′ō-lus), a. [As Heterometabola + -ous.] Pertaining to the Heterometabola; characterized by varying metamorphosis.

Heteromita (het-ę-rom′i-tä), n. [NL., < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + μίτος, thread.] The typical genus of infusorians of the family Heteromitidæ, of ovate form, without ventral groove. They are very numerous in infusions of animal or vegetable matter in either fresh or salt water. H. lens is one of the longest-known animalcules, having been described as Monas lens by Müller in 1786. There are many others.

Heteromitidæ (het′ę-rō-mit′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Heteromita + -idæ.] A family of flagellate infusorians, represented by the genus Heteromita. They are naked, free or attached, with flagella distinct or united at the base, and the body ovate or elongate.

★heteromorph (het′ę-rō-môrf), n. One of the Heteromorphæ, as the hoactzin.

Heteromorpha (het′ę-rō-môr′fä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of heteromorphus: see heteromorphous.] A series of hexapod insects which undergo true and complete metamorphosis; the Metabola, including Coleoptera, Lepidoptera, Diptera, Neuroptera, and Hymenoptera: opposed to Homomorpha.

Heteromorphæ (het′ę-rō-môr′fē), n. pl. [NL., fem. pl. of heteromorphus: see heteromorphous.] 1. A group of lepidopterous insects. Hübner, 1816.—2. In Huxley's classification of birds, a superfamily group established for the reception of the hoactzin, Opisthocomus cristatus: a ★synonym of Opisthocomi.

heteromorphic (het′ę-rō-môr′fik), a. [As heteromorph-ous + -ic.] 1. Deviating in form from a given type or standard; of irregular, abnormal, or unusual structure or composition.—2. In entom., undergoing entire transformation or complete metamorphosis; metabolous; specifically, pertaining to or having the characters of the Heteromorpha or Heteromorphæ.

★ Also heteromorphous.

heteromorphism (het′ę-rō-môr′fizm), n. [As heteromorph-ous + -ism.] The state or character of being heteromorphic; deviation from a type or norm, or from congruity. Specifically—(a) In entom., existence under different forms at successive stages of development: the result of transformation or metaboly. Thus, an insect exhibits heteromorphism when it is a pupa or larva, before it becomes an imago. (b) In bot., the property of having flowers differing from one another in the nature of their reproductive organs. See heterogonous. (c) In crystal., that property sometimes observed in compounds of crystallizing in different forms, though containing equal numbers of atoms similarly grouped, as in the case of the hydrous sulphates of zinc and ferrous iron, the former crystallizing in the orthorhombic, the latter in the monoclinic system.

heteromorphite (het′ę-rō-môr′fīt), n. [As heteromorph-ous + -ite[2].] A variety of the mineral jamesonite.

★heteromorphous (het′ę-rō-môr′fus), a. [< NL. heteromorphus, < Gr. ἑτερόμορφος, of another form, < ἕτερος, other, different, + μορφή, form.] Same as heteromorphic.—Heteromorphous palpi, in entom., those palpi in which the two intermediate joints are much larger than the first or last.

heteromorphy (het′ę-rō-môr-fi), n. [As heteromorph-ous + -y.] Heteromorphism; specifically, as used by teratologists, deformity in plants.

Heteromya (het-ę-rom′i-ä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + μῦς, a mussel, muscle, mouse, = E. mouse.] An order of bivalve or lamellibranch moliusks, in which the anterior or pallial adductor is much smaller than the posterior or pedal adductor, and in which siphons are seldom developed: distinguished from Isomya and Monomya. The mussels are a familiar example.

Heteromyaria (het′ę-rō-mī-ā′ri-ä), n. pl. [NL., as Heteromya + -aria.] A group of acephalous conchiferous mollusks, including the Mytilidæ, or mussels and related forms: distinguished from Dimyaria and Monomyaria.

heteromyarian (het′ę-rō-mī-ā′ri-an), a. Pertaining to or having the characters of the Heteromyaria.

Heteromyinæ (het′ę-rō-mi-ī′nē), n. pl. [NL., < Heteromys + -inæ.] A subfamily of Saccomyidæ, typified by the genus Heteromys; the spiny pocket-mice. They are characterized by the combination of rooted molars, broad smooth upper incisors, lack of inflation of the temporal region of the skull, and by the presence of external cheek-pouches and flattened spines in the pelage. Coues, 1877.

Heteromys (he-ter′ō-mis), n. [NL., < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + μῦς = E. mouse.] The typical genus of Heteromyinæ, containing several species of pocket-mice of the warmer parts of America, resembling Perognathus, but with plain incisors and spinose pelage. H. anomalus of Trinidad, about the size of a common rat, is an example. Desmarest, 1804.

Heteronemeæ† (het′ę-rō-nē′mē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + νῆμα, a thread, + -eæ.] A name applied by Fries to the higher cryptogams, such as the ferns, which were regarded as having a more complicated generation than the lower cryptogams.

heteronemous (het′ę-rō-nē′mus), a. [As Heteronem-eæ + -ous.] Resembling or of the nature of the Heteronemeæ.

heteronomic (het′ę-rō-nom′ik), a. [As heteronom-ous + -ic.] Of unlike or opposite polarity: applied to contact of parts of the human body in experiments in animal magnetism: opposed to isonomic.

Heteronomic [contact] is hyperæsthesic and increases it [muscular energy]. Amer. Jour. of Psychol., I. 502.

heteronomous (het-ę-ron′ō-mus), a. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + νόμος, law.] 1. In biol., of a different kind or order in any series or set of related things; differentiated or specialized in some way from a common type, in accordance with a law of adaptive modification. Thus, the cephalothorax of a crustacean is heteronomous with the abdominal segments, though both are composed of primitively similar metameres.

2. Pertaining to or characterized by heteronomy.

heteronomy (het-ę-ron′ō-mi), n. [As heteronom-ous + -y.] 1. Subordination or subjection to a law imposed by another or from without: opposed to autonomy.

To substitute the moral autonomy of the conscience, which is a modern idea, for the heteronomy of the Divine will and revelation—[is] a clear forsaking of Christian ground. Westminster Rev., CXXVI. 457.

2. Specifically, in the Kantian ethics, subjection of the will to the control of the natural appetites, passions, and desires, instead of to the moral law of reason.

heteronym (het′ę-rō-nim), n. [= F. hétéronyme, < Gr. ἑτερώνυμος, having a different name, < ἕτερος, other, different, + ὄνυμα, ὄνομα, name.] 1. A word having a different sound and meaning from another, but the same spelling, as lead[1], conduct, and lead[2], a metal: distinguished from homonym in a narrow sense—that is, a word having the same sound as another, but not the same spelling.—2. A different name of the same thing; a name in one language precisely translating a name in another language; a linguistic synonym, having literally the same meaning as some other word of another language. [Rare.]

Vernacular names which are more or less precise translations of Latin names, or of names in any other language, may be called heteronyms.
B. G. Wilder, Jour. Nerv. Diseases, xii. (1885).

heteronymic (het″ę-rō-nim′ik), a. [< heteronym + -ic.] Same as heteronymous.

heteronymous (het-ę-ron′i-mus), a. [< Gr. ἑτερώνυμος, having a different name: see heteronym.] 1. Pertaining to, of the nature of, or having a heteronym.—2. Of a different name: specifically, in optics, said of the double images of an object as seen under certain conditions. See homonymous.

Synonymous relatives are of the same name, heteronymous of a different name. Watts, Philosophy, p. 353.

The eye (or the mind) instinctively distinguishes homonymous from heteronymous images, referring the former to objects beyond, and the latter to objects this side of, the point of sight. Le Conte, Encyc. Brit., XXII. 539.

Heteronymous principles, principles drawn from different sciences.—Heteronymous relates, things whose relation to one another is not reciprocal, as father and son: opposed to synonymous relates, as cousins.

heteronymously (het-ę-ron′i-mus-li), adv. In a heteronymous manner; so as to be heteronymous.

Place one forefinger before the other in the median plane; . . . when we look at the farther finger, the nearer one is doubled heteronymously. Le Conte, Sight, p. 120.

heteronymy (het-ę-ron′i-mi), n. [< LGr. ἑτερωνυμία, a different name, the having a different name, < ἑτερώνυμος, having a different name: see heteronym.] 1. The relation between two or more heteronyms.—2. The system according to which heteronyms are employed. See paronymy.

heteroöusia, Heteroösian, etc. See heterousia, etc.

heteropathic (het″ę-rō-path′ik), a. [< heteropath-y + -ic.] Same as allopathic. [Rare.]

heteropathy (het-ę-rop′a-thi), n. [Formed after Gr. ἑτεροπάθεια, counter-irritation, but taken in a deflected sense, as in allopathy, < ἕτερος, other, different, + πάθος, suffering.] Same as allopathy. [Rare.]

Heteropelma (het″ę-rō-pel′mä), n. [NL., fem. of heteropelmus: see heteropelmous.] 1. In entom., a genus of ichneumon-flies, of the subfamily Ophioninæ, having the first joint of the hind tarsi four times as long as the second. There are one European and two American species. H. flavicornis of the United States is a common parasite of the larvæ of Datana.

2. A neotropical genus of birds, of the family Cotingidæ and subfamily Lipauginæ. H. turdinum of Brazil is an example. Schiff (in Bonaparte, 1853).

heteropelmous (het″ę-rō-pel′mus), a. [< NL. heteropelmus, < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + πέλμα, the sole of the foot.] In ornith., peculiar in the disposition of the flexor tendons in the sole of the foot; having that arrangement of these which is peculiar to the trogons or Heterodactyli, in which each of the flexors splits into two tendons, and the flexor hallucis supplies the two posterior toes (first and second digits), while the flexor perforans supplies the two anterior toes.

This structure, found nowhere else, we shall designate as heteropelmous. Stand. Nat. Hist., IV. 369.

Heterophagi (het-ę-rof′a-jī), n. pl. [NL., pl. of heterophagus: see heterophagous.] In ornith., the class of birds the young of which require to be fed by their parents; the altricial birds: opposed to Autophagi. See Altrices.

heterophagous (het-ę-rof′a-gus), a. [< NL. heterophagus, < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + φαγεῖν, eat.] Needing to be fed by others, as the young of the Heterophagi; altricial.

heterophasia (het″ę-rō-fā′si-ä), n. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + φάσις, a saying, < φάναι, say.] In pathol., a form of aphasia in which the patient constantly misapplies the terms he uses.

heterophasiac (het″ę-rō-fā′si-ak), n. [< heterophasia + -ac.] One who is affected with heterophasia.

heterophemism (het″ę-rō-fē′mizm), n. [< heterophem-y + -ism.] 1. Same as heterophemy.—2. An instance of heterophemy.

I have several examples in which creditor is used for debtor—perhaps the most common of all heterophemisms—in one of which a man is actually spoken of as "an absconding creditor." R. G. White, The Galaxy, XX. 698.

heterophemist (het″ę-rō-fē′mist), n. [< heterophem-y + -ist.] One afflicted with heterophemy.

heterophemistic (het″ę-rō-fē-mis′tik), a. [< heterophem-y + -ist-ic.] Pertaining to or characterized by heterophemy.

heterophemize (het″ę-rō-fē′mīz), v. i.; pret. and pp. heterophemized, ppr. heterophemizing. [< heterophem-y + -ize.] To say one thing when another is meant.

As Saul appeared among the prophets, so Henry Ward Beecher appears among the heterophemists; and characteristically of all that he does, he heterophemizes in a very striking manner. R. G. White, The Galaxy, XX. 697.

heterophemy (het″ę-rō-fē′mi), n. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + φήμη, a speech, saying (= L. fama, > E. fame[1], q. v.), < φάναι, speak, say.] The saying of one thing when another is meant; specifically, a disordered or morbid mental condition which leads to the saying or writing of one thing when another is meant; physical incapacity to express one's ideas in language conveying a correct impression. When heterophemy becomes a pronounced disease it is known as aphasia. Also heterophemism.

Another incident of its manifestation is that the assertion made is most often not merely something that the speaker or writer does not mean to say, but its very reverse, or at least something notably at variance with his purpose. For this reason I have called it heterophemy, which means merely the speaking otherwise, and which has relations to and illustrations in heterodoxy, heterogeneous, and heteroclite.
R. G. White, The Galaxy, XX. 693.

heterophonia (het″ę-rō-fō′ni-ä), n. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + φωνή, sound, voice.] Change of voice; cracked or broken voice. Dunglison.

heterophoria (het″ę-rō-fō′ri-ä), n. [NL., < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + -φορία, < φέρειν = E. bear[1].] A tendency of the visual axes to fail to meet in the fixation-point, due to weakness of one or more of the ocular muscles or their faulty innervation; insufficiency of the eye-muscles; muscular asthenopia.

heterophyadic (het″ę-rō-fī-ad′ik), a. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + (MGr.) φυάς (φυαδ-), a shoot, sucker, < φύεσθαι, grow.] In bot., characterized, as species of the genus Equisetum, by the production of two kinds of stems, one (usually appearing early in the spring) bearing the fructification, which soon withers entirely or at the apex, and the other bearing the sterile or vegetative branches. See homophyadic.

heterophyl, heterophyll (het′ę-rō-fil), n. [< NL. heterophyllus: see heterophyllous.] A species of ammonite having two forms of foliation or volution of the septal margins; one of the Heterophylli.

Heterophylli (het″ę-rō-fil′ī), n. pl. [NL., pl. of heterophyllus: see heterophyllous.] A group of cephalopods containing those ammonites which have different kinds of foliation or volution of the septal margins.

heterophyllous (het″ę-rō-fil′us), a. [< NL. heterophyllus, < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + φύλλον, leaf.] 1. In bot., having two different kinds of leaves on the same plant, as Potamogeton heterophyllus, which has broad floating leaves, with narrow leaves submerged in the water.—2. In zoöl., pertaining to or having the characters of the Heterophylli, as an ammonite.

heterophylly (het′ę-rō-fil″ī), n. [As heterophyll-ous + -y.] 1. Having varied foliage.

Variability of species and heterophylly are characteristic . . . to quite an unusual degree. Encyc. Brit., XX. 619.

2. Having two forms of leaves on the same plant.

heteroplasia (het″ę-rō-plā′si-ä), n. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + πλάσις, a forming, molding, < πλάσσειν, form.] In pathol., the development of a form of tissue in a location where it does not normally occur; abnormality of tissue, as in tuberculosis.

heteroplastic (het″ę-rō-plas′tik), a. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + πλαστικός, plastic, < πλάσσειν, form.] 1. Pertaining to or characterized by heteroplasia.

The myxomata often have a heteroplastic origin.
Buck's Handbook of Med. Sciences, V. 100.

2. Dissimilar in structure, as different tissues of the body. Thus, nerve-tissue, muscle-tissue, and bone-tissue are heteroplastic with reference one to another.

heteropod (het′ę-rō-pod), a. and n. [< NL. heteropus (-pod-), < Gr. ἑτερόπους, with uneven feet, < ἕτερος, other, different, + πούς (ποδ-) = E. foot.] I. a. Pertaining to or having the characters of the Heteropoda. Also heteropodous.

II. n. One of the Heteropoda. Also heteropodan.

Heteropoda (het-ę-rop′ō-dä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of heteropus (-pod-): see heteropod.] In zoöl., a name applied to several groups. (a) In Crustacea, a group of amphipods or isopods including forms with 14 feet, some of which are fitted for swimming. Latreille, 1826. (b) A class of Mollusca, or an order or a subclass of Gasteropoda; the nucleobranchiate mollusks, having the foot (propodium) modified into a swimming-organ or vertical fin lacking epipodia, the gills when present massed on the hinder part of the back, and the shell small or wanting. They are free-swimming pelagic organisms, of delicate, gelatinous, hyaline or transparent structure. There are two families, Firolidæ and Atlantidæ. The leading genera of the former are Firola (or Pterotrachea) and Carinaria, and of the latter Atlanta and the fossil Bellerophon. Caryobranchia is a synonym. (c) A group of echinoderms. Also written Heteropodes. Brandt, 1835.

heteropodan (het-ę-rop′ō-dan), n. Same as heteropod.

heteropodous (het-ę-rop′ō-dus), a. Same as heteropod.

heteropolar (het″ę-rō-pō′lär), a. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + πόλος, pole: see polar.] 1. Having polar correspondence to something other than itself.—2. In morphology, having unequal or dissimilar poles: said of the figures called stauraxonia heteropola. See stauraxonia.

heteroproral (het″ę-rō-prō′ral), a. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + NL. prora, q. v.] Having unequal or dissimilar proræ, as a pterocymba; not homoproral.

The prows may be similar (homoproral) or dissimilar (heteroproral). Encyc. Brit., XXII. 418.

heteropsychological (het″ę-rō-sī″kō-loj′i-kal), a. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + E. psychological.] See extract under idiopsychological.

heteropter (het-ę-rop′tėr), n. A heteropterous insect; one of the Heteroptera.

Heteroptera (het-ę-rop′tę-rä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of heteropterus: see heteropterous.] One of the two prime divisions of hemipterous insects founded by Latreille (1817). It is a suborder of Hemiptera, contrasted with Homoptera, from which it differs in the horizontal posture of the head, which is socketed in a hollow of the prothorax, and has a usually 4-jointed rostrum at the tip, and in the structure and position of the wings, which lie flat on the back, and are composed of three recognizable parts, the corium, the clavus, and the membrana (the last being veined and overlapping its fellow), with sometimes a fourth piece, the cuneus, at the end of the corium. The Heteroptera are those insects to which the popular term bug is specially applicable.

heteropteran (het-ę-rop′tę-ran), n. One of the Heteroptera; a heteropter or true bug.

heteropterous (het-ę-rop′tę-rus), a. [< NL. heteropterus, < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + πτερόν, wing.] Having diversiform wings; having the wings composed of several distinct parts; specifically, pertaining to or having the characters of the Heteroptera.

heteroptics (het-ę-rop′tiks), n. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + ὀπτικός, optic: see optic, optics.] False vision; perverted use of the eyes.

This irregularity in vision, together with such enormities as tipping the wink, the circumspective roll, the side-peep through a thin hood or fan, must be put in the class of Heteroptics, as all wrong notions of religion are ranked under the general name of Heterodox. Spectator, No. 250.

heteroptoton (het″e-rop-tō′ton), n.; pl. heteroptota (-tä). [< Gr. ἑτερόπτωτος, differently declined, < ἕτερος, other, different, + πτῶσις, inflection, case, < πτωτός, verbal adj. of πίπτειν, fall.] In gram. and rhet., enallage of case; antiptosis.

heteropygian (het″e-rō-pij′i-an), n. A fish of the group Heteropygii; an amblyopsid.

Heteropygii (het″e-rō-pij′i-ī), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + πυγή, rump.] A family of abdominal fishes, having the anus jugular, or under the throat: same as Amblyopsidæ. Müller. In Günther's system of classification they are characterized by having the head naked, the body covered with very small scales, the margin of the upper jaw formed by the intermaxillaries, villiform teeth both in the jaws and on the palate, a dorsal fin belonging to the caudal portion of the spinal column and opposite the anal, ventral fins rudimentary or absent, and the vent situated before the pectorals. The group includes the blind-fish of the Mammoth Cave of Kentucky and several related species. See cut under Amblyopsis.

Heterorhina (het″e-rō-rī′nä), n. [NL., < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + ῥίς (ῥιν-), nose.] 1. A genus of cetonian scarabæoid beetles, having an extremely variable structure and armature of the clypeus (whence the name), comprising many Asiatic and African forms. Also written Heterorrhina. Westwood, 1842.—2. A genus of American wrens, of the family Troglodytidæ, having the bill notched at the end, oval nostrils with incomplete septum, and tail two thirds as long as the wings. There are several species, of Mexico and the regions southward. S. F. Baird, 1864.

heterorhizal (het″e-rō-rī′zal), a. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + ῥίζα, root.] In bot., rooting from no fixed point, as do most cryptogams. [Rare.]

heteroscian (het-e-rosh′i-an), n. and a. [< Gr. ἑτερόσκιος, throwing a shadow in opposite directions (at noon), < ἕτερος, other, different, + σκιά, a shadow: see antiscian, squirrel.] I. n. A person living on one side of the equator, as contrasted with one living on the other side: so called from the fact that, except in the tropics, their shadows at noon always fall in opposite directions, the shadow in the northern zones toward the north, and that in the southern toward the south.

II. a. Of or pertaining to portions of the earth's surface on opposite sides of the equator, in which shadows fall in opposite directions, or to one such portion as contrasted with another.

heterosis (het-e-rō′sis), n. [< Gr. ἑτέρωσις, var. of ἑτεροίωσις, < ἑτεροιοῦν, alter, make different, < ἕτερος, other, different.] In gram. and rhet., same as enallage.

Heterosomata (het″e-rō-sō′ma-tä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + σῶμα, pl. σώματα, body.] A suborder of teleocephalous anacanthine fishes; the flatfishes: so called from their lack of bilateral symmetry. The group is represented by the families Pleuronectidæ, which contains such important food-fishes as the halibut, turbot, plaice, flounder, etc., and Soleidæ or soles. In Bonaparte's and Cope's systems of classification, the Heterosomata are ranked as an order of physoclistous fishes, with the ventral fins thoracic or jugular, and with the posterior cephalic region normal, but the anterior so twisted as to bring both orbits on one side of the head.

heterosomatous (het″e-rō-som′a-tus), a. [As Heterosomata + -ous.] In ichth., having a body differing from the usual type, especially one that is bilaterally asymmetrical; specifically, of or pertaining to the Heterosomata. Also heterosomous.

heterosome (het′e-rō-sōm), n. One of the Heterosomata; a flatfish.

heterosomous (het″e-rō-sō′mus), a. Same as heterosomatous.

Heterosporeæ (het″e-rō-spō′rē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + σπόρος, seed, + -eæ.] A subdivision of the ferns, Equisetaceæ and Lycopodiaceæ, characterized by the production of two kinds of spores, macrospores and microspores.

heterosporous (het-e-ros′pō-rus), a. [< Gr. ἕτερος. other, different, + σπόρος, seed.] Having more than one kind of asexually produced spores: applied to the vascular cryptogams, which have macrospores or megaspores (female spores) homologous with the embryo-sac of phanerogams, and microspores (male spores) homologous with the pollen-grains of phanerogams.

heterostatic (het″e-rō-stat′ik), a. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + (in def. 1) στατικός, causing to stand (στάσις, a standing, position), or (in def. 2) fem. στατική, the art of weighing, < ἱστάναι, cause to stand, etc., weigh: see static.] 1. Pertaining to three axes which can be drawn at every point of every elastic body such that, denoting them by the letters x, y, z, if a very small cube be cut out of the body with its edges parallel to those axes, and if the cube be twisted by a given amount round x, then a normal stress will be produced upon the faces to which x is normal equal to the tangential stress which would be produced round z by an equal amount of twisting round y.—2. Applied to instruments for measuring potential by electrostatic methods in which electrification other than that to be tested is made use of.

Instruments in which the only electrification is that which we wish to test are called idiostatic. Those in which there is electrification independent of that to be tested are called heterostatic. Clerk Maxwell.

heterostaural (het″e-rō-stâ′ral), a. [< Gr. ἑτερος, other, different, + σταυρός, a stake, cross.] In morphol., having an irregular polygon as the base of a pyramidal figure: applied to the figures called stauraxonia heteropola, and opposed to homostaural. See stauraxonia.

Heterostoma (het-e-ros′tō-mä), n. [NL., < Gr. ἑτερόστομος, one-edged, half and half, lit. with different mouths, < ἕτερος, different, + στόμα, mouth.] A genus of chilopod myriapods, of the family Scolopendridæ.

heterostrophe (het-e-ros′trō-fē), n. [NL., < Gr. ἑτερος, other, different, + στροφή, a turning.] Same as heterostrophy.

heterostrophic (het″e-rō-strof′ik), a. [In def. 1, < heterostrophy + -ic. In def. 2, < Gr. ἑτερόστροφος, consisting of different strophes, lit. having different turns, < ἕτερος, other, different, + στροφή, a turning, strophe.] 1. Pertaining to or resulting from heterostrophy; reversed in direction; turned the other way; in conch., having the spire whorled in the direction opposite to the usual one, as in Physa heterostropha, for example: said of a univalve shell.—2. In anc. pros., consisting of two systems of different metrical form: as, a heterostrophic song or choric passage.

heterostrophous (het-e-ros′trō-fus), a. [< heterostrophe + -ous.] Same as heterostrophic.

heterostrophy (het-e-ros′trō-fi), n. [As heterostrophe.] A contrary or opposite turning; the condition of being reversed in direction; specifically, in conch., reversal of the direction in which spiral shells usually turn. Also heterostrophe.

heterostyled (het′e-rō-stīld), a. [< Gr. ἑτερος, other, different, + στῦλος, a pillar, style: see *style*2.] Heterogonous: opposed to homostyled.

The essential character of plants belonging to the heterostyled class is that the individuals are divided into two or three bodies like the males and females of dicecious plants or of the higher animals, which exist in approximately equal numbers, and are adapted for reciprocal fertilization. Darwin, Different Forms of Flowers, p. 244.

heterostylism (het″e-rō-stī′lizm), n. [As heterostyl(ed) + -ism.] The state of being heterogonous.

There is no evidence that two sets of individuals exist which differ slightly in function and are adapted for reciprocal fertilisation; and this is the essence of heterostylism. Darwin, Different Forms of Flowers, p. 50.

heterotactous (het″e-rō-tak′tus), a. [As heterotaxis (-tact-) + -ous.] Pertaining to or characterized by heterotaxis. Specifically—(a) In geol., irregular or not uniform in arrangement or stratification; heterogeneous. (b) In bot., having organs deviating in position or arrangement from a normal type.

heterotaxic (het″e-rō-tak′sik), a. [< heterotax-is + -ic; prop. heterotactic:* see tactic.] Characterized by or exhibiting heterotaxis; not homotaxic.

heterotaxis (het″e-rō-tak′sis), n. [NL., < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + τάξις, arrangement (τακτός, ordered, arranged), < τάσσειν, order, arrange.] Anomalous arrangement; aberrant or abnormal disposition of parts or organs: the opposite of homotaxis.

heterotaxy (het′e-rō-tak″si), n. [As heterotaxis.] Same as heterotaxis.

Heterothalameæ (het″e-rō-tha-lā′mē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (De Candolle, 1836), < Heterothalamus + -eæ.] A subdivision of plants of the family Asteraceæ, tribe Astereæ, embracing the genus Heterothalamus only. [Obs.]

Heterothalamus (het″e-rō-thal′a-mus), n. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + θάλαμος, taken in mod. bot. sense, thalamus.] A small genus of asteroid composite plants, the type of the subdivision Heterothalameæ, and closely allied to the genus Baccharis. It is characterized by having polygamo-dicœcious heads. The hermaphrodite plants bear either sterile flowers in the disk, or a single row of fertile female flowers around the edge; the female plants bear fertile flowers, of which the achenia are compressed or 3-angled; the hermaphrodite achenia are abortive; the pappus is in one series or more, and copious; the leaves are alternate, and entire or dentate; and the flowers are corymbose or paniculate, and yellow. Only five species are known, all natives of South America. H. brunioides, of southern Brazil, furnishes the yellow romerillo dye from its flowers.

Heterotheca (het″e-rō-thē′kä), n. [NL. (so called from the unlike achenia of the ray and disk), < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + θήκη, a case.] A small genus of North American and Mexican herbs, belonging to the family Asteraceæ, tribe Astereæ, the type of de Candolle's tribe Heterothecæ. It is characterized by having the ray- and disk-flowers numerous, and both fertile; the style-branches of the hermaphrodite flowers tipped with a lanceolate or ovate triangular appendage; the achenia of the ray thickish, often triangular, without pappus, or rarely with a bristle or two; the disk compressed, and with a double pappus, the inner composed of long capillary bristles, the outer of numerous short squamæ; the leaves alternate; the flowers yellow; and the pappus brownish.

Heterothecæ (het″e-rō-thē′sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (de Candolle, 1836), < Heterotheca + -eæ.] A subdivision of plants belonging to the family Asteraceæ, tribe Astereæ, typified by the genus Heterotheca only.

heterotomous (het-e-rot′ō-mus), a. [< Gr. ἑτερος, other, different, + τομή, a cutting, < τέμνειν, cut.] In mineral., having a cleavage different from the common variety: applied to a variety of feldspar.

heterotopia (het″e-rō-tō′pi-ä), n. Same as heterotopy.

heterotopic (het″e-rō-top′ik), a. [< heterotopy + -ic.] Same as heterotopous.

heterotopism (het-e-rot′ō-pizm), n. [As heterotop-y + -ism.] Same as heterotopy.

heterotopous (het-e-rot′ō-pus), a. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + τόπος, place.] Misplaced; pertaining to or characterized by heterotopy: applied specifically in pathology to tissue occurring in an abnormal situation. Also heterotopic.

heterotopy (het-e-rot′ō-pi), n. [< NL. heterotopia: see heterotopous.] Disarrangement in position; misplacement. Specifically—(a) In pathol., the occurrence of a tissue forming a neoplasm in an abnormal position. (b) In biol., a disarrangement of an order of development affecting the place of the resulting phenomena. See heterochrony. Also heterotopism, heterotopia.

Virchow opposed both the view that the jaw [the infant giant jaw-bone of Stramberg] was like that of an ape and the one that it was a child's. The case was a rare instance of heterotopy in a man of gigantic size.
Pop. Sci. Mo., XXII. 138.

Displacement in position, or heterotopy, especially affects the cells or elementary parts which compose the organs; but it also affects the organs themselves.
Haeckel, Evol. of Man (trans.), I. 13.

Heterotricha (het-e-rot′ri-kä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of heterotrichus: see heterotrichous.] An order of ciliate infusorians. These animalcules are either free-swimming or attached, naked or loricate, and are entirely ciliated. The cilia form two widely distinct systems, those of the general cuticular surface being short and fine, and those of the oral region of much larger size, cirrose, and constituting a linear or more or less spiral or circular series. The cortical layers are usually highly differentiated, and inclose an even, parallel series of longitudinally disposed muscular fibrillæ. The order contains by far the largest of the infusorians, many of its members being visible to the naked eye, and some ranging in size up to one sixth of an inch. There are 20 or more genera, ranged by Kent in 7 families, Bursariidæ, Spirostomidæ, Stentoridæ, Tintinnidæ, Trichodenopsidæ, Codonellidæ, and Calceolidæ. Heterotricha is one of the four orders established by Stein, the others being Holotricha, Hypotricha, and Peritricha.

heterotrichal (het-e-rot′ri-kal), a. Same as heterotrichous. Encyc. Brit.

heterotrichous (het-e-rot′ri-kus), a. [< NL. heterotrichus, < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + θρίξ (τριχ-), hair.] Having unlike cilia scattered over the body; specifically, of or pertaining to the Heterotricha.

Heterotrichum (het-e-rot′ri-kum), n. [NL. (De Candolle, 1828), < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + θρίξ (τριχ-), hair.] 1. A genus of composite plants improperly called Saussurea by most authors. See Saussurea.—2. An untenable name for Octonum, a genus of shrubs of the family Melastomaceæ. It is characterized by having the calyx campanulate, and 6- to 8-lobed; the corolla of 6 to 8 white or rose-colored obovate petals; numerous stamens, and the fruit forming a tough berry. The leaves are large, ovate-cordate or oblong, and entire or serrulate. Ten species are known, from tropical America.

heterotropal (het-e-rot′rō-pal), a. Same as heterotropous.

heterotrophy (het-e-rot′rō-fi), n. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + τροφή, nourishment, < τρέφειν, feed.] In bot., a term used by Frank for that type of saprophytic nutrition in which the plant employs an intermediary agent in the absorption of organic food-stuff. This is to be seen in Fagus, Monotropa, Quercus, and in certain other genera of phanerogamic plants. See symbiosis.

heterotropic (het″ẹ-rō-trop′ik), a. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + τρόπος, a turning, < τρέπειν, turn.] Anisotropic; æolotropic: opposed to isotropic: as, "a heterotropic medium," Watson and Burbury, Math. Theory of Electr.

heterotropous (het-ẹ-rot′rō-pus), a. [< Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + τρέπειν, turn.] In bot., turned in more than one direction, or in an unusual direction: same as amphitropous. Also used by Agardh for collateral ovules turned back to back.

heterousia, heteroöusia (het-ẹ-rö′si-ạ̈, -rō-ö′si-ạ̈), n. [< LGr. ἑτερουσία*, ἑτεροουσία, difference of essence or nature, < ἑτερούσιος, also ἑτεροούσιος, of different essence or nature: see heterousious.] Different essence; essential difference of nature or constitution. See Heterousian.

> Semi-Arianism occupied an untenable middle ground between the Arian hetero-ousia, or difference of essence, and the orthodox homo-ousia, or equality of essence.
> Schaff, Christ and Christianity, p. 58.

Heterousian, Heteroöusian (het-ẹ-rö′si-ạn, -rō-ö′si-ạn), n. and a. [< heterousia, heteroöusia, + -an.] I. n. Eccles., one who believes the Father and the Son to be unlike in substance or essence; an Arian: opposed to Homoöusian. Also Heterousiast, Heteroöusiast.

II. a. Of or pertaining to the Heterousians or the doctrine of an essential difference between the Father and the Son: as, the Heterousian heresy. See Homoöusian.

Heterousiast, Heteroöusiast (het-ẹ-rö′si-ast, -rō-ö′si-ast), n. [As Heterousi-an, Heteroöusi-an, + -ast.] Same as Heterousian.

heterousious, heteroöusious (het-ẹ-rö′si-us, -rō-ö′si-us), a. [< LGr. ἑτερούσιος, less correctly ἑτεροούσιος, of different essence or nature, < ἕτερος, other, different, + οὐσία, essence, < ὤν, fem. οὖσα (ὀντ-), ppr. of εἶναι, be: see am (under be[1]) and ens, ontology, etc.] Eccl., essentially different; of unlike essence or substance: an epithet much used (in the Greek form) in the ancient Arian controversy, the Arians maintaining that the Son was created, and therefore was not the same in substance or essence (homoöusious) with the Father.

heterozetesis (het″ẹ-rō-zē-tē′sis), n. [NL., < Gr. ἕτερος, other, different, + ζήτησις, inquiry, < ζητεῖν, inquire, ask.] In logic, the fallacy of ignoration of the elench, which consists in replying to an argument different from that which the opponent has advanced, or in disproving something which the opponent has not maintained.

hethen[1]†, n. and a. A Middle English form of heathen.

hethen[2]†, adv. [ME., also hithen, hythen, < Icel. hedhan = Sw. häden = Dan. heden, hence, with a separative suffix -than, from the pron. stem represented by he[1]. Cf. equiv. hen[2], hence, from the same ult. source.] Hence; from this place; from this time.

hethennesse†, n. A Middle English form of heathenness.

hething†, n. [ME., < Icel. hæthing, a scoffing, hādhung, scorn, shame, disgrace, < hādh, scoffing, mocking.] Contempt; mockery.

> He hade not of hom but hethyng & skorne, > Grete wordis & gref, & moche grym threte;

hetman (het′mạn), n. [= G. hetman, < Pol. hetman, ataman = Little Russ. hetman, ataman, otaman, vataman = Russ. atamanŭ, < G. hauptmann, chieftain, captain, = E. head-man, q. v.] 1. In Poland, the commander of an army. The great hetman was formerly the commander-in-chief in the old kingdom of Poland.—2. Among the Cossacks, formerly, the elected chief of each of their principal communities; a Cossack chief; an ataman. The hetmans received extensive privileges from their Polish suzerains in the sixteenth century, which were continued after the Cossacks passed under Russian rule in 1654. Their rights were greatly restricted by Peter the Great, and the office of hetman of the Ukraine Cossacks was abolished by Catharine II. A hetman of the Don Cossacks continues to exist, but his duties are those of a governor-general. Since 1835 the heir apparent of the Russian throne is hereditary hetman of all the Cossacks, and is represented by a "hetman by delegation" for each of their territorial divisions. Hetman (ataman) is also the common title of subordinate Cossack chiefs.

> In the middle of the seventeenth century, an attempt of the King of Poland to enforce Popery upon the Cossacks, and to make their prince a hetman, delegate of his power, roused the indignation of the people.

hetmanate (het′mạn-āt), n. [< hetman + -ate[3].] The rule or administration of a hetman.

> During the hetmanate it had fortifications of which traces are still extant. Encyc. Brit., X. 6.

hetmanship (het′mạn-ship), n. [< hetman + -ship.] The office of a hetman.

> Hetmanship . . . was abolished by Catherine II.
> A. J. C. Hare, Studies in Russia, ix.

hette†. An obsolete preterit of heat.

hettert†, a. compar. An obsolete form of hotter. Chaucer.

hettle, a. and n. See hattle.

Heuchera (hoi′kėr-ạ̈), n. [NL., named after Prof. Heucher, a German botanist.] A genus of dicotyledonous choripetalous plants, belonging to the family Saxifragaceæ, tribe Saxifrageæ, and the type of Bartling's tribe Heuchereæ. The calyx is bell-shaped, the tube cohering at the base with the ovary, 5-cleft; the petals are 5 in number, spatulate, small, and entire; the stamens 5 in number; the styles 2, and slender; and the pod 1-celled, with 2 parietal many-seeded placentæ, and 2-beaked, opening between the beaks. They are perennials, with round heart-shaped leaves, principally from the rootstock. The flowers are in small clusters disposed in a prolonged and narrow panicle, and are greenish or purplish. About 34 species are known, natives of North America and Mexico. The root furnishes a powerful astringent, whence the name alum-root applied to some of the species, particularly H. Americana. H. villosa is sometimes called the American sanicle.

Alum-root (Heuchera Americana).
a, flower; b, c, fruit, entire and cut transversely.

Heuchereæ (hoi-kē′rē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Heuchera + -eæ.] A tribe of plants belonging to the family Saxifragaceæ, proposed by Bartling (1830), typified by the genus Heuchera.

heught (hūch), n. [Sc., also written heuch, formerly huwe, hew, etc., = E. how[2], a hill: see how[2].] 1. A crag; a precipice; a rugged steep; a glen with steep overhanging sides.

> A laidley worm in Spindleston-Heughs

> The Laidley Worm of Spindleston-Heugh (Child's Ballads, [I. 283).

2. A coal-mine; a pit.

heuk[1] (hūk), n. A Scotch form of hook. Burns.

heuk[2]† (hūk), n. See huke.

heulandite (hū′lạn-dīt), n. [After H. Heuland, an English dealer in minerals.] A mineral belonging to the zeolite group. It occurs in white to red or gray monoclinic crystals, with pearly luster on the surface of perfect cleavage. It is a hydrous silicate of aluminium and calcium.

heuretic (hū-ret′ik), n. [< Gr. εὑρετικός, inventive (cf. εὑρετής, an inventor, discoverer), < εὑρίσκειν (εὑρε-), invent, find out. Cf. eureka.] The art of discovery or invention: a branch of logic.

heuristic (hū-ris′tik), a. [< Gr. εὑρίσκειν (εὑρε-), find out (see heuretic), + -ist-ic.] Serving to find or discover.

> We can, indeed, use the idea that the world is an organic whole, determined in relation to an end which consciousness sets for itself, as an heuristic principle to guide us in following the connexion of things with each other.
> Encyc. Brit., XVI. 84.

heurteloup (hėr′tė-löp), n. [After Baron Heurteloup.] An artificial leech; an instrument for cutting and cupping a small area.

> Local bleeding is better done with the heurteloup than with leeches. Medical News, LIII. 73.

heurts, n. pl. See hurt[2].

heveț, v. A Middle English form of heave.

Hevea (hē′vē-ạ̈), n. [NL.] A genus of dicotyledonous plants, of the family Euphorbiaceæ, tribe Jatropheæ, the type of Baillon's tribe Heveæ. It is characterized by having 3-foliolate leaves; a lax panicle of flowers, of which the calyx is 5-toothed or with 5 short lobes, and no corolla; stamens 5 to 10, with the filaments united in a column; and 3-valved capsular fruit. About 10 species are known, natives of tropical America. This genus furnishes the most valuable caoutchouc or india-rubber exported from South America. The best is obtained from H. Brasiliensis. The seeds of these trees are poisonous to man and quadrupeds, but are harmless to and greedily eaten by birds. Prolonged boiling deprives them of their poison and renders them palatable.

Heveæ (hē′vē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Hevea + -eæ.] A tribe of plants of the family Euphorbiaceæ, proposed by Baillon in 1874, the genus Hevea being the type.

hevedț, n. A Middle English form of head. Chaucer.

hevent, n. A Middle English form of heaven.

hew[1] (hū), v.; pret. hewed, pp. hewed or hewn, ppr. hewing. [< ME. hewen (pret. hew, heow, pp. hewen), < AS. heáwan (pret. heów, pp. heáwen) = OS. hāwan = OFries. hāwa, howa = D. houwen = MLG. houwen, howen, hoggen = OHG. houwan, MHG. houwen, G. hauen = Icel. höggva = Sw. hugga = Dan. hugge, cut, hew, = Goth. haggwan* (?), not recorded, = OBulg. Serv. kovati, Russ. kovatĭ, etc., strike, hammer, forge (a word widely developed in Slav.), = Lith. kauti, strike, forge, = Lett. kaut, strike. From the same root are hay[1] and, through F., hoe[1]; also prob. hack[1], with hatch[3], hatchet, hash[1], etc.] I. trans. 1. To cut; especially, to cut with an ax, a hatchet, or a sword with a swinging blow; cut with a heavy blow or with repeated blows: as, to hew down a tree.

> Er thei were alle ynne ther were many slayn and for hewen. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 234.
>
> Wel coude he hewen wood, and water bere,
> For he was yong and mighty.
> Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 564.
>
> Hew them in pieces; hack their bones asunder.
> Shak., 1 Hen. VI., iv. 7.

2. To form or shape by blows with a sharp instrument; cut roughly into form; shape out by cutting: often with out: as, to hew timber; to hew out a sepulcher from a rock.

> A ful huge hegt hit haled vpon lofte,
> Of harde hewen ston vp to the tablez.
> Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 789.
>
> Lammikin was as gude a mason
> As ever hewed a stane.
> Lammikin (Child's Ballads, III. 307).
>
> I now pass my days, not studious nor idle, rather polishing old works than hewing out new ones. Pope, To Swift.

II. intrans. To cut; inflict cutting blows.

> Deth with his axe so faste on me doth hewe.
> Court of Love, l. 980.
>
> Full ofte he heweth up so highe
> That chippes fallen in his eye.
> Gower, Conf. Amant., I. 106.

hew[1]† (hū), n. [< hew[1], v.] Destruction by cutting down.

> Of whom he makes such havocke and such hew
> That swarmes of damned soules to hell he sends.
> Spenser, F. Q., VI. viii. 49.

hew[2]†, n. An obsolete spelling of hue[1].

hew[3]†, n. An obsolete spelling of hue[2].

hewet, n. [ME., < AS. hīwa, in pl. hīwan, household, servants, = OS. hīwa, f., wife, = OHG. hīwo, m., husband, hīwā, f., wife: see hind[2].] A servant or retainer.

> O servaunt traitour, false homly hewe.
> Chaucer, Merchant's Tale, l. 541.

hewedț, a. See hued.

hewer (hū′ėr), n. One who hews.

★ And the princes said unto them, Let them live; but let them be hewers of wood and drawers of water unto all the congregation. Josh. ix. 21.

Specifically—(a) In coal-mining, the miner who cuts the coal. (b) In lumbering, one who uses a heavy broadax in squaring timber.

hewgag (hū′gag), n. [Appar. a made word, prob. based on gewgaw, a jew's-harp.] 1. A toy musical instrument consisting of a hollow wooden pipe, about 4 inches long and half an inch in diameter, with a hole near one end and closed with parchment at the other, producing, when blown, a loud doleful sound. It was in use about 1856. Hence—2. An imaginary musical instrument feigned to be loudly sounded on occasions of special jubilation. [Humorous, U. S.]

To-day Hanscomb sends a letter "all about it" [Dawes's first speech in Congress], setting it out with the accompanying "sound of hew-gag."
S. Bowles, in Merriam's Bowles, I. 295.

hewhole (hū'hōl), n. [E. dial., regarded as hew[1], v., + obj. hole[1], in ref. to its wood-pecking habit; also highhole and highholder (in U. S.); formerly huhole (Florio), hewel (Marvell); in ME. hyghwhele (Halliwell), i. e. 'high-wheel'; all these forms being various twists given in popular speech to the name otherwise presented in hickwall, hickway, q. v.] The green woodpecker, Gecinus viridis. [Prov. Eng.]

hewn (hūn). A past participle of hew[1].

hexa-. [L. hexa-, repr. Gr. ἑξ, in comp. usually ἑξα-, in inscriptions also ἑξ-, ἑκ-, = L. sex = E. six, q. v.] An element of Greek origin or formation, meaning 'six.'

hexacapsular (hek-sạ-kap'sū-lär), a. [< Gr. ἑξ, = E. six, + E. capsule + -ar.] In bot., having six capsules or seed-vessels: as, a hexacapsular plant.

hexace (hek'sā-sē), n. [< Gr. ἑξ, = E. six, + ἀκή, a point.] A summit of a polyhedron formed by the concurrence of six faces.

Hexachætæ (hek-sạ-kē'tē), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ἑξ, = E. six, + NL. chæta, q. v.] A division of the brachycerous Diptera, containing those two-winged flies which have a proboscis composed of six pieces, as the family Tabanidæ: contrasted with Tetrachætæ and Dichætæ. hexachætous (hek-sạ-kē'tus), a. [As Hexachætæ + -ous.] Pertaining to or having the characters of the Hexachætæ.

hexachord (hek'sạ-kôrd), n. [< Gr. ἑξ, = E. six, + χορδή, a string, cord, chord.] 1. In Gr. music: (a) A diatonic series of six tones. (b) The interval of a major sixth. (c) An instrument with six strings.—2. In medieval music, a diatonic series of six tones, containing four whole steps and one half-step (between the third and fourth tones). The hexachord was an attempt to improve on the ancient tetrachord as a unit of musical analysis. The entire series of recognized tones, from the second G below middle C to the second E above it, was distributed among seven hexachords, beginning on $G_{,,}$, $C_{,}$, $F_{,}$, $G_{,}$, C, F, and G, respectively. Each hexachord was perfect in itself, and similar to every other; its tones were designated in order by the syllables ut, re, mi, fa, sol, and la. (See solmization.) Any given tone was designated both by its letter name and by its syllable name in full; middle C, for example, being known as C sol-fa-ut, etc. In actual singing the solmization and the singer's conception of the tones passed from one hexachord to another as far as necessary, the process of changing being called mutation. In contrapuntal writing the most perfect possible imitation was considered to be that which occurred between analogous tones of two hexachords. The hexachord system is doubtfully attributed to Guido d'Arezzo, in the eleventh century. It continued in use until, in the eighteenth century, the octave as a unit of analysis and the modern theory of key-relationship were recognized.

hexachronous (hek-sak'rō-nus), a. [< Gr. ἑξάχρονος, < ἑξ, = E. six, + χρόνος, time.] In anc. pros., having a magnitude of six primary or fundamental times; hexasemic.

hexacolic (hek-sạ-kol'ik), a. [< Gr. ἑξάκωλος, < ἑξ, = E. six, + κῶλον, a member: see colon[1].] In anc. pros., consisting of six cola or series: as, a hexacolic period.

Hexacoralla (hek″sạ-kō-ral'ạ), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ἑξ, = E. six, + κοράλλιον, coral.] One of the chief divisions of the Coralligena, in which the fundamental number of the intermesenteric chambers of the body-cavity, and likewise of the tentacles, is six; the hexamerous Coralligena, as distinguished from the Octocoralla, which are octomerous. The common Actiniidæ, or sea-anemones, are an example.

hexacorallan (hek″sạ-kō-ral'ạn), n. One of the Hexacoralla; a hexamerous coral.

hexacoralline (hek″sạ-kor'ạ-lin), a. and n. [< Hexacoralla + -ine[1].] I. a. Pertaining to or having the characters of the Hexacoralla.

II. n. One of the Hexacoralla; a hexacorallan.

hexact (hek'sakt), a. Same as hexactinal.

hexactinal (hek-sak'ti-nạl), a. [< Gr ἑξ, = E. six, + ἀκτίς (ἀκτιν-), a ray, + -al.] Having six rays, as a sponge-spicule.

hexactinellid (hek-sak-ti-nel'id), a. and n. I. a. Pertaining to or having the characters of the Hexactinellidæ. Also hexactinelline.

II. n. One of the Hexactinellidæ.

Hexactinellida (hek-sak-ti-nel'i-dạ), n. pl. [NL., < Hexactinella + -ida.] In Von Lendenfeld's system of classification, an order of silicious sponges, characterized by the triaxial and generally hexactinal spicules, in soft mesoglœa, the supporting skeleton being often strengthened with silicious cement.

Hexactinellidæ (hek-sak-ti-nel'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Hexactinella (< Gr. ἑξ, = E. six, + ἀκτίς (ἀκτιν-), a ray, + L. dim. -ella) + -idæ.] The glass-sponges rated as a family of silicious sponges.

hexactinelline (hek-sak-ti-nel'in), a. Same as hexactinellid.

Hexactiniæ (hek-sak-tin'i-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ἑξ, = E. six, + ἀκτίς (ἀκτιν-), a ray.] A group of Actiniaria with paired septa. The number of the pairs of septa is at least six, usually more, and in that case increasing in multiples of six. The mouth is fissure-shaped, and the esophagus has two esophageal grooves and two esophageal lappets.

★hexad (hek'sad), n. [< LL. hexas (hexad-), < Gr. ἑξάς (ἑξαδ-), the number six, < ἑξ = E. six.] 1. The sum of six units; the number six; also, a series of six numbers.—2. In chem., an element the atoms of which have six times the saturating power or equivalence of the hydrogen atom, as sulphur in certain conditions.

Also spelled hexade.

hexadactylism (hek-sạ-dak'ti-lizm), n. [< hexadactyl(ous) + -ism.] The condition of being hexadactylous.

hexadactylous (hek-sạ-dak'ti-lus), a. [< Gr. ἑξ, = E. six, + δάκτυλος, a finger.] Having six fingers or toes.

hexade, n. See hexad.

hexadic (hek-sad'ik), a. [< hexad + -ic.] Pertaining to six as a base of numeration.

hexaëdron (hek-sạ-ē'drọn), n. See hexahedron.

hexaëmeron (hek-sạ-em'ẹ-rọn), n. [LL. hexaemeron, the six days of the creation, < LGr. ἑξαήμερος, the six days' work (the title of a book by Basil on the six days of the creation), prop. adj., of or in six days, < Gr. ἑξ, = E. six, + ἡμέρα, day.] 1. A term of six days.—2. A history of the six days' work of creation, as contained in the first chapter of Genesis.

The older account of the creation in Gen. ii. . . . does not recognize the hexaemeron, and it is even doubtful whether the original sketch of Gen. i. distributed creation over six days. Encyc. Brit., XXI. 125.

The first volume is occupied with the Mosaic Hexaemeron and the Deluge. Contemporary Rev., L. 752.

hexafoil (hek'sạ-foil), a. [< Gr. ἑξ, = E. six, + E. foil[1], q. v.] Having six foils or lobes; six-lobed.

A vertical stem, rising from a wide hexafoil-shaped base. S. K. Cat. Spec. Ex., 1862, No. 1018.

★hexagon (hek'sạ-gon), n. [< L. hexagonum, < Gr. ἑξάγωνον, neut. of ἑξάγωνος, six-cornered, hexagonal, < ἑξ, = E. six, + γωνία, a corner, angle.] In geom., a figure of six sides and six angles. If it be plane and the sides and angles are equal, it is a regular hexagon.

hexagonal (hek-sag'ọ̄-nạl), a. [< hexagon + -al.] 1. Having six sides and six angles; having the form of a hexagon. The hexagonal system in crystallography includes such forms as the hexagonal prism, pyramid, etc., which are referred to three equal lateral axes inclined at angles of 60° and a vertical axis of different length at right angles to them. (See crystallography.) The rhombohedral system is a division of the hexagonal in which the forms are referred, sometimes to three equal inclined axes parallel to the faces of the fundamental rhombohedron, but more commonly to the same axes as the hexagonal forms; in the latter view the rhombohedron is regarded as the hemihedral form of a hexagonal pyramid, and similarly of the other forms. Hexagonal and rhombohedral forms have the same optical characters, both being uniaxial.

2. Divided into hexagons: as, a surface with a hexagonal structure.

hexagonally (hek-sag'ọ̄-nạl-i), adv. In the form of a hexagon hexagonienchyma† (hek-sạ-gō-ni-eng'ki-mạ), n. [NL., < Gr. ἑξάγωνος, six-cornered, hexagonal, + ἐγχυμα, an infusion: see enchymatous, and cf. parenchyma.] In bot., cellular tissue exhibiting hexagonal forms in section.

hexagonous (hek-sag'ọ̄-nus), a. Same as hexagonal. [Rare.]

An hexagonous plate embossed with angles.
Quar. Jour. of Geol. Soc., XLV. 172.

hexagony† (hek-sag'ọ̄-ni), n. [Directly < Gr. ἑξ, = E. six, + γωνία, angle. Cf. hexagon.] A hexagon.

When I read in St. Ambrose of hexagonies, or sexangular cellars of bees, did I, therefore, conclude that they were mathematicians? Abp. Bramhall, Against Hobbes.

hexagram (hek'sạ-gram), n. [< Gr. ἑξαγράμματος, of six letters (cf. LGr. ἑξάγραμμος, of six grams of weight), < ἑξ, = E. six, + γράμμα, a line, letter, etc.: see gram[2].] 1. A figure formed of two equilateral triangles placed concentrically with their sides parallel and on opposite sides of the center. This was the seal or symbol of the Pythagorean school.—2. In geom., a figure of six lines. The name is particularly applied to the mystic hexagram invented by Pascal. This is a hexagram inscribed in a conic. It has the property that the intersections of the first and fourth, the second and fifth, and the third and sixth lines lie on one straight line. This is a case of the elementary proposition that three cubic curves which have eight points in common also have a ninth in common. Brianchon's hexagram is circumscribed about a conic; and the chief property of it is that the three lines joining opposite angles intersect in one point.

Pascal's Hexagram.
AB, BC, CD, DE, EF, FA are the successive lines; AB and DE intersect in I; BC and EF intersect in H; CD and FA intersect in G; G, H, and I are collinear.

Brianchon's Hexagram.
ABCDEF is the hexagram. AD, BE, and CF meet in one point, G.

3. In Chinese lit., one of the 64 figures which form the basis of the Yih-king or "book of changes," one of the oldest Chinese books. Each of these figures is made up of six parallel lines, of which some are whole and some divided. See book of changes, under change.

Hexagrammidæ (hek-sạ-gram'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Hexagrammos + -idæ.] A family of acanthopterygian fishes, represented by the genus Hexagrammos. It is characterized by enlarged suborbitals connected with the preoperculum, an elongated dorsal fin with its spinous and articulated portions subequal, an elongated anal fin, and perfect ventrals, each with a spine and five rays. The species are confined to the northern Pacific ocean, and are mostly found along the western coast of North America, especially California, where the typical species are improperly called rock-trout. The family is also called Chiridæ, and by Günther Heterolepidæ.

Hexagrammos (hek-sạ-gram'os), n. [NL., < Gr. ἑξ, = E. six, + γράμμα, a line.] The typical genus of Hexagrammidæ: so called from the six more or less developed lateral lines, three on each side, of which one is median, one dorsal, and one abdominal. Steller's rock-trout or greenling, H. stelleri, is an example.

hexagyn (hek'sạ-jin), n. [< Gr. ἑξ, = E. six, + γυνή, female (in mod. bot. a pistil, style).] In the Linnean system, a plant having six styles.

Hexagynia (hek-sạ-jin'i-ạ), n. pl. [NL.: see hexagyn.] In the Linnean system, an order of plants having six styles.

hexagynian (hek-sạ-jin'i-ạn), a. [As hexagyn + -ian.] In bot., having six styles.

hexagynous (hek-saj'i-nus), a. [As hexagyn + -ous.] Same as hexagynian.

hexahedral (hek-sạ-hē'drạl), a. [< hexahedr(on) + -al.] 1. Having the figure of a hexahedron; having six equal superficial sides or faces; cubic.—2. In entom., having six distinct and more or less parallel sides; six-sided: said of long bodies, as joints of the antennæ, etc.

hexahedron (hek-sạ-hē'drọn), n. [< Gr. ἑξ, = E. six, + ἕδρα, seat, base, = E. settle[1], n.] A solid body having six faces; especially, the regular hexahedron or cube. Also hexaëdron.

hexakisoctahedron (hek″sạ-kis-ok-ta-hē'-drọn), n. [< Gr. ἑξάκις, six times (< ἑξ = E. six), + ὀκτώ, = E. eight, + ἕδρα, seat, base.] Same as hexoctahedron.

hexameral (hek-sam′ē-ral), a. [As hexamerous + -al.] Consisting of six parts; hexamerous: as, a hexameral arrangement of the septa.

hexamerous (hek-sam′ē-rus), a. [< Gr. ἑξαμερής, of six parts, < ἕξ, = E. six, + μέρος, a part.] Divided into six segments; consisting of six parts. Specifically—(a) In bot., having the parts of the flower six in number, or a multiple of six. (b) In zoöl., having a hexameral arrangement of the radiating parts or organs, as the Hexacoralla or Hexactineæ.

The finally hexamerous Anthozoön passes through a tetramerous and an octomerous stage.
Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 143.

hexameter (hek-sam′e-tėr), a. and n. [Early mod. E. also exameter; ME. exametron (n.); < L. hexameter, also hexametrus, < Gr. ἑξάμετρος, of six measures or feet (neut. ἑξάμετρον, L. hexametrum, a verse of six feet), < ἕξ, = E. six, + μέτρον, measure.] I. a. In pros., containing or consisting of six measures; having a length of six feet or six dipodies; especially, composed of six feet, of which the first four are dactyls or spondees, the fifth ordinarily a dactyl, sometimes a spondee, and the last a spondee or trochee: as, a hexameter line, verse, or period.

The Poets [style] was by verse exameter for his grauitie and statelinesse most allowable.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 33.

II. n. In pros., a period, line, or verse consisting of six measures. In books on modern versification, the "measure" and "foot" being ordinarily assumed to be identical, the word hexameter is used as precisely equivalent to hexapody; but according to the nomenclature of classical metrics, a hexameter is a group of six feet only in those classes of feet which are measured by single feet (monopodies). Since iambi, trochees, and anapests are measured by dipodies, an iambic, trochaic, or anapestic hexameter would be a group of twelve feet, a group of six such feet being a trimeter. The name hexameter is given by preëminence to the dactylic hexameter, also called the heroic or epic hexameter, or heroic or epic verse, from its use in Greek and Roman epic poetry from the earliest to the latest period. It is a compound verse consisting of two cola or members, either both of three feet or one of two feet and one of four feet. The heroic hexameter never consists of six dactyls, the last foot being always a spondee (– –), or, as the last syllable of a period may always be either long or short, a trochee (– ⏑) as a substitute for a spondee. Some authorities have regarded this meter as catalectic, so that the last foot would be a trochee by omission of the last syllable of the dactyl, or a spondee for the trochee. The fifth foot is rarely a spondee, but a spondee can always be used instead of a dactyl in any of the first four places. The ordinary form of the hexameter is accordingly – ⏑⏑ | – ⏑⏑ | – ⏑⏑ | – ⏑⏑ | – ⏑ ⏑ | – ×. A verse with a spondee as fifth foot is said to be spondaic, one consisting entirely of spondees holospondaic, and one entirely (except the last foot) of dactyls holodactylic. The principal cesuras are the trochaic of the third foot, the penthemimeral, and the hephthemimeral; besides which the bucolic cesura or dieresis and the trithemimeral cesura are to be noted. See cesura.

They ben versifyed comounly
Of six feet, which men clepe exametron.
Chaucer, Prol. to Monk's Tale, l. 91.

The English verse which we call heroick consists of no more than ten syllables; the Latin hexameter sometimes rises to seventeen. Dryden, Orig. and Prog. of Satire.

In the hexameter rises the fountain's silvery column,
In the pentameter aye falling in melody back.
Coleridge, tr. of Schiller's Ovidian Elegiac Meter.

Fancy, borne perhaps upon the rise
And long roll of the Hexameter.
Tennyson, Lucretius.

Perissosyllabic hexameter, in anc. pros., a verse consisting of a dactylic tetrameter and an ithyphallic (– ⏑ ⏑ | – ⏑ ⏑ | – ⏑ ⏑ | – ⏑ ⏑ ‖ – ⏑ – ⏑ – ⏑); a greater Archilochian. It was regarded by some ancient writers as a variation from the heroic hexameter made by inserting a redundant syllable (whence the epithet perissosyllabic) before the last syllable of the fifth foot in its dactylic form: thus, – ⏑ ⏑ | – ⏑ ⏑ | – ⏑ ⏑ | – ⏑ ⏑ | – ⏑ (–) ⏑ | – ×.

hexametral (hek-sam′e-tral), a. [< hexameter + -al.] Hexametric. Hobhouse.

hexametric (hek-sa-met′rik), a. [< hexameter + -ic.] Consisting of or written in six metrical feet.

hexametrical (hek-sa-met′ri-kal), a. [< hexametric + -al.] Same as hexametric.

Several hexametrical versions of the Iliad have already been mentioned. N. and Q., 7th ser., IV. 254.

hexametrist (hek-sam′e-trist), n. [< hexameter + -ist.] One who writes hexameters.

Claudian, and even the few lines of Merobaudes, stand higher in purity, as in the life of poetry, than all the Christian hexametrists. Milman.

Hexanchidæ (hek-sang′ki-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Hexanchus + -idæ.] A small family of selachians, of the order Opistharthri, having 6 or 7 gill-sacs, a spiracle, a well-defined lateral line, only 1 dorsal fin, no nictitating membrane, and diversiform teeth; the cow-sharks. It contains a few species. Also called Notidanidæ.

Hexanchus (hek-sang′kus), n. [NL., orig. Hexancus (Rafinesque, 1810): so called in ref. to the contracted gill-slits; irreg. < Gr. ἕξ, = E. six, + ἄγχειν, choke, constrict.] The typical genus of the family Hexanchidæ.

Cow-shark (Hexanchus corinus).

hexander (hek-san′dėr), n. [< ML. hexandrus: see hexandrous.] In the Linnean system of classification, a plant having six stamens.

Hexandria (hek-san′dri-ą), n. pl. [NL.: see hexandrous.] In the Linnean system of botany, a class of plants having six stamens, which are all of equal or nearly equal length. It is thus distinguished from the class Tetradynamia, which has also six stamens, but of these four are longer than the other two.

hexandrian (hek-san′dri-an), a. Same as hexandrous.

hexandrous (hek-san′drus), a. [< NL. hexandrus, < Gr. ἕξ, = E. six, + ἀνήρ (ἀνδρ-), male (in mod. bot. a stamen).] Having six stamens. Also hexandrious, hexandrian.

hexane (hek′sān), n. [< Gr. ἕξ, = E. six, + -ane.] The sixth member (C_6H_{14}) of the paraffin series of hydrocarbons. It is a liquid, boiling at about 69° C., found in various natural oils.

hexangular (hek-sang′gū-lär), a. [< Gr. ἕξ, = E. six, + L. angulus, an angle.] Having six angles.

The base was hexangular, finely ornamented with Gothic sculpture. Pennant, Tour, p. 217.

hexapartite (hek-sa-pär′tīt), a. [< Gr. ἕξ, = E. six, + L. partitus, divided, < partire, divide, part.] 1. In arch., divided into six parts: applied to a vault divided by its system of arching into six parts.—2. In zoöl., having six parts; hexamerous.

hexapetaloid (hek-sa-pet′a-loid), a. [< Gr. ἕξ, = E. six, + πέταλον, a leaf (in mod. bot. a petal), + εἶδος, resemblance.] Having six colored parts like petals. [Rare.]

Hexapetaloideæ (hek-sa-pet-a-loi′dē-ē), n. pl. [NL., as hexapetaloid + -eæ.] A division of petaloid monocotyledonous plants, proposed by Lindley in 1830, in which the number of petals or lobes of the perianth is six.

hexapetalous (hek-sa-pet′a-lus), a. [< Gr. ἕξ, = E. six, + πέταλον, a leaf (in mod. bot. a petal).] In bot., having six petals or flower-leaves.

hexaphyllous (hek-sa-fil′us), a. [< Gr. ἕξ, = E. six, + φύλλον, a leaf.] In bot., having six leaves.

Hexapla (hek′sa-plä), n. [Gr. τὰ ἑξαπλᾶ, neut. pl. of ἑξαπλόος, contr. ἑξαπλοῦς, sixfold, < ἕξ, = E. six, + -πλοος = L. -plus, akin to E. -fold, q. v.] An edition of the Bible in six versions. The name is especially given to a collection of texts of the Old Testament collated by Origen. It contained in six parallel columns the Hebrew text in Hebrew characters and in Greek characters, the Septuagint with critical emendations, and versions by Symmachus, Aquila, and Theodotion. There were also fragments of several other versions.

hexaplar (hek′sa-plär), a. [< Hexapla + -ar.] Sextuple; containing six columns; specifically (with a capital initial letter), of or pertaining to the Hexapla.

hexaplaric (hek-sa-plar′ik), a. [< hexaplar + -ic.] Same as hexaplar.

The old unrevised text [of the Septuagint], as it existed before Origen, has been usually called . . . the Vulgate; that of Origen, the Hexaplaric.
T. H. Horne, Introd. to Study of Holy Script., II. 62.

hexaplex (hek′sa-pleks), a. [< Gr. ἕξ, = L. sex = E. six, + L. -plex, as in duplex, etc.: see duplex. The proper form from the Gr. would be hexaple*.] Sixfold; sextuple. [Rare.]

hexapod (hek′sa-pod), a. and n. [< NL. hexapus (-pod-), < Gr. ἑξάπους (-ποδ-), having six feet (used with ref. to meter: see hexapody), < ἕξ, = E. six, + πούς (ποδ-) = E. foot.] I. a. Having six feet, as any adult true insect; specifically, pertaining to or having the characters of the Hexapoda; hexapodous.

II. n. One of the Hexapoda; a true six-footed insect.

Also hexapode, hexapodan.

Hexapoda (hek-sap′ō-dä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of hexapus (-pod-): see hexapod.] 1. The true insects; the arthropods which have six feet. Probably more than three fourths of the animal kingdom belong to this group. They form the class Insecta (which see), having three pairs of legs when adult, distinct head, thorax, and abdomen, two antennæ, tracheal respiration, and distinction of sex.

In all [Hexapoda] there are never more nor less than six legs, but the forelegs are sometimes rudimentary. The leg consists of five parts, coxa, trochanter, femur, tibia, and tarsus. Pascoe, Zoöl. Class., p. 103.

2. A division of butterflies containing those which have all six legs fitted for walking: opposed to Tetrapoda.

hexapodan (hek-sap′ō-dan), a. and n. Same as hexapod.

hexapode (hek′sa-pōd), a. and n. Same as hexapod. This is the common orthography in the older authors.

hexapodous (hek-sap′ō-dus), a. [As hexapod + -ous.] Having six feet; hexapod: as, a hexapodous insect.

hexapody (hek-sap′ō-di), n. [< Gr. *ἑξαποδία, a hexapody, < ἑξάπους, having six feet: see hexapod. Cf. dipody.] In pros., a group, series, or verse consisting of six feet. According to the principles of classical metrics, only a trochaic, iambic, or logaœdic hexapody can form a single series or colon, a succession of feet of other classes, as of dactyls, anapests, Cretics, Ionics, etc., being divisible into more than one colon. A trochaic or iambic hexapody is a trimeter. A hexapody of feet of other classes, united to form a single period or line, is a hexameter. See hexameter.

hexaprostyle (hek′sa-prō-stīl), a. [< Gr. ἕξ, = E. six, + πρόστυλος, with pillars in front: see prostyle. Cf. hexastyle.] In arch., having a portico of six columns in front: said of a building. [Rare.]

hexapsalmus, hexapsalmos (hek-sap-sal′mus, -mos), n. [LGr. ἑξάψαλμος, consisting of six psalms, < Gr. ἕξ, = E. six, + ψαλμός, a song sung to the harp, a psalm: see psalm.] In the Gr. Ch., a group of six invariable psalms (Ps. iii., xxxviii., lxiii., lxxxviii., ciii., cxliii., according to the numbering in English Bibles) said daily at lauds (orthron), in the earlier part of that office.

hexapterous (hek-sap′te-rus), a. [< Gr. ἕξ, = E. six, + πτερόν, a wing.] Having six wings or wing-like parts, as an animal or a plant.

hexasemic (hek-sa-sē′mik), a. [< LL. hexasemus, < Gr. ἑξάσημος, having six moræ, < ἕξ, = E. six, + σῆμα, a sign, mark, σημεῖον, a sign, mark, unit of time, mora; cf. disemic.] In anc. pros.: (a) Containing or amounting to six semeia or units of time; having or constituting a magnitude of six moræ or normal shorts: as, a hexasemic foot or dipody; hexasemic magnitude. (b) Consisting of or comprising feet of six semeia or times: as, the hexasemic class or epiploce.

hexastemonous (hek-sa-stem′ō-nus), a. [< Gr. ἕξ, = E. six, + στήμων, warp, taken as 'stamen': see stamen.] In bot., having six stamens.

hexaster (hek-sas′tėr), n. [NL., < Gr. ἕξ, = E. six, + ἀστήρ = E. star: see aster[1] and star.] In sponges, a star or stellate spicule with six generally equal rays. Varieties of the hexaster, according to the character of the ends of the rays, are known as the oxyhexaster, discohexaster, graphiohexaster, floricome, and plumicome.

Hexasterophora (hek-sas-te-rof′ō-rą), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of hexasterophorus: see hexasterophorous.] A tribe of silicious sponges containing the glass-sponges. See Hexactinellida.

hexasterophorous (hek-sas-te-rof′ō-rus), a. [< NL. hexasterophorus, < hexaster + L. ferre = E. bear[1].] Provided with hexasters; specifically, pertaining to the Hexasterophora, or having their characters.

hexastich (hek′sa-stik), n. [Also hexastichon (q. v.); formerly hexastick; < L. hexastichus, < Gr. ἑξάστιχος, of six rows, lines, or verses, < ἕξ, = E. six, + στίχος, row, line, verse.] In pros., a strophe, stanza, or poem consisting of six lines.

Dryden . . . furnished Tonson with a well-known hexastick, which has ever since generally accompanied the engraved portraits of Milton. Malone, Dryden.

hexastichon (hek-sas′ti-kon), n. [< Gr. ἑξάστιχον, neut. of ἑξάστιχος, of six lines: see hexastich.] Same as hexastich.

Julius Cæsar Scaliger hath written this hexastichon in praise of Paris. Coryat, Crudities, I. 27.

hexastichous (hek-sas′ti-kus), a. [< Gr. ἑξάστιχος, of six rows: see hexastich.] In bot., having the parts arranged in six vertical ranks or rows.

hexastylar (hek′sa-stī-lär), a. [< hexastyle + -ar[3].] In arch., having six columns in front.

hexastyle (hek′sa-stīl), a. [< L. hexastylus, < Gr. ἑξάστυλος, with six columns in front, < ἕξ, = E. six, + στῦλος, column: see style[2].] In arch., having six columns: said of a portico or a temple having that number of columns in the front. The epithet implies nothing as to the presence or absence of other columns on the sides of the edifice, or at its opposite end, or within the portico. These characteristics must be expressed, in the description of a building, by the adjunction of other epithets or terms. Thus, the Roman temple called the Maison Carrée, at Nîmes, is a prostyle hexastyle pseudo-peripteros; the Theseum at Athens is an amphiprostyle hexastyle peripteral temple, with pronaos and opisthodomos or epinaos, each with two columns in antis.

Hexastyle Front of the ancient Roman temple called the Maison Carrée, at Nîmes, France.

hexasyllabic (hek″sa-si-lab′ik), a. [< LL. hexasyllabus, < Gr. ἑξασύλλαβος, of six syllables, < ἕξ, = E. six, + συλλαβή, syllable: see syllable.] Containing or consisting of six syllables: as, irreconcilable is a hexasyllabic word; the hexasyllabic form of a choriambus (⏑ ⏑ ⏑ ⏑ ⏑ ⏑ for – ⏑ ⏑ –).

hexatetrahedron (hek-sa-tet-ra-hē′drŏn), n.; pl. hexatetrahedra (-drä). [< Gr. ἕξ, = E. six, + E. tetrahedron, q. v.] In crystal., a solid bounded by twenty-four scalene triangles; the inclined hemihedral form of the hexoctahedron. The diamond sometimes has this form.

Hexateuch (hek′sa-tūk), n. [< Gr. ἕξ, = E. six, + τεῦχος, a tool, implement, later also a book. Cf. Pentateuch, Heptateuch.] The first six books of the Old Testament. The sixth book, Joshua, relating the final settlement of the Jews in the promised land, is a continuation of the Pentateuch, and apparently forms with it a complete work, homogeneous in both style and purpose.

Having relegated the whole of the Hexateuch into a late period, Prof. Slade naturally finds no reliable historical record before the days of the Judges.
The Independent, Nov. 1, 1883.

Hexateuchal (hek′sa-tū-kal), a. [< Hexateuch + -al.] Of or pertaining to the Hexateuch.

hexatomic (hek-sa-tom′ik), a. [< Gr. ἕξ, = E. six, + ἄτομος, an atom.] In chem., consisting of six atoms: also applied to atoms which are hexavalent and to alcohols or other compounds having six replaceable hydrogen atoms.

hexavalent (hek-sav′a-lent), a. [< Gr. ἕξ, = E. six, + L. valen(t-)s, ppr. of valere, have power: see valid.] In chem., having the same saturating or combining power as six hydrogen atoms, or a valence of six.

hexaxon (hek-sak′son), a. [< Gr. ἕξ, = E. six, + ἄξων, an axle: see *ax*², *axe*², and axle.] Having six axes of growth, as a sponge-spicule.

hexicology (hek-si-kol′ō-ji), n. An erroneous form for hexiology.

hexiological (hek″si-ō-loj′i-kal), a. [< hexiology + -ic-al.] Pertaining to hexiology.

hexiology (hek-si-ol′ō-ji), n. [< Gr. ἕξις, a state or habit (< ἔχειν, have, hold; intr., be in a given state or condition: see hectic), + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] The history of the development and behavior of living beings as affected by their environment. This term was originally proposed by Mivart in the erroneous form hexicology.

hexiradiate (hek-si-rā′di-āt), a. [Irreg. < Gr. ἕξ, = L. sex = E. six, + L. radiatus, rayed: see radiate, a.] Having six rays, as the spicules of a glass-sponge; sexradiate.

Hence the group is distinguished as hexiradiate.
W. B. Carpenter, Micros., § 511.

hexoctahedron (hek-sok-ta-hē′drŏn), n. [< Gr. ἕξ, = E. six, + E. octahedron, q. v.] A crystalline form belonging to the isometric system and contained under forty-eight equal triangular faces. Also called adamantoid, because it is a common form of the diamond. Also hexakisoctahedron.

Hexoctahedron.

hext†, a. superl. [ME. hexte, hecst, etc., < AS. hēhsta, superl. of hēah, high: see high. Cf. next, superl. of nigh.] Highest.

Than he glode thurgh the grenes & the gray thornes,
To the hed of the hole on the hext gre [step].
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 13504.

The first apple and the hext
Which groweth vnto you next.
Isle of Ladies, l. 345.

When bale is hext, Boot is next. Old proverb.

hexyl (hek′sil), n. [< Gr. ἕξ, = E. six, + -yl.] The hypothetical radical (C_6H_{13}) of the sixth member of the monacid series of alcohols.

hey[1] (hā), interj. [Also hay; < ME. hey, hay = D. hei = G. hei = Dan. Sw. hej, interj. Cf. heigh, ha[1], ho[1].] An exclamation expressing pleasure, surprise, etc.: also used as a call to attract attention and as an interrogative.

Hey, Johny Coup, are ye waking yet?
Ritson, Scottish Songs.

Well, and you were astonished at her beauty, hey?
Sheridan, The Duenna, ii. 3.

Bachelor Bluff, Bachelor Bluff,
Hey for a heart that's rugged and tough!
Old song, in Scott's Chronicles of the Canongate, xx.

hey[2]†, a. and adv. An obsolete form of high. Chaucer.

hey[3]†, v. and n. An obsolete form of hie. Chaucer.

hey[4], n. An obsolete or rare form of hay[2].

heyday[1] (hā′dā), interj. [Formerly heyda, accom. of D. heidaar = G. heida = Dan. heida, hey there, ho there: see hey[1] and there.] An exclamation of cheerfulness, surprise, wonder, etc.

Hey-da! what Hans Flutterkin is this? what Dutchman doe's build or frame castles in the aire?
B. Jonson, Masque of Augurs.

Hey day! what's the matter now!
Sheridan, School for Scandal, v. 3.

heyday[2] (hā′dā), n. [Confused with heyday[1]; prop. high-day, q. v.] Highest vigor; full strength; acme.

At your age,
The hey-day in the blood is tame, it's humble,
And waits upon the judgment.
Shak., Hamlet, iii. 4.

A merry peal puts my spirits quite in a hey-day.
Burgoyne, Lord of the Manor, i. 1.

The natural association of the sentiment of love with the heyday of the blood seems to require that in order to portray it in vivid tints . . . one must not be too old.
Emerson, Love.

The heyday of life is over with him, but his old age is sunny and chirping. Longfellow, Hyperion, iv. 2.

heyday-guise†, n. [Also hydaygies, etc.] A form of heydeguise, simulating heyday.

By wells and rills, in meadowes greene,
We nightly dance our hey-day guise.
Robin Good-fellow (Percy's Reliques, p. 387).

heydeguise†, n. [Also heydeguize, a mistaken spelling of haydeguyes, etc., pl. of haydeguy, q. v., simulating guise (as if in allusion to guise-dancers or mummers).] Same as haydeguy.

Brave Don, cast your eyes
On our gipsy fashions;
In our antic hey-de-guize
We go beyond all nations.
Middleton, Spanish Gypsy, iv. 1.

heydeguy†, n. Same as haydeguy.

But frendly Faeries, met with many Graces, . . .
And light-foote Nymphes can chace the lingering Night
With Heydeguyes and trimly trodden traces.
Spenser, Shep. Cal., June.

heyet†, v. and n. An obsolete variant of hie. Chaucer.

heyght†, a. and adv. An obsolete variant of high. Chaucer.

hey-go-mad (hā′gō-mad). [< hey[1] + go + mad.] A colloquial expression implying an intense or extreme degree, boundlessness, absence of restraint, or the like. [Eng.]

Away they go, cluttering like hey-go-mad.
Sterne, Tristram Shandy, i. 2.

'Tisn't Mr. Bounderby, 'tis his wife; yo'r not fearfo' o' her; yo was hey-go-mad about her an hour sin.
Dickens, Hard Times, xxii.

hey-passt (hā′pàs′). [< hey, interj., + pass, impv.] An interjectional expression used by jugglers during the performance of their feats, and equivalent to "Presto, change!"

Ha' you forgotten me? you think to carry it away with your hey-passe and repasse. Marlowe, Faustus, v. 1.

You wanted but Hey-passe to have made your transition like a mysticall man of Sturbridge. But for all your sleight of hand, our just exceptions against liturgy are not vanished. Milton, On Def. of Humb. Remonst.

heyront, n. An obsolete form of heron.

Hey's ligament. See ligament.

heysoge†, heysugge†, n. Obsolete forms of haysuck.

Hg. In chem., the symbol for mercury (New Latin hydrargyrum).

H. H. An abbreviation of (a) His Holiness—that is, the Pope—or of (b) His (or Her) Highness.

hhd. A contraction of hogshead.

hi (hī), interj. [Also hy; a mere exclamation, like hey[1], heigh, ha[1], etc.] An exclamation of surprise, admiration, etc.: often used ironically and in derision.

Ready money worth twelve per cent. a month, too, and he with twelve banks in monte and faro. Hi, hi, hi!
J. W. Palmer, New and Old, p. 172.

Hiantes (hī-an′tēz), n. pl. [NL., pl. of L. hian(t-)s, ppr. of hiare, gape: see hiatus.] 1. Same as Fissirostres. A. E. Brehm.—2. In Sundevall's classification of birds, a synonym of Ampligulares.

hiation† (hī-ā′shon), n. [< L. as if hiatio(n-)*, < hiare, pp. hiatus, gape: see hiatus.] The act of gaping.

The continual hiation or holding open of its [the chameleon's] mouth. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iii. 21.

hiatus (hī-ā′tus), n.; pl. hiatuses, hiatus (-tus-ez, -tus). [L., a gap, aperture, chasm, hiatus, < hiare, pp. hiatus, gape, yawn, allied to E. yawn, q. v.] 1. An opening; an aperture; a gap; a chasm.

Those hiatuses are at the bottom of the sea, whereby the abyss below opens into and communicates with it.
Woodward.

2. In anat., a foramen.—3. In gram. and pros., the coming together of two vowels without intervening consonant in successive words or syllables of one word.—4. A space from which something requisite to completeness is absent, as a missing link in a genealogy, an interval of unknown history, a lost or erased part of a manuscript, etc.; a lacuna; a break.

I shall endeavour to fill this hiatus by producing an almost entire chronologic series of paintings from the time to Hen. VII., when Mr. Vertue's notes recommence.
Walpole, Anecdotes of Painting, I. ii.

A lamentable hiatus occurs in his greatest work.
Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., ii. 2.

Even the hiatus between the Vertebrata and the Invertebrata is partly, if not wholly, bridged over.
Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 50.

5. Specifically, in logic, a fault of demonstration, consisting in the omission to prove some premise made use of, and not self-evident or admitted.—Hiatus Fallopii, the opening of Fallopius, an aperture in the petrous portion of the temporal bone for the passage of the large superficial petrosal nerve.—Hiatus trapezii, the elongated lozenge-shaped interval between the fore border of the acromiotrapezius muscle and the margins of the clavotrapezius muscle and the levator claviculæ.

Hibbertia (hi-bèr′ti-ä), n. [NL. (Andrews, 1797), named after George Hibbert.] A genus of dicotyledonous choripetalous plants, belonging to the family Dilleniaceæ and the tribe Hibbertieæ. They are small heath-like shrubs with slender trailing or climbing stems, and showy yellow flowers in solitary terminal or axillary clusters. The flowers, which are strong-scented, have 5 thick sepals, Flowering Branch of Hibbertia volubilis.

5 fugacious petals, numerous stamens, and 1 to 15 carpels, each containing one or more shining seeds. About 100 species are known, natives of Australia and New Caledonia. They are the Australian rock-roses, and a number of species are cultivated for their showy flowers. Beautifully preserved impressions of the leaves of three species of this genus have been described by Conwentz from fragments of amber from the celebrated amber-beds of northern Prussia.

Hibbertieæ (hib-èr-tī′ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Hibbertia + -eæ.] A tribe of dicotyledonous choripetalous plants, of the family Dilleniaceæ, proposed by Reichenbach in 1828, and typified by the genus Hibbertia. It differs from the other tribes of the Dilleniaceæ by having the apex of the filaments never or rarely dilated, by the anthers being often oblong, and by having small one-nerved or rarely reticulate-nerved leaves.

hibernacle (hī′bèr-nā-kl), n. [= F. hibernacle, the bud in which the embryo of a plant is inclosed, = Sp. invernáculo, a greenhouse, < L. hibernaculum, winter residence, pl. hibernacula, winter tents, winter quarters, < hibernare, pass the winter: see hibernate.] 1. That which serves for shelter or protection in winter; winter quarters.—2. In hort., a covering or protection for young buds during winter.—3. Same as hibernaculum, 2.

hibernaculum (hī-bėr-nak′ū-lum), n.; pl. hibernacula (-lă). [L.: see hibernacle.] 1. Same as hibernacle, 1.

As a neighbour was lately ploughing in a dry chalky field far removed from any water, he turned out a water-rat that was curiously laid up in an hybernaculum artificially formed of grass and leaves.
Gilbert White, Nat. Hist. of Selborne, xxviii.

There sat a frog . . . in a little excavation in the surface of the leaf-mould. As it sat there, the top of its back was level with the surface of the ground. This, then, was its hibernaculum; here it was prepared to pass the winter.
J. Burroughs, Signs and Seasons, p. 16.

2. In bot., any part of a plant which protects an embryonic organ during the winter, as a bud or bulb. Also hibernacle. [Now rare.]—3. In zoöl.: (a) One of the winter buds of a polyzoan; an arrested and encysted polyzoön-bud capable of surviving the winter and germinating in the following spring.

The only approach to a differentiation of the polypides in Paludicella is in the arrest of growth of some of the buds of a colony in autumn, which, instead of advancing to maturity, become conical and invested with a dark-colored cuticle. They are termed hybernacula.
E. R. Lankester, Encyc. Brit., XIX. 433.

(b) The false opercule or pseudoperculum of a snail.

It is no uncommon thing to find, during the warm season, individuals [snails] to the exterior of whose shells there adhere one or more (often a great number) of . . . hybernacula, cast off by their fellows on emerging from the dormant state.
Huxley and Martin, Elementary Biology, p. 273.

hibernal (hī-bėr′năl), a. [= F. hibernal, hivernal = Sp. Pg. invernal, < L. hibernalis, < hibernus, of winter: see hibernate.] Belonging or relating to winter; wintry.

hibernate (hī′bėr-nāt), v. i.; pret. and pp. hibernated, ppr. hibernating. [Formerly also written hybernate; < L. hibernatus, pp. of hibernare (> It. invernare, vernare = Sp. Pg. invernar = Pr. ivernar = F. hiverner), pass the winter, < hibernus, of or belonging to winter, wintry (> It. inverno, verno = Sp. invierno = Pg. inverno = Pr. ivern = F. hiver, winter), prob. orig. hīmernus* (= Gr. χειμερινός, of or belonging to winter, wintry), < hiems, winter: see hiems.] 1. To winter; pass the season of winter in close quarters or in seclusion, and generally in a torpid condition, as some animals.

Other causes than cold may induce an animal to hibernate; as when deprived of the supply of food gathered during the previous season.
Science, III. 538.

2. Figuratively, to remain in seclusion; pass the time torpidly or apathetically.

I want to hibernate for three months, and not see a soul, except you with my meals.
T. Winthrop, Cecil Dreeme, vi.

hibernation (hī-bėr-nā′shọn), n. [Formerly also hybernation; = F. hibernation, hivernation, < L. as if hibernatio*(n-), < hibernare, hibernate: see hibernate, v.] The act or period of hibernating.

The several plants that were to pass their hybernation in the green-house.
Evelyn, Calendarium Hortense, A New Conservatory.

Naturalists have not sufficiently discriminated between torpidity and hybernation.
E. Blyth, Note on Gilbert White's Nat. Hist. of Selborne, xxxviii.

Hibernian (hī-bėr′ni-ạn), a. and n. [< L. Hibernia, sometimes written Iverna, Juverna, also Ierna, Ierne, Gr. Ἰουερνία, Ἰέρνη, regarded as various forms of the name which appears later as Ir. Erin, gen. Erinn, Erin, Ireland.] I. a. Of or pertaining to Hibernia, now Ireland, or to its inhabitants; characteristic of Ireland or the Irish; Irish.

Hibernian politics, O Swift! thy fate.
Pope, Dunciad, iii. 331.

Hibernian embroidery, an embroidery done in buttonhole-stitch and satin-stitch with colored silk, floss, etc.
Dict. of Needlework.

II. n. A native or an inhabitant of Ireland; a member of the Irish race.

Hibernianism (hī-bėr′ni-an-izm), n. [< Hibernian + -ism.] Same as Hibernicism.

Hibernicism (hī-bėr′ni-sizm), n. [< Hibernia + -ic + -ism.] An idiom or a mode of speech peculiar to the Irish; especially, an Irish bull.

Though it is not true that here "Ireland stops the way," a most choice Hibernicism does.
Athenæum, March 10, 1888, p. 311.

Hibisceæ (hī-bis′ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Hibiscus + -ceæ.] A tribe of plants of the family Malvaceæ, typified by the genus Hibiscus. It is characterized by having the column of stamens anther-bearing for a considerable part of its length, naked and truncate or 5-toothed at the apex, and a mostly 5-celled loculicidal pod.

Hibiscus (hī-bis′kus), n. [NL., < L. hibiscus, also hibiscum, < Gr. ἰβίσκος, mallow.] 1. A large genus of dicotyledonous choripetalous plants (herbs, shrubs, or trees), of the family Malvaceæ, and the type of the tribe Hibisceæ. They are characterized by having a 5-cleft calyx, supplemented by 3 to 5 narrow bracts; by the long column of stamens, which is frequently anther-bearing for much of its length; and by the 5-valved loculicidal pod, with numerous seeds. About 150 species are known, mostly from tropical countries, but a few are natives of temperate regions. The species are remarkable for abounding in mucilage and for the tenacity of the fiber of their bark, whence several are employed for many economical purposes in their native countries. The petals of H. Rosa-Sinensis (a plant with large, handsome, usually red flowers, frequent in greenhouses) are astringent, and are used in China as a black dye for the hair and eyes. The handsome flowering shrub known in gardens as Althæa Frutex, or rose of Sharon, is a species of Hibiscus (H. Syriacus). The root of H. Manihot yields a mucilage used as size and to give a proper consistence to paper. The leaves of H. cannabinus are edible, and an oil is extracted from its seeds; it is cultivated in India for its fiber, being known as Indian hemp. The plants of this genus are commonly known as rose-mallows. The great rose-mallow of the Carolina coast is H. coccineus. H. Moscheutos, of the United States, with rose-colored or white flowers 6 inches in diameter, is the swamp rose-mallow. H. Trionum, of Europe, with a sulphur-yellow corolla, is the bladder-ketmia or flower-of-an-hour. Abelmoschus esculentus (Hibiscus esculentus), of tropical regions, furnishes the okra or gumbo. Abelmoschus splendens (Hibiscus splendens), a native of Queensland and New South Wales, is the hollyhock-tree. H. Sabdariffa, of tropical Asia and Africa, yields the rosella-fiber.

Flowering Branch of Hibiscus Moscheutos.
a, flower cut longitudinally; b, stamen; c, fruit; d, embryo.

2. [l. c.] A plant of this genus.

hieracosphinx (hī-ẹ-rā′kọ̄-sfingks), n. [< Gr. ἱέραξ, a hawk, + σφίγξ, sphinx.] The hawk-headed sphinx of Egypt, as distinguished from the androsphinx and criosphinx.

hiera-picra (hī″ẹ-rā-pik′rā), n. [= F. hièrepière = Pg. hierapiera (cf. It. jera) = Sp. geropigia, jeropigia, and E. accom. hickery-pickery, q. v., < ML. hiera-picra, < Gr. ἱερά, a name for many medicines in the Greek pharmacopœia (fem. of ἱερός, sacred), + πικρά, fem. of πικρός, sharp, pungent, bitter.] A warm cathartic composed of aloes and canella made into a powder, with honey. Popularly called hickery-pickery.

hierarch (hī′ẹ-rärk), n. [= F. hiérarque = Sp. hierarca, gerarca = Pg. hierarcha = It. gerarca, < ML. hierarcha, < Gr. ἱεράρχης, a steward or president of sacred rites, a high priest, < ἱερός, sacred (see hiero-), + ἄρχος, a leader, ruler, < ἄρχειν, rule.] 1. One who rules or has authority in sacred things.

> Angels, by imperial summons call'd, . . .
> Forthwith, from all the ends of heaven, appear'd,
> Under their hierarchs in orders bright.
> Milton, P. L., v. 587.

2. Specifically, in Gr. antiq., one of a body of officials or minor priests attached to some temples, as the sanctuary of Amphiaraus at Oropus, who had charge of the offerings of all kinds consecrated to the god by his votaries, and of the inscribing and setting up of the records relating to them.

hierarchal (hī′ẹ-rär-kạl), a. [< hierarch + -al.] Of or pertaining to a hierarch or a hierarchy.

> Now ere dim night had disincumber'd heaven,
> The great hierarchal standard was to move.
> Milton, P. L., v. 701.

hierarchic (hī-ẹ-rär′kik), a. [= F. hiérarchique = Sp. gerárquico = Pg. jerarchico = It. gerarchico, jerarchico (cf. D. G. hierarchisch = Dan. Sw. hierarkisk), < Gr. ἱεραρχικός, < ἱεραρχία, hierarchy: see hierarchy.] Of or pertaining to a hierarchy.

hierarchical (hī-ẹ-rär′ki-kạl), a. [< hierarchic + -al.] Same as hierarchic.

> They declared "That that hierarchical government was evil and justly offensive, and burdensome to the kingdom." Clarendon, Civil War, II. 69.

> The Ignatian and pseudo-Clementine bishops, who are set up as living oracles and hierarchical idols. Schaff, Hist. Christ. Church, I. § 99.

Hierarchical classification. See classification.

hierarchically (hī-ẹ-rär′ki-kạl-i), adv. In a hierarchic manner; in conformity to ecclesiastical authority, influence, or interests; by a system of government resembling that of the church.

> The society of this country [England] is hierarchically constituted. Gladstone, Gleanings, I. 44.

> The control of all elective offices by a sect hierarchically organized. The American, XIII. 291.

hierarchism (hī′ẹ-rär-kizm), n. [< hierarch + -ism.] Hierarchical principles or power; hierarchal character or influence; belief in or devotion to hierarchical rule.

> After a few centuries, the more dominant hierarchism of the West is manifest in the oppugnancy between Greek and Latin church architecture. Milman, Latin Christianity, xiv. 7.

hierarchy (hī′ẹ-rär-ki), n.; pl. hierarchies (-kiz). [Early mod. E. yerarchy (Skelton), late ME. gerarchie, etc., < OF. gerarchie, F. hiérarchie = Pr. ierarchia, gerarchia = Sp. gerarquía = Pg. jerarchia = It. gerarchia, jerarchia = D. hierarchij = G. hierarchie = Dan. Sw. hierarki, < ML. hierarchia, < Gr. ἱεραρχία, the power or rule of a hierarch, < ἱεράρχης, hierarch: see hierarch.] 1. The power or dominion of a hierarch; hallowed or consecrated authority in what concerns religious order or government.

> Consider what I have written from regard for the church established under the hierarchy of bishops. Swift.

2. Government by ecclesiastical rulers; an ecclesiastical or priestly form of government.—3. An order of holy beings regarded as employed in divine government.

> That Musike, with his heauenly harmonie,
> Do not allure a heauenly mind from heauen,
> Nor set mens thoughts in worldly melodie,
> Til heauenly Hierarchies be quite forgot.
> Gascoigne, Steele Glas (ed. Arber), p. 77.

> Whom the supreme King
> Exalted to such power, and gave to rule,
> Each in his hierarchy, the orders bright.
> Milton, P. L., i. 735.

4. A body of persons organized in ranks and orders for the exercise of rule over sacred things; hence, an organized body of ecclesiastics intrusted with government of either church or state; also, a similarly organized body of officials in other systems of government: as, the Roman Catholic hierarchy.

> If any one shall say that there is not in the Catholic Church a hierarchy established by the divine ordination, consisting of bishops, presbyters, and ministers, let him be anathema. Council of Trent (trans.), xxiii. 6.

> We may regard . . . the clergy or clerical estate as a body completely organised, with a minutely constituted and regulated hierarchy. Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 376.

5. In science, a series of successive terms of different rank. The terms kingdom, order, suborder, family, genus, and species constitute a hierarchy in zoölogy.

> As we ascend in the hierarchy of the organisms, we meet with . . . an increasing differentiation of parts. H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., § 53.

Celestial hierarchy, the collective body of angels, regarded as forming a gradation of nine orders, differing in power and glory. The general belief in the church that the number of angelic orders is nine, and the assignment of a definite name and rank to each order, date from the sixth century. The first to fix the number, names, and sequence of these orders was the writer calling himself Dionysius the Areopagite, who seems to have lived about A. D. 500. The nine orders, beginning with the highest, are arranged, as follows, in three triads: I. 1, seraphim; 2, cherubim; 3, thrones. II. 4, dominations or dominions (Κυριότητες); 5, virtues (Δυνάμεις, the singular translated 'might' in the authorized version, Eph. i. 21); 6, powers (Ἐξουσίαι). III. 7, principalities or princedoms (Ἀρχαί); 8, archangels; 9, angels.

hieratic (hī-ẹ-rat′ik), a. [= F. hiératique, < L. hieraticus, < Gr. ἱερατικός, of or for the priest's office, sacerdotal, also devoted to sacred uses, < ἱερός, sacred: see hierarch.] 1. Pertaining to priests or to the priesthood; priestly; sacerdotal. [Rare.]

> It [education in the East] was administered by the hieratic class. This was due to the fact that the priests were the only men of learning. Payne's Compayre's Hist. of Pedagogy, p. 15.

2. Of sacred or priestly origin; due to or derived from religious use or influence: specifically used of a kind of ancient Egyptian letters or writing, and of certain styles in art. Hieratic writing consists of abridged forms of hieroglyphics adopted by the Egyptian priests for convenience and expedition in their records. Hieratic art is that which adheres to types or methods fixed and, as it were, consecrated by religious tradition, as in some Egyptian art, and in much modern Greek or Byzantine religious painting, which is still medieval in character.

> Before the year 1840 our knowledge of archaic sculpture was almost limited to a few specimens in Italian museums, most of which are rather hieratic than archaic; that is to say, conventional reproductions of the archaic, executed at a much later period. C. T. Newton, Art and Archæol., p. 74.

hieratical (hī-ẹ-rat′i-kạl), a. [< hieratic + -al.] Same as hieratic.

Hierax (hī′ẹ-raks), n. [NL., orig. Ierax (Vigors, 1824), < Gr. ἱέραξ, a hawk, falcon. See gerfalcon.] A genus of pygmy falcons or finch-falcons of Asia, containing some of the smallest birds of prey, as H. cœrulescens. Microhierax is a synonym. See Bengal falcon, under falcon.

hierdet, n. A Middle English form of herd[2]. Chaucer.

hierdesst, n. A Middle English form of herdess. Chaucer.

hiero-. [< L. hiero-, < Gr. ἱερο-, combining form of ἱερός, sacred, holy, divine, mighty, glorious, etc., prob. = Skt. ishira, vigorous, fresh, blooming.] An element in many compounds of Greek origin, meaning 'sacred, holy, divine.'

Hierochloë, Hierochloa (hī-ẹ-rok′lọ̄-ē, -ạ̈), n. [NL., < Gr. ἱερός, sacred, holy, + χλόη, young green corn or grass, verdure.] A name given by Robert Brown in 1810 to Savastana, a genus of odoriferous grasses. The spikelets bear three flowers, each having two palets; the two lower flowers are staminate only (having three stamens), sessile, and often awned; the uppermost one is perfect, has a short pedicel, two stamens, and no awns; and the glume equals or exceeds the spikelet. There are about 8 species. The name holy-grass, as well as the generic name, alludes to the practice in some parts of northern Europe of strewing the common species, S. odorata (the northern holy-grass), before the doors of churches on festival days. It is distributed through northern Europe, Asia, and North America. Also called vanilla- or seneca-grass.

Holy-grass (Savastana odorata).
a, spikelet.

hierocracy (hī-ẹ-rok′ra-si), n.; pl. hierocracies (-siz). [< Gr. ἱερός, sacred, holy, + -κρατία, < κρατεῖν, rule.] 1. Government by or dominant influence of ecclesiastics; hierarchy. Jefferson. [Rare.]—2. The sacerdotal class; priests collectively. [Rare.]

The temple was a sort of priestly citadel, the fortress as well as the sanctuary of the hierocracy.
Encyc. Brit., XXIII. 167.

hierodule (hī′ē-rō-dūl), n. [< Gr. ἱερός, sacred, holy, + δοῦλος, a bondman, slave.] In Gr. antiq., a slave dedicated to the service of a divinity; a temple servant or attendant. Large numbers of such slaves were attached to some foundations, and were either employed about the sanctuary or let out for hire for the profit of the god.

Hierofalco (hī″ē-rō-fal′kō), n. [ML.: see gerfalcon.] A genus or subgenus of northern falcons; the gerfalcons.

hieroglyph (hī′ē-rō-glif), n. [= D. hieroglief = G. hieroglyphe = Dan. Sw. hieroglyf, < F. hiéroglyphe = Pg. jeroglypho; < Gr. ἱερός, sacred, + γλυφή, a carving: see hieroglyphic.] 1. The figure of any object, especially a familiar object, as an animal, tree, weapon, staff, etc., standing for a word, or a syllable, or a part of a syllable, or a single sound; a figure representing an idea, and intended to convey a meaning, thus forming part of a mode of written communication. The name was first applied to the engraved marks and symbols found on the monuments and other records of ancient Egypt. Of these, some signified directly the objects represented by them; others, conceptions suggested by those objects; others, ideas having names identical with or closely resembling the names of the objects represented; others, part of the sounds composing those names, or even only their initial sounds—these last being nearly a true alphabet, and used especially in writing proper names. The name, which had its origin in the idea that the sculptured symbols were exclusively sacerdotal, is now given to any writing of a similar character, as that of the ancient Mexicans, Peruvians, etc.

Hieroglyphs, from mummy-case in the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston, Massachusetts.

If all the hieroglyphs of the Egyptians had been A B C to you, still, if you did not know the anaglyph, you would know nothing of the true mysteries of the priest.
Bulwer, Caxtons, vii. 7.

This office is quite a different place from his quiet apartment in the third story of the Seminary, so very high and dry above the bustling world.
W. M. Baker, New Timothy, p. 149.

High and low, people of all conditions.

Besoughten hym of socour, hur Soueraine to bene,
To be Lorde of hur land, their lawes to keepe,
Thei to holden of hym, the hye and the lowe.
Alisaunder of Macedoine (E. E. T. S.), l. 406.

Yet reverence . . . doth make distinction
Of place 'tween high and low.
Shak., Cymbeline, iv. 2.

High and low, all made fun of him.
Thackeray, Vanity Fair, v.

High and mighty. (a) Exalted and powerful: formerly used in adulatory address to princes. (b) Arrogant; overbearing; demanding servile respect or submission.—High bailiff. (a) See bailiff. (b) In Vermont, an officer whose duty it is on occasion to serve process on the sheriff.—High boat, in sporting, the boat the occupants of which, in shooting, kill most game, or, in angling or fishing, take most fish.

High carte. See carte[2].—High caste. See caste[2], 1.—High celebration, in Anglican churches, a solemn celebration of the holy communion with the full adjuncts of ritual and music: opposed to low celebration.—High change, the season of greatest activity in the business of merchants on change or the exchange; the exchange itself at such a time.

I must confess I look upon high-change to be a great council, in which all considerable nations have their representatives. Addison, The Royal Exchange.

The Old Clothes Exchange, like other places known by the name—the Royal Exchange, for example—has its daily season of high Change.
H. Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 45.

High Church, the popular designation of a party in the Anglican Church. See High-churchman.—High color, constable, Council. See the nouns.—High Commission Court. See Court of High Commission, under court.—High Court of Admiralty. See admiralty.—High Court of Parliament. See parliament.—High dawn. See dawn.—High day, high noon, the time when the sun is in the meridian.—High Dutch. See Dutch.—Higher algebra, arithmetic, concept, criticism, geometry, mathematics, etc. See the nouns.—Highest genus. See genus.—High explosive, furnace, German. See the nouns.—High gravels. See gravel.—High jinks. (a) A merry old pastime in Scotland. In the usual manner of playing, a person was chosen by lot to sustain some fictitious character, or to repeat verses in a particular order, and if he failed he incurred certain forfeits.

The frolicsome company had begun to practise the ancient and now forgotten pastime of High Jinks.
Scott, Guy Mannering, xxxvi.

Hence—(b) Boisterous sport or jollity; romping games or play.

There was nothing but sport
And High Jinks going on night and day at "the court."
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, II. 313.

He found the eleven at high jinks after supper; Jack Raggles shouting comic songs, and performing feats of strength. T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, ii. 8.

(c) Tantrums; fits of ill humor. [Colloq.] (d) The throwing of dice to determine who shall empty the cup. Halliwell.—High license, light, etc. See the nouns.—High life, the style of living, manners, etc., in high or fashionable society; hence, collectively, the people composing such society.

They would talk of nothing but high life, and high-lived company, with other fashionable topics.
Goldsmith, Vicar, ix.

High living, rich or luxurious fare.—High mass. See mass[1].—High Mightiness, a title of respect sometimes used toward sovereigns, etc. The States General of the Netherlands were styled their High Mightinesses.

The patroon of Rensselaerwick had extended his usurpations along the river, beyond the limits granted him by their High Mightinesses. Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 180.

High milling, operation. See the nouns.—High place, in Scrip., an eminence selected for worship, usually for idolatrous rites; hence, the idols and instruments of such worship.

High priest, relief, school, etc. See the nouns.—High seas. (a) The open sea or ocean; the highway of waters. (b) In law: (1) As used to designate the area transactions within which are subject to cognizance in courts of admiralty, formerly, the waters of the ocean exterior to low-water mark, but now extended with the flow of the tide to high-water mark, returning with the ebb to low-water mark. (2) As used to designate the area which is not within the territorial jurisdiction of any nation, but the free highway of all nations, the waters of the ocean exterior to a line parallel to the general direction of the shore, and distant a marine league therefrom. The distance was fixed with reference to the fact that, at the time when it was fixed, it was the limit of the area of coast-waters which could be commanded by cannon on the shore. It is to be drawn with reference to headlands, so as to include in the territorial jurisdiction those inlets and arms of the sea over which the nation may justly claim and actually enforce its power. The application of the rule to bays and to arms of the sea bounding two countries often involves great difference of opinion. The great lakes are not deemed high seas.—High table, in the University of Oxford, the table at which the fellows and some other privileged persons dine.

Wine is not generally allowed in the public hall, except to the high table. De Quincey, Life and Manners (Oxford).

High tea, a tea at which meat is served: in distinction from an ordinary tea with bread, butter, cake, etc.

We did not return home till near nine, and so, instead of dining, all sat down to high tea.

Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 279.

high-backed (hī′bakt), a. Having a high back: as, a high-backed chair.

highbinder (hī′bīn″dėr), n. [Perhaps orig. high-bender*, and parallel to hell-bender: see high, a., 8, and bender, n., 4, 5. As with many slang terms, esp. names of rowdy gangs, the merit of the name consists in the absence of definite meaning. The word is recorded as in local use in New York City in 1806. It was known in Baltimore, San Francisco, and other cities about 1849. In San Francisco it was at first used in the original sense (def. 1), but later became attached exclusively to Chinese ruffians, the white rowdy acquiring the new name hoodlum.] 1. A bold, roystering rowdy; an insolent ruffian; one of a gang which commits outrages on persons or property "for fun." Highbinders, so called, were known in New York, Baltimore, and other cities before 1849. In that year and subsequently they became familiar in California, where at present the name is used only as in the next definition. 2. A member of a Chinese secret society, band, or gang, said to exist in California and other parts of the United States, associated for blackmailing purposes, and even for assassination, in the interest and pay of other societies or individuals.

high-blest (hī′blest′), a. Supremely happy. Milton, P. L., xi. 145. [Rare.]

high-blooded (hī′blud″ed), a. Of high birth; of noble lineage; of a fine strain, as an Arabian horse.

My high-blown pride
At length broke under me.
Shak., Hen. VIII., iii. 2.

high-born (hī′bôrn), a. [< ME. high-boren, hœh-iboren* = D. hooggeboren = G. hochgeboren = Dan. höjbaaren = Sw. högboren; as high + born.] Of high rank by birth; of noble birth or extraction.

I am too high-born to be propertied,
To be a secondary at control.
Shak., K. John, v. 2.

High-born Hoel's harp, or soft Llewellyn's lay.
Gray, The Bard, I. i. 14.

high-boy (hī′boi), n. 1†. An extreme Tory and High-churchman, supposed to favor Jacobitism. Davies.

I am amaz'd to find you in the interest of the High-boys, you that are a clothier! What, can you be for giving up trade to France, and starving poor weavers?
Mrs. Centlivre, Gotham Election.

2. A tall chest of drawers supported on legs from 18 inches to 2 feet high. Those on shorter legs are called low-boys. [New Eng.]

high-bred (hī′bred), a. 1. Bred in high life; having refined manners or breeding.

But you cannot learn too early this fact, that irony is to the high-bred what billingsgate is to the vulgar.
Bulwer, Kenelm Chillingly, i. 8.

The giant Harapha of Gath, his look Haughty, as is his pile high-built and proud.
Milton, S. A., l. 1069.

High-church (hī′chėrch′), a. Exalting the authority of the church; laying great stress on church authority and jurisdiction: used specifically of those in the Anglican Church who are known as High-churchmen, and of their principles. See High-churchman. [The term High-church first came into use to designate those who held to the independent authority of the spiritualty at the time James II. put the bishops in the Tower (1688) for refusing to read publicly the Declaration of Indulgence.]

High-churchism (hī′chėrch′izm), n. [< High-church + -ism.] The principles of High-churchmen

High-churchman (hī′chėrch′man), n. One of those members of the Anglican Church who maintain or attach especial importance to certain strict views of doctrine. The points upon which they chiefly insist are the following: (1) the necessity of apostolic succession, canonical jurisdiction, and conformity to the teachings of the undivided catholic church in order to constitute a true and lawful branch of the church; (2) the sacerdotal character of the Christian priesthood; (3) that grace is conferred in the sacraments or sacramental rites, including confirmation, absolution, etc., on all who receive them lawfully and without opposing a moral or spiritual obstacle. Many High-churchmen, believing that the maintenance of the catholic character and historical continuity of the Anglican Church involves the continuance or revival of ancient ritual, give ritual and ceremonies a prominent place in their teaching and practice. Those who go furthest in this direction are popularly called extreme High-churchmen and Ritualists.

high-cockalorum (hī′kok-a-lō′rum), n. [< high + cock[2], vaguely used with an unmeaning Latin-seeming termination.] A game in which one boy jumps on the back of another, crying "high-cockalorum."

Prisoner's base, rounders, high-cock-a-lorum, cricket, football, he was soon initiated into the delights of them all. T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, i. 3.

Thomson, Castle of Indolence, i. 34.

★high-flier (hī′flī″ėr), n. 1. A bird that flies to a great height; hence, one who is extravagant or goes to extremes in his aims, actions, or pretensions: sometimes applied in England to a genteel beggar.

I like your high-fliers; it is your plodders I detest. Disraeli, Coningsby, vi. 3.

2. One of certain geometrid moths: an English collectors' name. The ruddy high-flier is Ypsipetes ruberata; the July high-flier is Y. elutata.—Purple high-flier. Same as emperor, 3 (a) (2).

high-flown (hī′flōn), a. 1. Raised to a high pitch; elevated; elated.

This stiff-neck'd pride nor art nor force can bend,
Nor high-flown hopes to Reason's lure descend.
Sir J. Denham, Prudence.

We that are angry and pleas'd every half Hour, having nothing at all of all this high-flown Fury! Steele, Grief A-la-Mode, ii. 1.

2. Enthusiastic; extravagant; bombastic.

This fable is a high-flown hyperbole upon the miseries of marriage. Sir R. L'Estrange.

Sir Piercie Shafton found leisure to amuse the time in high-flown speeches and long anecdotes. Scott, Monastery, xxix.

high-flying (hī′flī″ing), a. Extravagant in conduct, aims, or pretensions; having lofty notions; going or carried to extremes.

That same exquisite obseruing of number and measure in words, and that high flying liberty of conceit proper to the Poet, did seeme to haue some dyuine force in it. Sir P. Sidney, Apol. for Poetrie.

Clip the wings
Of their high-flying arbitrary kings.
Dryden, tr. of Virgil's Georgics, iv. 161.

But the young man [Sheridan] was romantically magnanimous and highflying in his sense of honour. Mrs. Oliphant, Sheridan, p. 41.

highgate†, n. [< ME. heie gate: see high and gate[2].] A highway.

Then should many worthy spirits get up the highgate of preferment, and idle drones should not come nearer than the Dunstable highway of obscurity. Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 46.

highhole (hī′hōl), n. [A var. of highhoe, ult. of hickwall, etc., simulating high + hole[1], as if in ref. to its wood-pecking habits: see hickwall.] The golden-winged woodpecker or flicker, Colaptes auratus. [Local, U. S.]

A youth . . . once induced a high-hole to lay twenty-nine eggs, by robbing her of an egg each day. The Century, XXXII. 277.

high-hook (hī′hůk), n. Same as high-line.

high-keyed (hī′kēd), a. 1. High-strung; intent; eager.

She sat from Sunday to Sunday under Dr. Stern's preaching. With a high-keyed, acute mind, she could not help listening and thinking; and such thinking is unfortunate, to say the least. H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 215.

2. In music, at a high pitch.

highland (hī′land), n. and a. [Sc. hieland; = D. hoogland = G. hochland = Dan. höjland = Sw. högland; as high + land.] I. n. 1. An abrupt elevation of land; an elevated region or plateau: as, a jutting highland.—2. pl. An elevated region broken into hills and mountains: often used as a proper name: as, the Highlands of Scotland; the Hudson Highlands; the highlands of Abyssinia.

Farewell to the Highlands, farewell to the North,
The birth-place of valour, the country of worth.
Burns, My Heart's in the Highlands.

He never gave vent to his passion until he got fairly among the highlands of the Hudson. Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 252.

Having thus sketched the history of earth sculpture and summarized its results, we make examination of the Highlands. This region is defined to include that part of Scotland which lies to the north and west of a line drawn from the mouth of the Clyde through Dumbartonshire, Stirlingshire, Perthshire, Forfarshire, to Stonehaven on the Kincardine coast. Westminster Rev., CXXVIII. 762.

II. a. Pertaining or belonging to high lands or to mountainous regions, especially (with a capital) the Highlands of Scotland: as, highland scenery; highland vegetation.

A Highland lad my love was born,
The Lawland laws he held in scorn.
Burns, Jolly Beggars (song).

Hinting he knew not what of fear.
Scott, Rokeby, ii. 23.

Perhaps one may venture to hint that the animal instincts are those that stand in least need of stimulation.
Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 168.

=Syn. 2. Hint, Intimate, Suggest, Insinuate. To hint is to convey an idea in the lightest possible manner, and especially by implication; to let one's thought be known in an indirect, hesitating, or partial manner. To intimate is to convey one's meaning more plainly than by a hint, but still not directly or explicitly. Suggest has a somewhat wide range, often meaning essentially the same as propose or remind (one) of, and ranging down to the meaning of hint: as, to suggest a plan; to suggest more than one says. Insinuate is now generally used in a bad sense; when used in a good sense, it implies pains taken and delicacy of skill. Hints and insinuations are always covert, intimations often, suggestions rarely. An innuendo is a peculiarly dark, crafty, or mean insinuation.

II. intrans. To make an indirect reference, suggestion, or allusion.—To hint at, to allude to; refer to or suggest in a vague manner.

One, in whom all evil fancies clung Like serpent eggs together, laughingly
Would hint at worse in either.
Tennyson, Enoch Arden.

=Syn. Allude (to), Refer (to), etc. See advert, v. i.

hint[1] (hint), n. [Early mod. E. also hynt; a var. of hent[1], n.; from the verb.] 1. An act of exertion; a snatch: as, in a hint, in a moment. Jamieson. [Obsolete or Scotch.]—2. An opportunity; a fit time. Jamieson. [Obsolete or Scotch.]

Wherein of antres vast, and desarts idle,
Rough quarries, rocks, and hills whose heads touch heaven,
It was my hint to speak. Shak., Othello, i. 3.

3. A suggestion made indirectly; a covert suggestion or implication; an indirect indication, conveyed by speech, gesture, action, or circumstance, whether intentional or unintentional.

I was very civilly entertained by him [the head priest among the Jews], and gave him several hints that I was desirous to take up my abode with him; but he would not seem to understand me.
Pococke, Description of the East, II. i. 76.

Sometimes he [Chaucer] describes amply by the merest hint, as where the Friar, before setting himself softly down, drives away the cat. Lowell, Study Windows, p. 282.

=Syn. See hint, v. t.

hint[2] (hint), adv. [By apheresis from ahint.] Behind. [Scotch.]

hinterland (hin'tėr-land), n. [G., < hinter, back, + land, country.] Territory that lies back of and is tributary to a coast region or port.

The province of Shantung is the hinterland of the very large harbor the Germans have seized.
Bulletin Amer. Geog. Soc., XXX. 57.

His horse hipped with an old mothy saddle, and stirrups of no kindred. Shak., T. of the S., iii. 2.

2. In arch., to furnish with a hip: as, to hip a roof.—3. To throw (one's adversary) over the hip. Davies.

And a prime wrestler as e'er tript,
E'er gave the Cornish hug or hipt.
Cotton, Burlesque upon Burlesque, p. 202.

hip[2], hep (hip, hep), n. [Different shortenings of reg. heep; < ME. heepe, hepe (hēpe), < AS. heópe, the fruit of the dogrose, also (ONorth. dat. heope, heape) a bramble, heóp-brēmel, hip-bramble, dogrose, = OS. hiopo = OHG. hiufo, MHG. hiefe, a bramble-bush. Origin unknown; not connected with OBulg. shipŭkŭ, Bulg. shipŭk, rose, Russ. shipŭ, Bohem. ship, a thorn, etc.] The fruit of the dogrose or wild brier, Rosa canina or R. rubiginosa.

Sweet as is the brembre flour
That bereth the reede heepe.
Chaucer, Sir Thopas, l. 36.

The oaks bear mast, the briars scarlet hips.
Shak., T. of A., iv. 3.

Where thou shalt eat of the hips and haws,
And the roots that are so sweet.
The West-Country Damosel's Complaint (Child's Ballads, [II. 384).

Almost every autumn may be heard the remark that a hard winter is coming, for that the hips and haws are abundant. H. Spencer, Study of Sociol., p. 25.

hip[3] (hip), v. i.; pret. and pp. hipped, ppr. hipping. [< ME. hippen, huppen, hyppen, < AS. hyppan* (= OD. huppen = OHG. hupfen*, MHG. hupfen, hüpfen, G. hüpfen), hop, a secondary form of hoppian, ME. hoppen, E. hop: see hop[1].] To hop. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

Hope cam hippyng after that hadde so ybosted
How he with Moyses maundement hadde many men y-holpe. Piers Plowman (B), xvii. 59.

And old wyves that myght evyll goo,
They hypped on theyr staves.
Lytell Geste of Robyn Hode (Child's Ballads, V. 119).

hip[4], hyp (hip), n. [Abbr. of hypochondria[1], q. v.] A morbid depression of spirits; melancholy: usually in the plural.

When his mind is serene, when he is neither in a passion, nor in the hips (solicitus), nor in liquor, then, being in private, you may kindly advise him.
N. Bailey, tr. of Colloquies of Erasmus, p. 130.

Heaven send thou hast not got the Hyps.
How? Not a word come from thy lips?
Swift, Cassinus and Peter.

A little while ago thou wast all hip and vapour, and now thou dost nothing but patronise fun.
Miss Burney, Camilla, vi. 10.

hip[4], hyp (hip), v. t.; pret. and pp. hipped, hypped, hipt, or hypt, ppr. hipping or hypping. [< hip[4], hyp, n.] To render hypochondriac or melancholy: scarcely used except as in the participial adjective hipped. See hipped[2].

hip[5] (hip), interj. [A mere introductory syllable.] An exclamation used in applauding or giving the signal for applause: as, hip, hip, hurrah!

There is no rising from it [dinner], but to toss off the glass, and huzza after the hip! hip! hip! of the toast giver. Hone's Every-Day Book, II. 12.

hip-bath (hip'bȧth), n. A form of portable bath, intended for sitting in, so that only the hips and the lower part of the trunk are submerged. Also called sitz-bath.

hip-belt (hip'belt), n. Same as hip-girdle, 2.

hipberry (hip'ber″i), n.; pl. hipberries (-iz). The hip or fruit of Rosa canina, the dogrose.

hip-bone (hip'bōn), n. [< ME. hepe-boon; < hip[1] + bone[1].] The ischium, or inferior part of the pelvis on each side: loosely extended to the whole innominate bone which forms each side of the pelvis, and to the upper part of the thigh-bone. Also called haunch-bone.

Woundyd sore and evyll be-gone,
And brokyn was hys hepe-boon.
MS. Cantab. Ff. ii. 38, f. 122. (Halliwell.) hip-brier (hip'brī″ėr), n. The wild brier, Rosa rubiginosa. Also called hip-rose.

hip-girdle (hip'gėr″dl), n. 1. The pelvic arch or girdle. See girdle[1].—2. The sword-belt of the latter part of the fourteenth century, which passed diagonally from the waist on the right side and behind to the left hip: so named to distinguish it from the earlier sword-belt, which fitted closely around the waist. Also called hip-belt.

hip-gout (hip'gout), n. Sciatica.

hip-hapet, n. [< hip[1] + hap[2].] A covering for the hips: a term of contempt.

These clothes will never fadge with me: a pox o' this filthy vardingale, this hip-hape!
Fletcher (and another), Love's Cure, ii. 2.

hip-hop (hip'hop), adv. [< hip[3] + hop[1]; or a redupl. of hop[1], with usual weakening of first part.] With hopping gait. [Rare.]

Thus while he strives to please, he's forc'd to do't Like Volscius, hip-hop in a single boot. Congreve.

hip-joint (hip'joint), n. The articulation of the femur or thigh-bone with the innominate bone or haunch-bone; the proximal articulation of the hind limb, corresponding to the shoulder-joint of the fore limb. The head of the femur is received into the acetabulum or cotyloid cavity at the junction of the ilium, ischium, and pubis, thus constituting a ball-and-socket joint, capable of movement in every direction, and uniting to a remarkable degree mobility with stability.—Hip-joint disease. See disease.

hip-knob (hip'nob), n. In arch., a finial or other similar ornament placed on the top of the hip of a roof, or on the apex of a gable. When used upon timber gables, the lower part of the hip-knob generally terminates in a pendant. See cut under hip-roof.

hiplings†, adv. [< hip[1] + -ling[2].] By the hips.

It was a woman child, stillborn, about two months before the just time, having life a few hours before; it came hiplings till . . . [the midwife] turned it.
Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 314.

hip-lock (hip'lok), n. In wrestling, a close grip, in which one of the contestants places a leg and hip in front of the other contestant, and attempts to push him over them to the ground.

The Tartar broke the sash and shoulder hold, rushed in fiercely, caught him around the body, and, with a hip-lock and a tremendous heave, threw him over his head.
The Century, XXXVI. 373.

hip-molding, hip-mold (hip'mōl″ding, hip'-mōld), n. In arch., a molding on the rafter that forms the hip of a roof. By some workmen the word is used to signify the back of a hip.

Hippa (hip'ą), n. [NL., < Gr. ἵππος, a horse, a sea-fish: see hippus.] The typical genus of the family Hippidæ. The Brazilian H. emerita is an example. The animals burrow in the sand. H. talpoidea is called sand-bug in the United States.

Sand-bug (Hippa talpoidea).

Hipparion (hi-pā'ri-on), n. [NL., < Gr. ἱππάριον, a pony, dim. of ἵππος, a horse: see hippus.] A genus of Miocene and Pliocene fossil horses, of the family Equidæ, having three toes, a median functional hoof with a false hoof on each side.

The species are no longer regarded as in the direct line of descent of the living horse; they were of comparatively small size, from that of a goat to that of an ass. H. gracile is an example. Also called Hippotherium. Christol, 1834.

Hipparitherium (hi-pā-ri-thē'ri-um), n. [NL., < Gr. ἱππάριον, a pony (see Hipparion), + θηρίον, a wild beast.] Same as Anchitherium. Christol.

Hippeastreæ (hip-ē-as'trē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Hippeastrum + -eæ.] A subtribe of monocotyledonous plants, of the family Amaryllidaceæ, tribe Narcisseæ, established by Kunth in 1850, and typified by the genus Hippeastrum.

Hippeastrum (hip-ē-as'trum), n. [NL., < Gr. ἵππος, a horse, + ἄστρον, a star; so called from the star-like mark on the corolla, and in allusion to the popular name knight's-star lily.] A genus of plants, belonging to the family Amaryllidaceæ, tribe Narcisseæ, and type of Kunth's subtribe Hippeastreæ. They have an infundibuliform perianth with a short tube and with the faucial membrane deficient on the lower side, and an irregular limb. The stamens are unequal, declined, and unequally fixed; the ovary is 3-celled; the style 3-lobed or 3-cleft; the leaves are 2-ranked and narrow; the stem is fistulous; the bulbs are tunicate; and the flowers in a 2- to many-flowered umbel. There are about 50 species, natives of South America and the West Indies, in cultivation known as the knight's-star lily or equestrian star. They comprise most of the plants cultivated under the name of Amaryllis. H. aulicum, H. equestre, and H. reginæ are crimson, scarlet, or orange-red with a green star. H. reticulatum is purplish-red, veined with deeper ★red, and with a white central star.

hipped[1] (hipt), p. a. [Pp. of hip[1], v., 1.] Having the hip sprained or dislocated.

hipped[2], hypped (hipt), p. a. [Pp. of a verb hip[4], hyp, scarcely used except in this form; < hip[4], hyp, n.: see hip[4].] Rendered melancholy; melancholy; mopish. Also spelled hipt and hypt.

It is observable that among the University men [at Cambridge], that allmost half of them are Hypt, as they call it: that is, disordered in their brains, sometimes mopish, sometimes wild, the two different effects of the laziness and debauchery.

Dr. J. Edwards [died 1716], in Rep. of Camb. Antiq. [Soc., 1878, p. 130. (Skeat.)

I have been to the last degree hypped since I saw you.

Spectator, No. 284.

And from the hipp'd discourses gather
That politics go by the weather.

M. Green, The Spleen.

hippelaph (hip'e-laf), n. [< NL. hippelaphus, q. v.] Same as hippelaphus.

hippelaphus (hi-pel'a-fus), n. [NL., < Gr. ἱππέλαφος, lit. 'horse-deer,' < ἵππος, horse, + ἔλαφος, a stag, deer.] The stag of India; the rusa deer: a large animal, supposed to be that described by Aristotle, and now known as Rusa aristotelis or Cervus hippelaphus. See Rusa.

hippety-hoppety (hip'e-ti-hop'e-ti), adv. [A dactylic variation of hip-hop.] Hopping and skipping: used by children: often abbreviated hippety-hop, and in that form used substantively.

Hippia (hip'i-ạ), n. [NL., < Gr. ἱππος, a horse (?).] A small genus of branching shrubs, belonging to the family Asteraceæ and to the tribe Anthemideæ, the type of Lessing's subtribe Hippieæ. They have heterogamous heads, with the outer flowers pistillate, the inner staminate, sterile, and compressed, and slightly winged achenia; heads corymbose at the ends of the branches; flowers all yellow; and leaves alternate, pinnatifid or pinnatisected, rarely entire. The whole plant is odorous. Only 4 species are known, natives of South Africa.

hippian (hip'i-an), a. and n. [< Hippa + -ian.]

I. a. Pertaining to the Hippidæ.

II. n. One of the Hippidæ; a burrowing crab or sand-bug.

hippiater (hip-i-ā'tėr), n. [< Gr. ἱππιατρός, a farrier, veterinary surgeon, < ἵππος, a horse, + ἰατρός, a physician, surgeon, < ἰᾶσθαι, heal, cure: see hippiatry.] A farrier; a horse-doctor. Thomas, Med. Dict.

hippiatric (hip-i-at'rik), a. [< Gr. ἱππιατρικός, pertaining to farriery, < ἱππιατρός, a farrier: see hippiatry.] Pertaining or relating to farriery or veterinary surgery; veterinary.

hippiatry (hip-i-ā'tri), n. [Formerly also hippiatrie; < Gr. ἵππος, a horse, + ἰατρεία, healing, medical treatment; cf. hippiater.] The art of curing diseases of the horse; veterinary surgery.

The horse pulled out his foot; and, which is a wonderful thing in hippiatrie, the said horse was thoroughly cured of a ringbone which he had in that foot.

Urquhart, tr. of Rabelais, i. 36.

Hippidæ (hip'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Hippa + -idæ.] A family of anomurous decapod crustaceans, typified by the genus Hippa, containing burrowing crabs of an elongate form, with the abdomen fitted for digging and the feet for swimming, and long plumose antennules. The species inhabit shallow water and burrow in sand, rapidly disappearing in it when uncovered. See cut under Hippa.

Hippidea (hi-pid'ē-ạ), n. pl. [NL., < Hippa + -idea.] A group of anomurous crustaceans constituted for the families Hippidæ and Albuneidæ. They have an ovate carapace and the abdomen composed of six segments (the fifth and sixth fused), the penultimate with a prominent pair of biramous lamellar appendages, and the terminal large.

Hippieæ (hi-pī'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Hippia + -eæ.] An old subtribe of plants of the family Asteraceæ, tribe Anthemideæ, established by Lessing in 1832, and typified by the genus Hippia.

hippii, n. Plural of hippius.

hipping-hold, n. [E. dial., also hipping-hawd; < hipping, verbal n. of hip[3], + hold[1], n.; lit. a 'hopping-place,' i. e. 'stepping-place.'] A place where people stay to chat when they are sent on an errand; a loitering-place. Bailey; Grose.

hippings (hip'ingz), n. pl. [< hip[1] + -ing[1].] Cloths for infants; clouts. Carlyle. [Prov. Eng.]

hippish, hyppish (hip'ish), a. [< hip[4], hyp, + -ish[1].] Hypochondriac; moping.

By cares depress'd, in pensive hippish mood,
With slowest pace the tedious minutes roll.

Gay, Wine.

I mean to go myself to-morrow
Just to divert myself a little space,
Because I'm rather hippish.

Byron, Beppo, st. 64.

hippius (hi-pī'us), n.; pl. hippii (-ī). [LL., < Gr. ἱππειος, of a horse, equestrian (applied in LGr. to a meter regarded as suited to cavalry movements), < ἵππος, a horse: see hippus.] In anc. pros.: (a) An epitrite; a metrical foot consisting of four times or syllables, one of which is short, the other three being long. It is called first (⏑ – – –), second (– ⏑ – –), third (– – ⏑ –), or fourth (– – – ⏑) hippius or epitrite, according as the short is in the first, second, third, or fourth place respectively. See epitrite. (b) A Molossus (– – –); a metrical foot consisting of three long times or syllables. See Molossus.

hippo†, n. Same as hypo[1].

When he's neither in a Passion, nor in the Hippo, nor in Liquor. Bailey, tr. of Erasmus's Colloquies, I. 248.

Hippobosca (hip-ō-bos'kạ), n. [NL., < Gr. ἱπποβοσκός, feeding horses (NL. taken as 'feeding on horses'), < ἵππος, horse, + βόσκειν, feed.] The typical genus of Hippoboscidæ. H. equina is a winged tick-fly of the horse: also forest-fly.

Hippoboscidæ (hip-ō-bos'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Hippobosca + -idæ.] A family of pupiparous dipterous insects, founded by Leach in 1817, containing both winged and wingless forms, which are parasitic upon various birds and quadrupeds, infesting the plumage or pelage; the forest-flies. The species are also known as bird-ticks, sheep-ticks, etc., and one of them is a tick-fly of the horse.

Hippobroma (hip-ō-brō'mạ), n. [NL., < Gr. ἵππος, horse, + βρῶμα, food.] A generic name proposed by G. Don in 1834 for Isotoma longiflora, a herbaceous plant of the family Campanulaceæ, a native of Jamaica and other West Indian islands. It is one of the most poisonous of plants; horses are said to be violently purged after eating it.

hippocamp (hip'ō-kamp), n. [< L. hippocampus: see hippocampus.] Same as hippocampus, 1.

Fair silver-footed Thetis that time threw Along the ocean with a beauteous crew
Of her attending sea-nymphes (Jove's bright lamps)
Guiding from rockes her chariot's hyppocamps.

W. Browne, Britannia's Pastorals, ii. 1.

hippocampal (hip-ō-kam'pạl), a. [< hippocampus + -al.] Of or pertaining to the hippocampus of the brain.—Hippocampal fissure or sulcus, one of the largest and most constant of the fissures or sulci upon the surface of the brain, and corresponding to the elevation known as the hippocampus.—Hippocampal gyrus. See gyrus.

hippocampi, n. Plural of hippocampus.

Hippocampidæ (hip-ō-kam'pi-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Hippocampus + -idæ.] A family of syngnathous fishes, of the order Lophobranchii, typified by the genus Hippocampus; the sea-horses. They have a more or less prehensile finless tail, the head in the typical species set at an angle with the trunk, the snout tubular, and the body mailed as in the pipe-fishes. They are related to the pipe-fishes or Syngnathidæ. The general aspect is strikingly suggestive of the common form given to the knight in chessmen; some species, however, differ little in shape from ordinary pipe-fishes. The general attitude in swimming is erect. The males have a brood-pouch in which the eggs are developed. The sea-horses inhabit the ocean, and especially the warmer seas. The genus Hippocampus, which contains most species of the family, has a wide range, but the other genera are confined to the Pacific ocean.

Sea-horse (Hippocampus hippocampus). (From Report of U. S. Fish Commission, 1884.)

Hippocampina (hip-ō-kam'pi-nạ), n. pl. [NL. (Günther), < Hippocampus + -ina.] Same as Hippocampidæ.

Hippocampinæ (hip″ō-kam-pī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Hippocampus + -inæ.] One of several subfamilies of the family Hippocampidæ, composed of the genera Hippocampus and Acentronura.

hippocampine (hip-ō-kam'pin), a. Pertaining to or having the characters of the Hippocampidæ or Hippocampinæ.

hippocampus (hip-ō-kam'pus), n.; pl. hippocampi (-pī). [L., a sea-horse, < Gr. ἱππόκαμπος, a mythical sea-monster, with horse's body and fish's tail, also in zoöl. the sea-horse, < ἵππος, horse, + κάμπος, a sea-monster.] 1. In myth., a sea-horse with two fore feet and a body ending in the tail of a dolphin or other fish. The car of Neptune and those of other deities were drawn by such sea-horses. Representations of them are seen in Pompeian paintings, etc. Also hippocamp.

2. [cap.] In zoöl., the typical genus of sea-horses of the family Hippocampidæ.—3. In anat., a raised curved trace or track on the floor of the lateral ventricle of the brain.—Hippocampus major, or cornu Ammonis, a curved elongated eminence along the whole extent of the floor of the middle or descending horn of the lateral ventricle of the brain.—Hippocampus minor, a longitudinal eminence on the floor of the posterior horn of the lateral ventricle of the brain, expressing the projection into the ventricle of the calcarine sulcus: wrongly supposed to be peculiar to man.—Pes hippocampi, a collateral eminence at the junction of the two hippocampi of the brain, expressing collateral sulci.

Hippocastanaceæ (hip-ō-kas-tā-nā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (De Candolle, 1813), < Hippocastanum + -aceæ.] A family of dicotyledonous choripetalous plants, typified by the genus Æsculus (Hippocastanum). After having been long treated as a subordinate group of the Sapindaceæ, it was restored to family rank by Radlkofer in 1888, and is adopted as such by Engler and Prantl. Lindley's name Æsculaceæ is, however, preferable as based on that of the type genus. It includes the two genera Æsculus and Billia. The former is the genus to which the horse-chestnut and buckeye belong. The latter embraces two species of somewhat similar trees of Mexico, Guatemala, and Colombia.

Hippocastanum (hip-ō-kas'tā-num), n. [NL., < Gr. ἵππος, a horse, + κάστανα, chestnuts.] The name given by Tournefort in 1700 to the genus Æsculus of Linnæus, type of the family Æsculaceæ (Hippocastanaceæ). It was never established in the binomial literature of botany. See Æsculus.

hippocephaloid (hip-ō-sef'a-loid), n. [< Gr. ἵππος, a horse, + κεφαλή, head, + εἶδος, form.] A cast of certain fossil equivalve bivalves, especially Trigonia.

hippocras (hip'ō-kras), n. [Formerly also hypocrass, hipocras, ipocras; < F. hippocras, hypocras, a corrupt form repr. NL. hippocraticum (sc. vinum), an artificial name given in allusion to Hippocrates, a famous physician: see Hippocratic.] An old medicinal drink composed of wine with an infusion of spices and other ingredients, used as a cordial. Also hippocrass.

And plaine water hath he preferred before the swete hipocras of the riche men. J. Udall, On Luke vii.

P. Stay, what's best to drink a mornings?
R. Ipocras, sir, for my mistress, if I fetch it, is most dear to her. Dekker and Middleton, Honest Whore.

Hippocrataceæ (hip-ō-krā-tā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Hippocratea (< L. Hippocrates: see Hippocratic) + -aceæ.] A small family of plants related to the Celastraceæ and typified by the genus Hippocratea. It is characterized by the 5-merous calyx and corolla, 3, rarely 2, 4, or 5, stamens inserted on the disk, and with complanate filaments; the anthers extrorsely dehiscent; the seeds exalbuminous; and the leaves often opposite. It was established by Humboldt, Bonpland, and Kunth in 1821, and is adopted by Engler and Prantl.

Hippocratea (hip-ō-krā'tē-ạ), n. [NL., < Hippocrates, a famous physician: see Hippocratic.] A large genus of dicotyledonous choripetalous climbing shrubs, of the family Hippocrataceæ, closely related to the family Celastraceæ. They have a small 5-parted calyx; 5 narrow petals; usually 3 stamens, and a 3-celled ovary which is free or confluent with the disk, ripening into compressed, coriaceous 2-valved or indehiscent carpels, which are slightly connate at the base. The leaves are opposite, petioled, and entire or serrate; the flowers are greenish or white, and arranged in axillary panicles or cymes. About 70 species are known, natives of tropical Asia, Africa, Australia, America, and the Pacific islands. H. comosa of the West Indies produces oily seeds which are used like almonds. Well-preserved leaves of two species of Hippocratea have been found in the Miocene deposits of Styria and Bohemia.

hippocratead (hip-ō-krā'tē-ad), n. [< Hippocratea.] A plant of the family Hippocrataceæ. Lindley.

Hippocrates's sleeve. See sleeve.

Hippocratic (hip-ō-krat'ik), a. [< LL. Hippocraticus, < L. Hippocrates, < Gr. Ἱπποκράτης (see def.); the name means 'strong over horses,' or 'strong in horse' (cf. ἱπποκρατεῖν, be superior in cavalry), < ἵππος, horse, + κράτος, strength.] Of or pertaining to Hippocrates, a Greek physician, born about 460 B. C. and died in the fourth century B. C., called the "father of medicine."—Hippocratic face (facies Hippocratica), the expression which the features assume immediately before death, or in one exhausted by long sickness, great evacuations, or excessive hunger, threatening dissolution: so called from its being vividly described by Hippocrates. The nose is pinched, the eyes are sunken, the temples are hollow, the ears are cold or lead-colored, the skin of the forehead is tense and dry, the complexion is livid, and the lips are pendent, relaxed, and cold.

A sighing respiration, feeble and almost imperceptible pulse, the lines of the face hippocratic.
The Century, XXIII. 300.

Hippocratism (hi-pok'rā-tizm), n. [< L. Hippocrates (see Hippocratic) + -ism.] The doctrines or system of Hippocrates, who is regarded as the founder of the science of medicine. He avoided the extremes of empiricism and dogmatism, and laid especial stress upon observation and upon attention to regimen and diet.

Hippocrene (hip'ō-krēn or hip-ō-krē'nē), n. [L. Hippocrene, < Gr. ἱπποκρήνη, a reading, in late manuscripts, for ἵππου κρήνη, the horse's fountain: ἵππου, gen. of ἵππος, horse; κρήνη, a fountain.] 1. A spring on Mount Helicon in Bœotia, sacred to the muses, the waters of which are poetically held to possess the power of poetic inspiration.

O for a beaker full of the warm South,
Full of the true, the blushful Hippocrene.
Keats, Ode to a Nightingale.

Nor maddening draughts of Hippocrene, Like gleams of sunshine, flash between Thick leaves of mistletoe.
Longfellow, Goblet of Life.

2 (hip-ō-krē'nē). [NL.] In zoöl.: (a) A genus of gastropod mollusks. Oken, 1817. (b) A genus of acalephs. Mertens, 1829.

hippocrepian (hip-ō-krē'pi-an), a. and n. [< Gr. ἵππος, a horse, + κρηπίς, a boot (shoe).] I. a. Like or likened to a horseshoe in shape; hippocrepiform: specifically applied to certain ectoproctous Polyzoa which usually have the lophophore prolonged into two lobes so as to be horseshoe-shaped, as well as to such a lophophore itself.

The lophophore resembles that of the hippocrepian Phylactolæmata in being produced into two arms.
Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 396.

Some of the scars show traces of the hippocrepian mark characteristic of Protopteris.
Dawson, Geol. Hist. of Plants, p. 94.

II. n. A polyzoan having these characteristics. See Phylactolæmata.

hippocrepiform (hip-ō-krep'i-fôrm), a. [< Hippocrepis + -form.] Shaped like a horseshoe.

Hippocrepis (hip-ō-krē'pis), n. [NL., < Gr. ἵππος, horse, + κρηπίς, a boot (shoe).] A small genus of trailing or shrubby perennials, belonging to the family Fabaceæ, with unequally pinnate leaves, umbellate heads of yellow flowers, which have the stamens free from the vexillum and the anthers uniform, and a sessile, many-ovuled ovary with an inflexed style: natives chiefly of Europe, northern Africa, and western Asia; the horseshoe-vetches. H. comosa, the common horseshoe-vetch, is a native of England, and is so named from the shape of its crooked pods.

hippodame† (hip'ō-dām), n. [Misused in Spenser; the form reflects L. Hippodamus, < Gr. 'Ιπποδάμος, the 'horse-tamer,' an epithet of Castor. Spenser was probably thinking of hippocampus, a sea-monster on which the sea-gods rode.] A sea-monster; a sea-horse.

The raging billowes . . . made a long broad dyke,
That his [Neptune's] swift charet might have passage wyde
Which foure great Hippodames did draw in temewise tyde.
Spenser, F. Q., III. xi. 40.

Hippodameian (hip″ō-dā-mī'an), a. [(1) < L. Hippodamia or Hippodameia, also Hippodame, < Gr. 'Ιπποδάμεια or 'Ιπποδάμη, a fem. name (see def. 1), corresponding to 'Ιππόδαμος, Hippodamus; (2) < Gr. 'Ιππόδαμος, a masc. name: see def., and cf. hippodame.] 1. Of or pertaining to Hippodameia, daughter of Œnomaus, and the ancestress of the Atreidæ. She became the wife of Pelops as the reward of his victory over her father in a chariot-race, which he won by bribing the charioteer of Œnomaus. There are various versions of the legend. 2. Of or pertaining to Hippodamus, a great Milesian architect and engineer of the fifth century B. C.

hippodrome (hip'ō-drōm), n. [< F. hippodrome = Sp. hipódromo = Pg. hippodromo = It. ippodromo, < L. hippodromos, < Gr. ἱππόδρομος, a race-course, < ἵππος, horse, + δρόμος, a course, running, < δραμεῖν, run.] 1. In classical antiq., a place, more or less embellished by art, in which horse-races and chariot-races were run and horses were exercised: sometimes applied to a modern circus.

In a fine lawn below my house, I have planted an hippodrome; it is a circular plantation, consisting of five walks; the central of which is a horse-course, and three rounds make exactly a mile.
Swift, Account of Monument to the Memory of Dr. Swift.

2. In sporting slang, a race or other athletic contest in which it is arranged beforehand that a certain contestant shall win; a mock or fraudulent race. [U. S.]

hippodrome (hip'ō-drōm), v. i.; pret. and pp. hippodromed, ppr. hippodroming. [< hippodrome, n.] To conduct races, equestrian, pedestrian, or aquatic, or other contests, in which the result is prearranged by collusion between the managers and the contestants, in order to make gain through betting, etc.: in allusion to the prearranged or perfunctory races in a hippodrome or circus. [U. S.]

It is a treat to see the whole-souled energy of the young collegians [at foot-ball], and there never has yet been the slur of hippodroming cast upon any college contest.
New York Evening Post, Nov. 4, 1886.

Hippoglossinæ (hip″ō-glos-ī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Hippoglossus + -inæ.] A subfamily of pleuronectoid fishes, comprising species with a large mouth, well-developed acute teeth, and both the ventrals lateral and nearly equally developed. It comprises the halibut and the large-mouthed flounders of the northern seas.

Hippoglossus (hip-ō-glos'us), n. [NL., < Gr. ἵππος, horse, + γλῶσσα, tongue.] A genus of Pleuronectidæ, containing the halibut. The common halibut is H. vulgaris. Cuvier. See cut under halibut. Also written Hypoglossus.

hippogony (hi-pog'ō-ni), n. [< Gr. ἵππος, horse, + -γονία, production: see -gony.] The pedigree or origin of a horse. Davies. [Rare.]

There was nothing supernatural in Nobs. His hippogony, even if it had been as the Doctor was willing to have it supposed he thought probable, would upon his theory have been in the course of nature, though not in her usual course. Southey, The Doctor, cxliv.

hippogriff, hippogryph (hip'ō-grif), n. [< F. hippogriffe = Sp. hipogrifo = Pg. hippogrifo = It. ippogrifo, < Gr. ἵππος, horse, + LL. gryphus (Gr. γρύψ), a griffin: see griffin.] A fabulous creature, like a griffin, but with hoofs and other parts resembling a horse, apparently invented, in imitation of Pegasus, by the romancers of the middle ages, and furnished to their heroes as a means of transportation through the air.

So saying, he caught him up, and, without wing
Of hippogrif, bore through the air sublime.
Milton, P. R., iv. 542.

It reminded me of the Magician Atlantes on his hippogriff, with a knight trussed up behind him.
Scott, Redgauntlet, letter iv.

hippogriffin (hip-ō-grif'in), n. Same as hippogriff.

hippogryph, n. See hippogriff.

hippolith (hip'ō-lith), n. [< Gr. ἵππος, horse, + λίθος, stone.] A stone found in the stomach or intestines of a horse. Smart.

hippologist (hi-pol'ō-jist), n. [< hippology + -ist.] One who studies hippology.

Bourgelat, an advocate at Lyons and a talented hippologist, through his influence with Bertin, prime minister under Louis XV., was the first to induce the Government to establish a veterinary school. Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 198.

hippology (hi-pol'ō-ji), n. [< Gr. ἵππος, horse, + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] The scientific study of the horse.

The student [in the Leavenworth Cavalry School] is expected to complete a course of Military Art, including . . . field service, equitation, and hippology.
Harper's Mag., LXXVI. 792.

hippomane† (hip'ō-mān), n. [< F. hippomane = Sp. hipomanes = Pg. hippomanes = It. ippomane, < L. hippomanes, < Gr. ἱππομανές, an Arcadian plant, appar. of the spurge kind, of which horses were supposed to be madly fond, or which made them mad; also, a small black fleshy substance on the forehead of a new-born foal, or a mucous humor that flows from a mare in heat, used as a philter; < ἵππος, horse, + μανία, madness, μαίνεσθαι, be mad.] 1. A substance obtained from a mare or foal, used anciently as a philter or love-charm; hence, a love-potion; a philter or charm. Also hippomanes. — 2 (hi-pom'a-nē). [cap.] [NL.] A genus of plants belonging to the family Euphorbiaceæ, characterized by having small inconspicuous flowers of separate sexes, borne on long slender spikes. The female flowers are few, and placed singly at the base of the spike; the male flowers are in clusters, occupying the upper part. The male calyx is 2-parted, the female 3-parted; the male contains 2 to 4 stamens joined by thin filaments, the female a many-celled ovary crowned with from 4 to 8 styles. The fruit is a fleshy yellowish-green berry. H. mancinella is the manchineel-tree, a native of the West Indies. See manchineel.

Hippomaneæ (hip-ō-mā'nē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Hippomane + -eæ.] A tribe of plants of the family Euphorbiaceæ, established by Reichenbach in 1828, and typified by the genus Hippomane. It is adopted by Engler and Prantl and includes 24 genera, among which, besides Hippomane, occur Mabea, Sebastiania, Stillingia, Hura, etc.

hippomanes† (hi-pom'a-nēz), n. Same as hippomane, 1.

The shepherd knows it well, and calls by name
Hippomanes to note the mother's flame;
This, gather'd in the planetary hour
With noxious weeds, and spell'd with words of pow'r,
Dire stepdames in the magick bowl infuse.
Dryden, tr. of Virgil's Georgics, iii. 446.

Hipponactean (hip″ō-nak-tē'an), a. and n. [< LL. hipponacteus, < Gr. 'Ιππωνάκτειος (as n. τὸ 'Ιππωνάκτειον, sc. μέτρον), pertaining to Hipponax, < 'Ιππώναξ (-νακτ-), a Greek poet, lit. 'horse-ruler,' < ἵππος, horse, + ἄναξ, ruler, king.] I. a. 1. Of or pertaining to Hipponax of Ephesus (sixth century B. C.), a Greek writer of iambic poetry, who was celebrated for his invective poems. — 2. In anc. pros., an epithet noting certain meters invented or introduced into Greek literature by Hipponax. — Hipponactean distich, Hipponactean system, a distich consisting of a trochaic dimeter and an iambic trimeter, both catalectic. — Hipponactean meter, Hipponactean verse. (a) A trochaic tetrameter catalectic, the next to the last time or syllable of which is long instead of short (– ⏑ – ⏒ | – ⏑ – ⏒ | – ⏑ – ⏒ | – – ⏓), called on account of this intentional violation of rhythm scazon (halting or limping). See scazon. (b) An iambic trimeter acatalectic, of the kind called scazon and choliambus (literally, lame iambus), because the next to the last time or syllable is long instead of being short, as required by rhythm (thus, ⏒ – ⏑ – | ⏒ – ⏑ – | ⏑ – – ⏓).

II. n. In anc. pros., a Hipponactean meter or verse.

hipponosology (hip″ō-nō-sol'ō-ji), n. [< Gr. ἵππος, horse, + E. nosology, q. v.] Hippopathology.

hippopathological (hip-ō-path-ō-loj'i-kal), a. Pertaining to hippopathology.

hippopathology (hip″ō-pā-thol'ō-ji), n. [< Gr. ἵππος, horse, + E. pathology, q. v.] The pathology of the horse; the science of veterinary medicine.

Hippophaë (hi-pof'a-ē), n. [NL., < L. hippophaës, < Gr. ἱπποφαές, a plant, Euphorbia spinosa (Sprengel), found also in other forms, ἱππόφεως, ἱπποφανές, and ἱπποφνές, and (perhaps a diff. plant) ἱππόφαιστον; < ἵππος, horse, + φαίνεσθαι, shine (or φύειν, produce). The allusion is not clear.] A small genus of shrubby plants, belonging to the family Elæagnaceæ, confined to temperate Europe and Asia; the sallow-thorns. H. rhamnoides (the common sallow-thorn or sea-buckthorn), growing on the coasts and by the rivers of Europe and Asia, is a thorny shrub, preferring a sandy soil, but sometimes found on cliffs near the sea. It is occasionally cultivated in gardens, on account of its silvery leaves, which are linear-lanceolate. The berries, which are produced in great abundance, are yellow, contain one seed, and have an acid flavor. A fish-sauce is sometimes prepared from them, and the Tatars are said to make a jelly from them. Leaves and fruit of two extinct species of Hippophaë have been found in a fossil state in the Miocene lignites of Hesse at Salzhausen.

hippophagi (hi-pof'a-jī), n. pl. [ML., pl. of hippophagus: see hippophagous.] Eaters of horse-flesh; specifically, a name given by Ptolemy to certain nomads, Scythians in central Asia and Sarmatians northeast of the Caspian sea, who fed on horse-flesh.

hippophagist (hi-pof'a-jist), n. [< hippophagy + -ist.] One who eats horse-flesh.

hippophagous (hi-pof'a-gus), a. [< ML. hippophagus (in pl. hippophagi, q. v.), < Gr. ἱπποφάγος (Ptolemy), eating horses (see hippophagi), < ἵππος, horse, + φαγεῖν, eat.] Feeding on horse-flesh.

hippophagy (hi-pof'a-ji), n. [= F. hippophagie; as hippophag-ous + -y.] The act or practice of feeding on horse-flesh.

hippophile (hip'ō-fil), n. [< Gr. ἵππος, horse, + φίλος, loving.] A horse-lover; one who is addicted to horses; a horse-fancier.

Next to impossible to find a perfectly honest hippophile.
O. W. Holmes, The Atlantic, LIX. 534.

Hippopodiidæ (hip/ō-pō-dī'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Hippopodius + -idæ.] A family of oceanic hydroids, tubular medusans, or Siphonophora, of the order Calycophora, taking name from the genus Hippopodius, and related to Diphyidæ, but having more than two horseshoe-shaped swimming-bells, no polyp-stem, and no float. Also written Hippopodidæ.

Hippopodidæ: the swimming column has two rows of nectocalyces, and is situated on an upper lateral branch of the stem. The male and female gonophores are grouped in clusters . . . at the base of the nutritive polype.
Claus, Zoölogy (trans.), I. 250.

Hippopodius (hip-ō-pō'di-us), n. [NL., < Gr. ἵππος, horse, + πούς (ποδ-) = E. foot.] A genus of tubular medusans or calycophorans, giving name to the family Hippopodiidæ: same as Gleba, 2. Quoy and Gaimard, 1827.

hippopotami, n. Latin plural of hippopotamus.

hippopotamic (hip-ō-pot'a-mik), a. [< hippopotamus + -ic.] Of or pertaining to the hippopotamus; hence, figuratively, ponderous.

Even with the masters of it, English prose was then still in the hippopotamic stage. Harper's Mag., LXXVII. 477.

Merycopotamus of the Miocene Fauna of the Sewalik Hills appears to have been a Hippopotamid.
Huxley, Anat. Vert., p. 320.

Hippopotamidæ (hip/ō-pō-tam'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Hippopotamus + -idæ.] A family of omnivorous mammals, of the order Ungulata, suborder Artiodactyla, series Omnivora, and superfamily Hippopotamoidea; the hippopotamuses. The technical characteristics are: the lower canines enlarged and tusk-like, the stomach non-ruminant, only imperfectly septate, the odontoid process of the axis conical, the body massive and obese, the feet 4-toed and phalangigrade, the muzzle obtuse with superolateral nostrils, and the mammæ two in number and inguinal. The family is intermediate between swine and deer, but is much nearer the former; it is divided into Hippopotaminæ and Chœropsinæ.

Hippopotaminæ (hip-ō-pot-a-mī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Hippopotamus + -inæ.] The typical subfamily of Hippopotamidæ, distinguished from Chœropsinæ by the depression of the skull and the prominence of the completed bony orbits. The only recent genus is Hippopotamus; a fossil genus is Hexaprotodon.

hippopotamine (hip-ō-pot'a-min), a. [< hippopotamus + -ine[1].] Of or pertaining to the hippopotamus; having the characters of the Hippopotamidæ.

Hippopotamoidea (hip-ō-pot-a-moi'dē-ä), n. pl. [NL., < Hippopotamus + -oidea.] A superfamily of mammals, containing only the Hippopotamidæ. T. N. Gill, 1872.

hippopotamus (hip-ō-pot'a-mus), n.; pl. hippopotamuses, hippopotami (-ez, -mī). [In earlier form contr. hippotame, q. v.; = F. hippotame = Sp. hipopótamo = Pg. hippopotamo = It. ippopotamo, < L. hippopotamus, < Gr. ἱπποπόταμος, a river-horse, an irreg. formation arising from the earlier phrase name ἵππος ποτάμιος, where ποτάμιος is an adj. (< ποταμός, river), qualifying ἵππος, horse. Another name was ὁ ἵππος τοῦ Νείλου, 'the horse of the Nile.'] 1. An omnivorous ungulate pachydermatous mammal of the genus Hippopotamus or family Hippopotamidæ. The best-known species is the living African river-horse, H. amphibius. It has a thick and square head, a very large muzzle, small eyes and ears, thick and heavy body, short legs terminated by four toes, a short tail, Hippopotamus amphibius.

two teats, skin about two inches thick on the back and sides, and no hair except at the extremity of the tail. The incisors and canines of the lower jaw are of great size and strength, the canines or tusks being long and curved forward. These tusks sometimes reach the length of two feet and more, and weigh upward of six pounds. It is chiefly on account of the tusks and teeth that the animal is killed, they being superior in hardness to ivory, and less liable to turn yellow. This hippopotamus inhabits nearly the whole of Africa; its flesh is eaten by the natives. It attains a length of about 14 feet, rarely more, and stands about 5 feet high. It delights in water, living in lakes, rivers, and estuaries, and feeding on water-plants, or on the herbage growing near the water. It is an excellent swimmer and diver, and can remain under water a considerable time. A much smaller and very different hippopotamus is Chœropsis liberiensis. See Chœropsinæ. There are several extinct species, of various genera.

The same river Nilus bringeth foorth another beast called hippopotamus, i. e., a river horse.
Holland, tr. of Pliny, viii. 25.

2. [cap.] [NL.] The typical genus of Hippopotamidæ, characterized by the presence of only four lower incisors. H. amphibius is the only living species.—Tailless hippopotamus, the giant cavy or capibara.

Hippopus (hip'ō-pus), n. [NL., < Gr. ἵππος, horse, + πούς (ποδ-) = E. foot.] 1. A genus of siphonate bivalve mollusks, of the family Tridacnidæ, or giant clams, and very near Tridacna itself, having closed valves, two cardinal teeth, and a small byssus. H. maculatus of the Indian ocean is known as the bear's-paw clam. Martini, 1773; Lamarck, 1799.—2. A genus of acalephs: usually misspelled Hippopas. Delle Chiaje, 1838.

Bear's-paw Clam (Hippopus maculatus).

hippo-sandal (hip'ō-san/dal), n. [< Gr. ἵππος, horse, + σάνδαλον, sandal.] See the extract.

There are, however, some singular articles termed hippo-sandals, the use of which appears doubtful, but which were either attached to the horses' feet, or to a primitive kind of cart without wheels.
Jour. of Anthrop. Inst., XVIII. 202.

Hippospongia (hip-ō-spon'ji-ä), n. [NL., < Gr. ἵππος, horse, + σπογγιά, σπόγγος, a sponge: see sponge.] The genus of horny or fibrous sponges which contains the common bath-sponge or horse-sponge, H. equina. It is characterized by the thinness of its fibers and the labyrinthic character of the choanosome, in consequence of which the chief fibers have no regular radiate arrangement.

hipposteology (hi-pos-tē-ol'ō-ji), n. [< Gr. ἵππος, horse, + E. osteology.] The osteology of the horse.

hippotamet, n. [ME. corruptly ipotayne; < OF. hippotame = OIt. ippotamo, < L. hippopotamus, a hippopotamus: see hippopotamus.] A hippopotamus.

In that Contree ben many Ipotaynes, that dwellen somtyme in the Watre, and somtyme on the Lond; and thei ben half Man and half Hors, as I have seyd before; and thei eten men, whan thei may take hem.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 268.

The hippotame that like an horse doth neigh.
John Dennys (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 166).

Hippotherium (hip-ō-thē'ri-um), n. [NL., < Gr. ἵππος, horse, + θηρίον, a wild beast.] A genus of fossil horses: a synonym of Hipparion. Kaup.

hippotigris (hip-ō-tī'gris), n. [Gr. ἱπποτίγρις, a (supposed) kind of tiger, < ἵππος, horse, + τίγρις, tiger.] 1. A classic name of the ass, from the stripes on the back and withers.—2. [cap.] [NL.] A genus of striped African equids, containing the zebra, dauw, and quagga. Hamilton Smith.

hippotomical (hip-ō-tom'i-kal), a. [< hippotomy + -ic-al.] Pertaining to hippotomy.

hippotomist (hi-pot'ō-mist), n. [< hippotomy + -ist.] One who dissects horses, or is versed in the anatomy of the horse.

hippotomy (hi-pot'ō-mi), n. [< Gr. ἵππος, a horse, + τομή, a cutting.] The dissection of horses; the anatomy of the horse.

Hippotraginæ (hip/ō-trā-jī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Hippotragus + -inæ.] A subfamily of equine antelopes, of which the genus Hippotragus is the type.

Hippotragus (hi-pot'rā-gus), n. [NL., < Gr. ἵππος, horse, + τράγος, goat.] A genus of antelopes, typical of the subfamily Hippotraginæ, containing the African equine and sable antelopes, H. equinus and H. niger: synonymous with Ægocerus, 2. The addax is sometimes misplaced in this genus. Sundevall.

Hipp's chronoscope. See chronoscope.

hippurate (hip'ū-rāt), n. [< hippur-ic + -ate[1].] A compound formed by the union of hippuric acid with a base.

hippuria (hi-pū'ri-ä), n. [NL., < hippur-ic + -ia.] In pathol., the presence of an excessive amount of hippuric acid in the urine.

hippuric (hi-pū'rik), a. [< Gr. ἵππος, horse, + οὖρον, urine, + -ic.] Relating to or obtained from the urine of horses.—Hippuric acid, $C_9H_9NO_3$, an acid found in considerable quantity in the urine of herbivorous animals and in that of persons suffering from diabetes. It crystallizes in long needles, is soluble in warm water, and when heated with a strong acid breaks up into benzoic acid and glycocoll.

hippurid (hip'ū-rid), n. A plant of the family Haloragidaceæ (Hippurideæ of Link). Lindley.

Hippurideæ (hip-ū-rid'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Hippuris (-rid-) + -eæ.] A family of plants established by Link in 1821: same as the Haloragidaceæ, which see.

Hippuris (hi-pū'ris), n. [L., < Gr. ἱππουρις, horse-tailed; as noun, a plant, mare's-tail; < ἵππος, horse, + οὐρά, tail.] 1. A genus of marsh or aquatic plants, of the family Haloragidaceæ; the mare's-tails. It is characterized by having perfect or polygamous flowers, an entire calyx, no petals, a single stamen inserted on the edge of the calyx, and a single thread-shaped style, stigmatic down one side, and received in the groove between the lobes of the anther; the fruit is nut-like, 1-celled, and 1-seeded. H. vulgaris, the mare's-tail or bottle-brush, grows in pools and marshes throughout the temperate and cold regions of the globe. It is an erect herb, with crowded whorls of narrow hair-like leaves (whence the name), and inconspicuous flowers, which are also whorled. It has astringent properties, and is popularly used in diarrhea and hemorrhage.

2. In zoöl., a genus of fishes. Klein, 1749.—3. [l. c.] In anat., the leash of nerves in which the spinal cord ends; the cauda equina, or horsetail.

hippurite (hip'ū-rīt), n. and a. [< NL. Hippurites, q. v.] I. n. 1. A specimen or species of the family Hippuritidæ; one of the Rudistes; a horsetail. Hippurites were formerly classed by Lamarck and Latreille with belemnites, etc., as being cephalopods.—2. A kind of fossil cup-coral, Cyathophyllum ceratites of Goldfuss.

II. a. 1. Pertaining to or having the characters of the Hippuritidæ.—2. Same as hippuritic.

Hippurites (hip-ū-rī'tēz), n. [NL., < Gr. ἱππουρις, horse-tailed (see Hippuris), + -ites.] 1. In zoöl., the typical genus of Hippuritidæ. Lamarck, 1801.—2. In bot., a generic name given by Lindley and Hutton (1834) to remains of fossil plants found in the coal-measures of England. The name Hippurites was given to the genus because (as the authors remark) it resembles Hippuris "as much as it can be said to resemble anything now living." In accordance with the latest investigations, Hippurites is united with Equisetites and Calamocladus, genera of the order Equisetales.

hippuritic (hip-ū-rit'ik), a. [< hippurite + -ic.] Pertaining to hippurites; abounding in, characterized by, or containing hippurites, as certain cretaceous formations.

Hippuritic limestone had not been noticed on the eastern frontier. Encyc. Brit., XVIII. 622.

hippuritid (hi-pū'ri-tid), n. A bivalve mollusk of the family Hippuritidæ.

Hippuritidæ (hip-ū-rit'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Hippurites + -idæ.] A family of fossil bivalve mollusks, of the order Rudistes, named from the genus Hippurites; the hippurites or horse-tails. The various species of the family Hippuritidæ have shells with very unequal valves, fixed by one valve, and composed of two layers; the free valve has an internal layer perforated by canals, and an outer porous one; the attached valve has an internal lacunar layer and an outer layer grooved with vascular impressions. The species are characteristic of the Cretaceous epoch, and exhibit considerable diversity. The family is also limited by some to the genus Hippurites and closely related forms.

hippuritoid (hi-pū'ri-toid), a. Pertaining to or resembling the Hippuritidæ.

hippus (hip'us), n. [NL., < Gr. ἵππος (m. and f.), dial. ἴκκος = L. equus = AS. eoh, etc., a horse: see Equus.] In pathol., an affection of the eyes; clonic spasm of the iris.

hip-rafter (hip'räf/tėr), n. Same as angle-rafter. See hip[1], 4.—Back of a hip-rafter. See back[1].

hip-roof (hip'röf), n. A roof the ends of which rise immediately from the wall-plates with the same inclination to the horizon as its other two sides. Also called hipped roof. See cut on following page.

hip-rose (hip'rōz), n. Same as hip-brier.

hip-shot (hip'shot), a. Having the hip dislocated or shot out of place; hence, figuratively, lame; awkward.

Why do you go nodding and waggling so like a fool, as if you were hip-shot? says the goose to the gosling.
Sir R. L'Estrange.

Hip-roof, Union Theological Seminary, New York.
H, H, H, hips; h, h, hip-knobs.

The field this hip-shot grammarian cannot set into right frame of construction.
Milton, Apology for Smectymnuus.

hip-strap (hip′strap), n. The support of the breeching of a carriage- or wagon-harness. See cut under harness.

hipt, p. a. See hipped[2].

Hiptage (hip′tā-jē), n. [NL., said to be so called in allusion to the shape of the lateral petals, which appear like wings; being appar. (irreg.) < Gr. ἵπτασθαι, var. of πέτασθαι, fly.] A small genus of climbing shrubs, belonging to the family Malpighiaceæ, tribe Hiræeæ, proposed by Gärtner (1791), and type of the tribe Hiptageæ of de Candolle. It is characterized by a 5-parted calyx, with one large gland; unequal fringed petals; 10 fertile stamens, one larger than the rest; and a 3-lobed ovary, forming in fruit 3 carpels, each with 3 wings. The leaves are opposite, thick, and entire; the flowers are in racemes, and are white and fragrant. About 10 species are known, natives of tropical Africa.

Hiptageæ (hip-tā′jē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Hiptage + -eæ.] A tribe of plants belonging to the family Malpighiaceæ, proposed by de Candolle (1824), and typified by the genus Hiptage. By later authors it is not retained as a tribe, the genera it included being referred to the tribe Hiræeæ.

hip-tile (hip′tīl), n. A saddle-shaped tile used in covering the hips of roofs.

hip-tree (hip′trē), n. [Also written hep-tree; < ME. hepetre, < hepe, hip[2], + tre, tree.] The dogrose, Rosa canina.

hipwort (hip′wėrt), n. [See the quotation given below.] A British name for Umbilicus Umbilicus (Cotyledon Umbilicus of Linnæus).

Hipwort, from the resemblance of the leaf to the acetabulum or hip-socket, whence its former name of Herba coxendicum, or herb of the hips.
A. Prior, Popular Names of British Plants.

hirt, pron. See he[1].

Hiræa (hī-rē′ä), n. [NL., named after Jean Nicholas de la Hier, a French physician.] A large genus of dicotyledonous polypetalous plants, of the family Malpighiaceæ, the type of the tribe Hiræeæ, founded by Jacquin, 1760. They have a 5-parted calyx with 10, 8, or no glands; reflexed, clawed, denticulate, or entire petals; 10 perfect stamens, monadelphous at base; a 3-lobed ovary, forming in fruit 1 to 3 samaras; opposite or alternate, entire, 2-stipulate leaves; and yellow, rose, or lilac flowers in axillary umbels or racemes. They are mostly climbing shrubs, about 25 species being known, all from tropical America. The genus is known in a fossil state both by its fruit and by its leaves, and six species are described from the European Tertiaries, one of them occurring in the Eocene deposits in the Isle of Wight.

Hiræeæ (hī-rē′ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Hiræa + -eæ.] A tribe of plants of the family Malpighiaceæ, typified by the genus Hiræa. It is characterized by having perfect stamens; truncated styles; 1 to 3 samaras, each being 1- to 7-winged; stem usually climbing; leaves often alternate. The plants of this tribe are exclusively American.

hiragana (hē-rä-gä′nä), n. [Jap., < hira, plain, + kana, q. v.] The cursive form of Japanese writing, said to have been introduced by a Buddhist priest named Kuhai about the middle of the ninth century. It consists of abbreviated forms of a limited number of the more common Chinese characters, used phonetically, and is the style of letter commonly used in books and written documents. See kana and katakana.

The Japanese Hirakana Syllabary.
Isaac Taylor, The Alphabet, I. 14.

In ordinary letter-writing the cursive hand, more or less abbreviated, is employed, being supplemented, when required, by the hiragana. Encyc. Brit., XIII. 585.

hirchen†, hirchoun†, n. Obsolete forms of urchin, 1.

hircic (hėr′sik), a. [< L. hircus, a goat, + -ic.] Of or pertaining to a goat: applied in chemistry to a liquid fatty substance which was believed by the discoverer to be the odorous principle of mutton-suet, and which appears to be a mixture of several homologous fatty acids.

hircine (hėr′sin), a. [= F. hircine, < L. hircinus, hirquinus, of a goat, goatish, < hircus, a goat: see hircus.] Pertaining to or having the characteristics of a goat; like a goat; goatish; especially, having a rank smell like that of a goat.

Goat-like in aspect, and very hircine in many of its habits, the Chamois is often supposed to belong to the Goats rather than to the Antelopes.
J. G. Wood, Illus. Nat. Hist., p. 656.

The landlady . . . pulled a hircine man or two hither, and pushed a hircine man or two thither, with the impassive countenance of a housewife moving her furniture.
C. Reade, Cloister and Hearth, xxiv.

hircine (hėr′sin), n. [< L. hircus, a goat, + -ine[2]. Cf. hircine, a.] A fossil amorphous resin, the composition of which has not been determined.

Hircinia (hėr-sin′i-ä), n. [NL., < L. hircinus: see hircinous.] The typical genus of Hircinidæ. Nardo.

Hircinidæ (hėr-si-nī′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Hircinia + -idæ.] A family of ceratose sponges, of the order Cornacuspongiæ, typified by the genus Hircinia, having a narrow axial canal in the fibers, and filaments in the ground-substance. It is divided by Lendenfeld into the subfamilies Hircininæ and Hircinissinæ. Also Hircinidæ.

hircinous (hėr-sī′nus), a. [< L. hircinus, hirquinus, of a goat: see hircine.] In bot. and zoöl., smelling like a goat; having a hircine odor.

hircus (hėr′kus), n. [L. hircus, also hircuus and ircus, = Sabine fircus, a goat.] 1. In zoöl., a goat; the specific name of the domestic goat, Capra hircus, by some authors made a genus of goats.—2. [cap.] In astron., another name for the star Capella.

hirdy-girdy (hėr′di-gėr′di), adv. [Cf. hurdy-gurdy.] In confusion or disorder. [Scotch.]

He ventured back into the parlour, where a' was gaun hirdy-girdy—naebody to say "come in" or "gae out."
Scott, Redgauntlet, letter xi.

hire[1] (hīr), v. t.; pret. and pp. hired, ppr. hiring. [< ME. hiren, hyren, huren, < AS. hȳrian = OFries. hēra = D. huren = LG. hüren = MHG. hūren, G. heuern, dial. haudern (with epenthetic d) = Sw. hyra = Dan. hyre, hire; root unknown. The noun appears to be from the verb.] 1. To engage the use of for a consideration; agree to pay a price or give an equivalent for the use of: as, to hire a horse and carriage; to hire a house for a year.

For cariage the porter hors schalle hyre.

When scarce eleven years auld.
Mary Hamilton (Child's Ballads, III. 325).

He left his father's house,
And hired himself to work within the fields.
Tennyson, Dora.

=Syn. Hire, Let, Rent, Lease, Charter. The verb hire applies to both persons and property, but is appropriately used to designate the act of an employer, tenant, or bailee who engages some person or thing by a promise to pay hire. Let applies only to property, and only to the act of the owner or lessor. Rent and lease apply only to property, but are used indifferently of the act of the owner or lessor and that of the tenant. Charter is used only of vessels (and colloquially of railroad-cars and -engines), but is used appropriately of the act of the hirer, not that of the lessor, unless so indicated by the context. See employ.

hire[1] (hīr), n. [< ME. hire, hyre, hure, here, < AS. hȳr (gen. hȳre) = OFries. hēre = D. huur = LG. hüre = G. heuer = Sw. hyra = Dan. hyre, hire, rent, wage, service: see the verb.] 1. A price, reward, or compensation paid or contracted to be given for the use of something.

Owners of [knitting] frames who, though they did not themselves exercise the trade, let frames out on hire.
English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), Int., p. clxxx.

2. A reward or recompense paid for personal service; wages.

The labourer is worthy of his hire. Luke x. 7.

[The Shekh] had offered to carry me the same journey with all my people and baggage without hire.
Bruce, Source of the Nile, I. 67.

The thrifty hire I sav'd under your father.
Shak., As you Like it, ii. 3.

3. Compensation in general; reward.

For to gete of Fames hire,
The temple [of Diana] sette I al afire.
Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 1857.

Of certain turbulent wits it is said, . . . they thought the very disturbance of things established an hire sufficient to set them on work. Hooker, Eccles. Polity, i. 7.

On hire, for hiring.

To keep one's conscience, too, on hire, as that drunken Isham down there at the livery-stable does a horse.
W. M. Baker, New Timothy, p. 161.

=Syn. Wages, Pay, etc. (see salary), remuneration.

hire[2]†, pron. See he[1].

The hireling longs to see the shades descend,
That with the tedious day his toil might end,
And he his pay receive. Sandys, Paraphrase of Job.

2. A mercenary; one who acts only with a view to reward or material benefit.

The hireling fleeth, because he is an hireling, and careth not for the sheep. John x. 13.

So clomb this first grand thief into God's fold;
So since into his church lewd hirelings climb.
Milton, P. L., iv. 193.

If the patriot's pulses sleep,
How vain the watch that hirelings keep.
O. W. Holmes, Qui Vive.

II. a. Serving for wages; employed for money or other compensation; venal; mercenary.

The fiery duke is pricking fast across Saint André's plain,
With all the hireling chivalry of Guelders and Almayne.
Macaulay, Battle of Ivry.

The slavish priest
Sets no great value on his hireling faith.
Shelley, Queen Mab, v.

=Syn. Mercenary, etc. See venal.

hireman (hīr′man), n.; pl. hiremen (-men). [< hire[1] + man.] A hired servant; a retainer. [Obsolete or Scotch.]

He then took off the scarlet coat,
Bedeck'd wi' shinin' gold,
And has put on the hireman's coat,
To keip him frae the cold.
The Hireman Chiel (Child's Ballads, VIII. 234).

Hiren† (hī′ren), n. [A corruption of Irene, a fem. name: see Irene.] The name of a female character in Peele's play of "The Turkish Mahomet and the fair Hiren," used allusively by Shakspere and other old dramatists in the bombast put into the mouths of various characters.

Down, down, dogs! down, faitors! Have we not Hiren here? Shak., 2 Hen. IV., ii. 4.

hirer (hīr′ėr), n. One who hires.

hireselvet, hireselvent, pron. Middle English forms of herself. Chaucer.

hiring (hīr′ing), n. [Verbal n. of hire[1], v.] 1. In law, a name of a class of contracts of bailment for compensation, including those in which the bailee gains the temporary use of the thing for a compensation paid by him, and those in which he is to bestow labor on it, or transport it, for a compensation to be paid to him: corresponding to the locatum of the civil law.—2. A fair or market for servants, at which bargains for their services are made. [Prov. Eng.]

At fairs, as well as hirings, it is customary for all the young people in the neighbourhood to assemble and dance at the inns and alehouses. Hone's Every-Day Book, II. 668.

hirling, n. See herling.

hirmologion (hir-mō-lō′gi-on), n.; pl. hirmologia (-ä). [< MGr. εἱρμολόγιον, εἱρμολόγιον, a collection of hirmoi, < εἱρμός, hirmos, + -λογιον, < λέγειν, say.] In the Gr. Ch., an office-book containing the hirmoi, usually also the prayers at the elevation of the panagia (see panagia), and some other forms.

hirmos, hirmus (hir′mos, hėr′mus), n.; pl. hirmoi, hirmi (-moi, -mī). [LL. hirmos, < Gr. εἱρμός, a series, connection, context, in LGr., etc., used specifically as in def. (the exact reason being uncertain); < εἴρειν = L. serere, fasten together, join: see series and sermon, from the L. verb.] In the hymnology of the Greek Church, the first strophe or stanza of a standard or original ode in a canon of odes, serving as a rhythmical and musical model for the other stanzas (troparia), both of its own ode and of others in the same rhythm. In the office-books it is inclosed in inverted commas, and is given in full only at the head of its own ode, the initial words alone being prefixed to other odes. A hirmos is sometimes said at the end of its ode.

hirondelle (hir-on-del′), n. [F., a swallow, dim., < L. hirundo, a swallow: see hirundo.] In her., a swallow used as a bearing.

The swallow, or hirondelle, forms the very early coat of the Arundels. Encyc. Brit., XI. 701.

hirple (hėr′pl), v. i.; pret. and pp. hirpled, ppr. hirpling. [Origin obscure.] To halt; walk as if lame. [Scotch.]

The hares were hirplin down the furs [furrows].
Burns, Holy Fair.

His aged grandmother was wont to hirple out to the Lindsaylands road to meet him on his way home.
Quoted in Dr. J. Brown's Spare Hours, 3d ser., p. 333.

hirse (hėrs), n. [Also written hyrse; = Dan. hirse = Sw. hirs, < G. hirse, hirsche, MHG. hirse, hirs, OHG. hirsi, hirso, millet; origin obscure.] The broom-corn, Andropogon Sorghum (Sorghum vulgare), often called millet or Indian millet. Also the true millet, Panicum miliaceum.

hirsel[1] (hir′sel), n. [Sc.; also written hirsle, hirsell, hirsale, hirdsell (the last appar. in simulation of hird, herd[1]); origin uncertain.] 1. A multitude; a throng: applied to living creatures of any kind. [Scotch.]

"Jock, man," said he, "ye're just telling a hirsel o' een down lees [lies]." Hogg, Brownie, I. 160.

Specifically—2. A flock of sheep. [Scotch.]

Come from the hills where your hirsels are grazing.
Scott, March, March.

hirsel[2] (hėr′sl), v. i.; pret. and pp. hirseled or hirselled, ppr. hirseling or hirselling. [Sc.; also written hirsle; origin obscure.] To slide or move by pushing one's self along on the back or haunches; also, to move forward with a rustling noise along a rough surface. [Scotch.]

So he sat himsell doun and hirselled doun into the glen, where it wad hae been ill following him wi' the beast.
Scott, Guy Mannering, xxxv.

hirselve†, pron. A Middle English form of herself. Chaucer.

hirst† (hėrst), n. A former spelling of hurst.

hirsute (hėr-sūt′), a. [= F. hirsute = Sp. Pg. hirsuto = It. irsuto, < L. hirsutus, rough, shaggy, bristly: cf. hirtus, rough, hairy, shaggy; perhaps ult. akin to horrere, bristle: see horrent, horrid.] 1. Hairy; shaggy.

Suppose thou saw her in a base beggar's weed, or else dressed in some old hirsute attires out of fashion.
Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 554.

Wearing his hair and beard unshorn, according to ancient Batavian custom, until the death of his relative, Egmont, should have been expiated, . . . this hirsute and savage corsair seemed an embodiment of vengeance.
Motley, Dutch Republic, II. 350.

2. Specifically, in zoöl. and bot., rough or bristling with hairs; having a thick covering of long and rather stiff hairs.—3†. Coarse; boorish; unmannerly.

He looked elderly, was cynical and hirsute in his behaviour. Life of A. Wood, p. 109.

hirsuteness (hėr-sūt′nes), n. The state of being hirsute; hairiness.

Leanness, hirsuteness, broad veins, much hair on the brow, &c., show melancholy. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 59.

hirsuties (hėr-sū′ti-ēz), n. [NL., < L. hirsutus, hairy: see hirsute.] A thick covering of hair; abnormal hairiness.

hirsutocinereous (hėr-sū″tō-si-nē′rē-us), a. [< L. hirsutus, hairy, + cinereus, ashy.] In entom., hirsute with cinereous hairs. This and similar compounds, as hirsuto-atrous, hirsutocastaneous, etc., indicate color arising from the hairy covering, and not from the integument.

hirtellous (hėr-tel′us), a. Minutely hirsute.

Hirudinacea (hi-rö-di-nā′sē-ä), n. pl. [NL. (Grube), < Hirudo (-din-) + -acea.] A primary division or "tribe" of leeches, characterized by the non-protrusile proboscis, and comprising most of the order Hirudinea.

Hirudinea (hir-ö-din′ē-ä), n. pl. [NL., < Hirudo (-din-) + -ea.] An order of annelids having a sucking-disk at one or both ends; the leeches or suctorial annelids. They are hermaphrodite and ametabolous, mostly aquatic and found in fresh water, but sometimes marine or terrestrial, with only superficial annulation, and not chætiferous. There are several families, as Acanthobdellidæ, Malacobdellidæ, Branchiobdellidæ, Gnathobdellidæ. The group is also called Hirudina, Hirudineæ, Hirudinei, as well as Discophora, Suctoria, and Bdelloidea. The Hirudinea are sometimes raised to the rank of a class; ranged with Cestoidea, Trematoidea, and the turbellarians under a phylum Platyhelmia, and divided into two orders, Rhynchobdella and Gnathobdella.

hirudinid (hi-rö′di-nid), n. A leech of the family Hirudinidæ.

Hirudinidæ (hir-ö-din′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Hirudo (-din-) + -idæ.] A family of leeches, named from the genus Hirudo. The oral sucker is incomplete, continuous with the body, and formed by a molding of the anterior rings; the gullet is short, and the anus very small. "Cutting into the skin, they suck the blood of vertebrate animals, and only fall away when gorged. The alimentary canal is deeply incised and lobed, with the hinder pair of lobes elongated in an intestinal manner. In these the blood will often remain for days and weeks undigested." (G. Johnston, 1865.) Also called Gnathobdellidæ.

Hirudo (hi-rö′dō), n. [L., a leech, also called sanguisuga.] A representative genus of leeches, giving name to the family Hirudinidæ and order Hirudinea. H. medicinalis or officinalis is the common medical leech, now usually referred to a family called Gnathobdellidæ. See leech.

hirundine (hi-run′din), a. and n. [< L. hirundineus, of the swallow, < hirundo, a swallow: see Hirundo.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the swallow; swallow-like; specifically, pertaining to the Hirundinidæ.

Activity almost super-hirundine.
Carlyle, Sartor Resartus, ii. 2.

II. n. A swallow; one of the Hirundinidæ.

Hirundinidæ (hir-un-din′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Hirundo (-din-) + -idæ.] A family of fissirostral oscine passerine birds; the swallows. They have 9 primaries, a short, flat, wide, deeply cleft bill, long pointed wings, a diversiform tail, usually forked or emarginate, small feet, and a lithe slender body. There are about 100 species of the family, divided into numerous modern genera, all insectivorous, migratory, and great flyers. Leading genera are Hirundo, Chelidon, Petrochelidon, Cotile (or Clivicola), Stelgidopteryx, Atticora, and Progne. See swallow, martin.

Hirundo (hi-run′dō), n. [L., = Gr. χελιδών, a swallow.] A genus of swallows, typical of the family Hirundinidæ. The tail is deeply forficate, with attenuated lateral feathers about as long as the wings; the upper parts are glossy and dark-colored, the lower rufous with a pectoral collar; the sexes are similar; and the eggs are colored. The barn-swallows now compose this genus, such as H. rustica of Europe and H. erythrogastra of America; but it was formerly more than conterminous with the family Hirundinidæ. See cut under barn-swallow.

his[1] (hiz), pron. The possessive (genitive) masculine (and formerly also neuter) of he[1].

his[2]† (hiz), pron. [ME. his, rare in this use.] A perverted form of the genitive inflection -s, -'s, Middle English and early modern English -es, -is (see -es[1] and -s[1]), which was confused with the genitive pronoun his, and became common especially after nouns whose nominatives end in -s. This use was very frequent in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, particularly after Greek and Latin names in -es or -us, as Artaxerxes his crown, Brutus his virtue, etc. The use came to be recognized as erroneous, and died out in the first half of the eighteenth century.

The statue of Hersilia, Romulus his wife, is made in brasse. Coryat, Crudities, I. 36.

My paper is the Ulysses his bow, in which every man of wit or learning may try his strength.
Addison, Guardian, No. 98.

By young Telemachus his blooming years.
Pope, Odyssey.

[The use naturally extended to the feminine gender and the plural number:

Sarai her name is changed. Gen. xvii., Contents.

By Ronix her womanish subtlety. Drayton, Polyolbion.

About the lawfulness of the Hollanders their throwing off the monarchy of Spain. Welwood, Memoirs.]

hish (hish), v. i. [< ME. hisshen, var. of hissen, hiss; cf. hush, 'sh, etc.] To hiss; make a sibilant sound by expelling the breath forcibly through the closed teeth.

The clear truth so manifestly proved that they cannot once hish against it. Tyndale, Works, I. 432.

Mumps [a dog] knows his company—he does. I might hish at him by th' hour together before he'd fly at a real gentlewoman like you.
George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, v. 2.

hisingerite (his′ing-gėr-īt), n. [Named after W. Hisinger (1766–1852), a Swedish chemist and mineralogist.] A hydrous iron silicate, occurring in amorphous compact masses of a black to brownish-black color and conchoidal fracture, in various localities of Scandinavia.

hisn (hizn), pron. [Also written his'n; a popular formation, like hern, ourn, yourn, theirn, etc., not, as sometimes explained, a contraction of his own, etc., but in imitation of mine, thine, etc., with formative -n.] Same as his[1] in its predicate use. [Prov. Eng. and U. S.]

An' every feller felt ez though all Mexico wuz his'n.
Lowell, Biglow Papers, i. 21.

★ Hispa (his′pä), n. [NL., abbr. < L. hispidus, hairy, bristly: see hispid.] The typical genus of chrysomelid beetles of the subfamily Hispinæ. The front is inflexed; the mouth is on the under side of the head, which is not covered by the thorax; the sides of the elytra and thorax are not expanded, and their upper surface is armed with long spines, whence the name. H. atra, occurring over a large part of Europe, is about 5 millimeters long, of a black color, and has the spines of the elytra disposed in 4 more or less regular rows.

Hispa atra, natural size.

Hispanic (his-pan′ik), a. [< L. Hispanicus, Spanish, < Hispania, Spain: see Spanish.] Pertaining to Spain or its people; particularly, pertaining to ancient Spain (Hispania).

Hispanicism (his-pan′i-sizm), n. [< Hispanic + -ism.] A Spanish phrase or idiom.

There are likewise numerous hispanicisms. Keightley.

Temple had . . . gradually formed a style singularly lucid and melodious, superficially deformed indeed by gallicisms and hispanicisms picked up in travel or in negotiation, but at the bottom pure English.
Macaulay, Sir William Temple.

Hispanicize (his-pan′i-sīz), v. t.; pret. and pp. Hispanicized, ppr. Hispanicizing. [< Hispanic + -ize.] To render Spanish in character.

Several [tribes] have totally disappeared as separate unities; others have been in large measure Hispanicized both in language and in habits. Encyc. Brit., VI. 155.

Hispaniolate (his-pan′i-ō-lāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. Hispaniolated, ppr. Hispaniolating. [After Sp. españolado, pp. of españolar, make Spanish, < Español, Spanish, < España, < L. Hispania, Spain.] Same as Hispaniolize.

The Hispaniolated counsellors of Duke John.
Motley, United Netherlands, III. 454.

Hispaniolize (his-pan′i-ō-līz), v. t.; pret. and pp. Hispaniolized, ppr. Hispaniolizing. [After Sp. españolizar, < Español, Spanish: see Hispaniolate.] To imbue with Spanish sentiments.

He had . . . become Hispaniolized under the . . . treatment of the King and the Jesuits.
Motley, United Netherlands, I. 15.

Hispano-Gallican (his-pan′ō-gal′i-kan), a. [< L. Hispanicus, Hispanic, Spanish, + Gallicus, Gallic, French.] Belonging in common to Hispania, or Spain, and Gaul, or France.—Hispano-Gallican group or family (of liturgies). See Gallican liturgies, under Gallican.

hispid (his′pid), a. [= F. hispide = Sp. hispido = Pg. hispido = It. ispido, < L. hispidus, rough, shaggy, hairy, bristly. From the same ult. source, E. hidous, hideous, q. v.] Hairy; rough; shaggy; bristly.

John of the wilderness? the hairy child?
The hispid Thesbite? or what satyr wild?
More, Verses. Preface to Hall's Poems (1646).

Specifically—(a) In bot., having strong hairs or bristles; beset with stiff bristles. (b) In entom., closely covered with small angular prominences; rough with minute spines or very rigid bristles.

Hispidæ (his′pi-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Hispa + -idæ.] The leaf-beetles, Hispinæ, rated as a family.

hispidating (his′pi-dā-ting), a. [< hispid + -ate[2] + -ing[2].] Bristling. Sollas.

hispidity (his-pid′i-ti), n. [< hispid + -ity.] The state of being hispid.

The hispidity or hairiness of his skin.
Dr. H. More, Mystery of Godliness, III. vi. § 5.

hispidulous (his-pid′ū-lus), a. [< NL. hispidulus*, dim. of L. hispidus, hairy: see hispid.] In bot., having short stiff hairs.

Hispinæ (his-pī′nē), n. pl. [NL., ⟨ Hispa + -inæ.] A subfamily of Chrysomelidæ, typified by the genus Hispa, containing numerous genera and species whose larvæ mine the leaves of various plants, and are popularly known as leaf-beetles. See cut under Hispa.

hiss (his), v. [⟨ ME. hissen, hyssen, rarely hisshen (⟩ E. dial. hish), ⟨ AS. hysian (rare) = LG. hissen, ūt-hissen = OD. hisschen = Dan. hysse = Sw. hysa, hiss: cf. hush, hist[1], hizz, also fizz, sizzle (D. sissen, G. zischen, etc.), whizz, whistle, etc.; all ult. imitative of sibilation.] I. intrans. 1. To make or emit a sound like a prolonged enunciation of s, as a serpent or a goose; utter or send forth a long-drawn sibilation; hence, to emit any similar sound, as water thrown on hot metal, or as steam rushing through a small orifice; specifically (of persons), to express disapprobation or contempt by uttering such a sound.

> The merchants among the people shall hiss at thee. Ezek. xxvii. 36.
>
> When roasted crabs hiss in the bowl,
> Then nightly sings the staring owl.
> Shak., L. L. L., v. 2 (song).
>
> I do feel the brand
> Hissing already at my forehead; now
> Mine ears are boring. B. Jonson, Volpone, iii. 6.
>
> Hiss, snake — I saw him there —
> Let the fox bark, let the wolf yell.
> Tennyson, Pelleas and Ettarre.

2. To whizz, as an arrow or other thing in rapid flight.

> Burning Balls hiss harmless by.
> Congreve, Taking of Namure.
>
> The spear
> Hiss'd and went quivering down into the sand,
> Which it sent flying wide.
> M. Arnold, Sohrab and Rustum.

II. trans. To condemn or express disapproval of by hissing.

> Mal. What's the newest grief?
> Rosse. That of an hour's age doth hiss the speaker;
> Each minute teems a new one. Shak., Macbeth, iv. 3.
>
> You'll utterly spoil our play, and make it to be hissed.
> Beau. and Fl., Knight of Burning Pestle, iii. 3.
>
> Such Work by Hireling Actors shou'd be done, > Whom you may Clap or Hiss for half a Crown.
> Prior, Prol. to the Orphan.

hiss (his), n. [⟨ hiss, v.] A continued sound like that of s; a prolonged sibilation produced by the organs of utterance, or any similar sound: as, a serpent's hiss. It is a common expression of disapprobation or contempt.

> He would have spoke,
> But hiss for hiss return'd with forked tongue
> To forked tongue. Milton, P. L., x. 518.
>
> Thus was the applause they meant > Turn'd to exploding hiss, triumph to shame
> Cast on themselves from their own mouths.
> Milton, P. L., x. 546.
>
> The hot hiss
> And bustling whistle of the youth who scour'd > His master's armour. Tennyson, Geraint.

hisser (his′ėr), n. One who or that which hisses.

> Begone, then, take flight, thou venomous hisser, thou lying worm. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXXIV. 442.

hissing (his′ing), n. [⟨ ME. hissinge, hyssinge, rarely hisshing; verbal n. of hiss, v.] 1. A hiss.

> Therfore thei speke not, but thei maken a maner of hissynge, as a Neddre dothe. Mandeville, Travels, p. 205.
>
> I heard a hissing: there are serpents here!
> Goldsmith, Prol. to Zobeide.

2. An occasion of contempt; an object of scorn and derision.

> I will make this city desolate, and an hissing.
> Jer. xix. 8.
> Has he all that the world loves and admires and covets? —he must cast behind him their admiration . . . and become a byword and a hissing. Emerson, Compensation.

hist[1] (hist), interj. [Formerly also ist; a more substantial form of 'st, as hish, hush, of 'sh: see 'st, 'sh, and hish, hush, whist, etc.] A sibilant utterance used to attract attention and command or suggest silence.

> Hist! 'st, 'st, hark! Why, there's a cadence able to ravish the dullest stoic. A. Brewer (?), Lingua, iii. 7.
> Houische (an interjection whereby silence is imposed), husht, whist, ist, not a word for your life. Cotgrave.
>
> The knight whispered me, "Hist, these are lovers."
> Steele, Spectator, No. 118.

hist[1] (hist), v. t. [⟨ hist[1], interj. Cf. hish, v.] To incite, as a dog, by making a sibilant sound.

> Lest they should be out, or faint, or cold,
> Their innocent clients hist them on with gold.
> Middleton, Father Hubbard's Tales.

[In the following passage hist is apparently the imperative of the verb, but it is peculiarly used, perhaps like whist as used also by Milton as an apparent past participle ("the winds with wonder whist").

> But first and chiefest with thee bring . . .
> The Cherub Contemplation,
> And the mute Silence hist along.
> Milton, Il Penseroso, l. 55.]

hist[2] (hīst), v. and n. A common dialectal form of hoist.

hist. An abbreviation of history, historical.

Hister (his′tėr), n. [NL., ⟨ hister, orig. (Etruscan) form of L. histrio, a stage-player: see histrion.] The typical genus of the family Histeridæ. H. helluo is an example.

Histeridæ (his-ter′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., ⟨ Hister + -idæ.] A family of clavicorn Coleoptera, typified by the genus Hister, having geniculate antennæ. The larvæ are long, with horny head and prothorax, and no ocelli. They are small beetles, for the most part round, hard, and seed-like in appearance. They generally live upon decaying animal or vegetable matter. The same or similar groups are known as Histerida, Histerini, Histerites, and Histeroides.

histie (his′ti), a. [Origin obscure.] Dry; barren. [Scotch.]

> Adorns the histie stibble-field.
> Burns, Mountain Daisy.

histioid (his′ti-oid), a. [⟨ Gr. ἱστίον, dim. of ἱστός, a web, tissue, + εἶδος, form.] Resembling tissue; having a superficial resemblance to tissue.

histiology (his-ti-ol′ō-ji), n. [⟨ Gr. ἱστίον, dim. of ἱστός, a web, tissue (see histioid), + -λογία, ⟨ λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] Same as histology.

Histiophoridæ (his″ti-ō-for′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., ⟨ Histiophorus + -idæ.] A family of scombroid acanthopterygian fishes, the sail-fishes, spear-fishes, or bill-fishes, near relatives of the true sword-fishes, Xiphiidæ. The body is elongated and more or less compressed; the snout is prolonged into an ensiform weapon; there is a long and sometimes very large spinous dorsal fin, or "sail"; and the ventral fins are modified into long slender spines, with at least one soft ray. The leading genera are Histiophorus and Tetrapturus. The species inhabit warm seas and are of large size, though smaller than the sword-fish. See cuts under sail-fish and spear-fish.

Histiophorus (his-ti-of′ō-rus), n. [NL., ⟨ Gr. ἱστίον, a sail, a sheet, a web (see histioid), + φέρειν = L. ferre = E. bear[1].] 1. The typical genus of Histiophoridæ. H. nigricans is the common sail-fish, spear-fish, or bill-fish. See cut under sail-fish. Originally written Istiophorus. — 2. A genus of mammals. J. E. Gray, 1838. [In senses 1 and 2 also written Istiophorus.] — 3. A genus of mollusks. Pease, 1860.

Histiurus (his-ti-ū′rus), n. [NL., ⟨ Gr. ἱστίον, a sail (see histioid), + οὐρά, tail.] 1. A notable genus of lizards, with a dorsal and a caudal crest, the latter highly developed. The sail-lizard of Amboyna, H. amboinensis, is an enormous tree-lizard about 4 feet long. Also written Istiurus. G. Cuvier, 1829.

Sail-lizard (Histiurus amboinensis).

2. A genus of fishes. Costa, 1850.

histochemical (his-tō-kem′i-kal), a. [⟨ Gr. ἱστός, a web, tissue (see histoid), + E. chemical.] Of or pertaining to histochemistry.

> Turning now to the chemical constitution of the animal cell, we find ourselves entering upon a field of histochemical inquiry of which little is known.
> Frey, Histol. and Histochem. (trans.), p. 72.

histochemistry (his-tō-kem′is-tri), n. [⟨ Gr. ἱστός, a web, tissue, + E. chemistry.] That branch of chemistry which treats of the chemical ingredients and constitution of the structural elements or tissues of the animal body, as well as of their decomposition products.

histodialysis (his″tō-dī-al′i-sis), n. [⟨ Gr. ἱστός, a web, tissue, + διάλυσις, dissolution: see dialysis.] A morbid dissolution of the tissues. Dunglison.

histogenesis (his-tō-jen′e-sis), n. [⟨ Gr. ἱστός, a web, tissue, + γένεσις, generation.] Same as histogeny.

> The development of the spinal cord in Mammals differs in no important respects from that of the chick, and we have nothing to add to the account we have already given of its general development and histogenesis in that animal.
> Foster, Embryology, II. xii. 367.

histogenetic (his″tō-jē-net′ik), a. [⟨ histogeny: see genetic.] Pertaining to histogeny or histogenesis; relating to the formation of tissue: as, a histogenetic process or result; a histogenetic cell.

> In certain of the lower animals, the substance of the body is not differentiated into histogenetic elements: that is, into cells which, by their metamorphoses, give rise to tissues. Huxley, Encyc. Brit., II. 50.

histogenetically (his″tō-jē-net′i-kal-i), adv. From a histogenetic point of view.

> They [connective tissues] are, as Rindfleisch points out, intimately bound up with the plasmatic circulation or the ultimate diffusion of the juices; they are in closest relation with the terminal nerve-plexuses; and, histogenetically, they are the remains of that "parablastic" embryonic tissue from which the blood channels themselves were made. Encyc. Brit., XVIII. 400.

histogenic (his-tō-jen′ik), a. [⟨ histogeny + -ic.] Productive of tissue; specifically, of or pertaining to histogeny; histogenetic.

histogeny (his-toj′e-ni), n. [⟨ Gr. ἱστός, a web, tissue, + -γένεια, ⟨ -γενής, producing: see -gen.] The origination and development or formation of organic tissues or textures; the fabrication by cells of cells and cell-products; the integration, differentiation, and specialization of structural form-elements. Also histogenesis.

histographic (his-tō-graf′ik), a. [⟨ histography + -ic.] Pertaining to histography.

histography (his-tog′ra-fi), n. [⟨ Gr. ἱστός, a web, tissue, + -γραφία, ⟨ γράφειν, write.] A description of organic tissues; also, an account of histogenetic processes.

histohematin, histohæmatin (his-tō-hem′a-tin), n. [⟨ Gr. ἱστός, a web, tissue, + αἷμα(τ-), blood, + -in[2]. Cf. hematin.] One of a series of animal coloring matters or pigmentary substances found in invertebrates. See myohematin.

> This paper contains an account of observations made on the spectra of the organs and tissues of invertebrates and vertebrates, which have brought to light the presence of a series of animal colouring matters which had not previously been discovered. The name histohæmatins is proposed for all these colouring matters, and that of myohæmatin for the intrinsic pigment occurring in striped muscle which belongs to the same series.
> Dr. C. A. MacMunn, Proc. Roy. Soc., XXXIX. 248.

histoid (his′toid), a. [⟨ Gr. ἱστός, a web (in mod. physiol. a tissue), prop. the (upright) beam of a loom, hence the warp fixed to the beam, the web, etc. (⟨ ἱστασθαι, stand, = E. stand), + εἶδος, form.] Like or involving organic tissue; particularly, of the connective-tissue group. — Histoid tumor, a tumor composed of tissue of the connective-tissue group, such as a sarcoma, fibroma, myxoma, or lipoma.

histologic (his-tō-loj′ik), a. [⟨ histology + -ic.] Of or pertaining to histology: as, histologic investigations.

> Nerve-tubes with their contained protein-threads, and nerve-cells with their contained and surrounding masses of changing protein-substance, are the histologic elements of which the nervous system is built up.
> H. Spencer, Prin. of Psychol., § 10.

histological (his-tō-loj′i-kal), a. [⟨ histologic + -al.] Same as histologic.

histologically (his-tō-loj′i-kal-i), adv. In a histological way, mode, or manner; with reference to histology.

histologist (his-tol′ō-jist), n. [⟨ histology + -ist.] One who is versed in histology; a microscopic anatomist.

histology (his-tol′ō-ji), n. [⟨ Gr. ἱστός, a web, tissue, + -λογία, ⟨ λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] That branch of anatomy which is concerned with the structure, especially the microscopic structure, of the various tissues of the body; histomorphology. Vegetable histology is that branch of histology which is concerned with the microscopic structure of the tissues of plants. Sometimes written histiology.

histolysis (his-tol′i-sis), n. [NL., ⟨ Gr. ἱστός, a web, tissue, + λύσις, solution, ⟨ λύειν, loose, dissolve.] Degeneration, disintegration, or dissolution of organic tissue; destruction of histologic continuity by the decay or death of cells and cell-products.

histolytic (his-tō-lit′ik), a. [⟨ histolysis (-lyt-) + -ic.] Of or pertaining to histolysis; characterized by decay or dissolution of tissue: as, histolytic changes in the tissues.

histomorphological (his-tō-môr-fō-loj′i-kal), a. [⟨ histomorphology + -ic-al.] Pertaining to the morphology of organic tissues.

> But there are to be noted other histomorphological particulars which are presented, of clear significance.
> Alien. and Neurol., IV. 387.

histomorphology (his″tō-môr-fol′ō-ji), n. [⟨ Gr. ἱστός, a web, tissue, + E. morphology, q. v.] The morphology of organic tissues; histology, with special reference to the forms assumed by various tissues.

histonomy (his-ton′ō-mi), n. [< Gr. ἱστός, a web, tissue, + νόμος, a law.] The laws of the formation and arrangement of the organic tissues.

Histopedes, Histopodes (his-top′e-dēz, -ō-dēz), n. pl. [Prop. Histopodes; < Gr. ἱστάναι, cause to stand, set up (cf. ἱστός, anything set up, a mast, loom, etc.), + πούς (ποδ-), L. pes (ped-) = E. foot.] A name applied to the Eunomians, who in the practice of baptism immersed the head and breast and held the feet in the air.

histophyly (his′tō-fī-li), n. [NL., < Gr. ἱστός, a web, tissue, + φυλή, a tribe.] The comparative history of organic tissues within the limits of a given phylum or tribe of animals. [Rare.]

Tribal history of the cells, hardly attempted as yet, . . . histophyly. Haeckel, Evol. of Man (trans.), I. 24.

histophysiological (his-tō-fiz″i-ō-loj′i-kal), a. [< Gr. ἱστός, tissue, + E. physiological, q. v.] Of or pertaining to the physiology or functional activity of the tissues of the body.

Histophysiological researches on the extension of the nerves in the muscles.
R. Mayo, Jour. Roy. Micros. Soc., 2d ser., VI. 365.

Histopodes, n. pl. See Histopedes.

historial† (his-tō′ri-al), a. [< ME. historial, storial, < OF. historial, istorial, F. historial (rare) = Sp. Pg. historial = It. istoriale, < LL. historialis, historical, < L. historia, history: see history.] Historical.

This is no fable,
But knowen for historial thyng notable.
Chaucer, Doctor's Tale, l. 156.

Adding within our hearts historial
High epithets past hyperbolical.
Ford, Fame's Memorial.

historian (his-tō′ri-an), n. [Formerly historien; < OF. historien, a. and n., F. historien, < ML. as if historianus*, < L. historia, history: see history.] 1. A writer, compiler, or narrator of history.

Dubb'd historians by express command,
To enrol your triumphs o'er the seas and land.
Pope, Imit. of Horace, II. i. 372.

Historian, who . . . hast . . . vouchsafed
This friendly condescension to relate Things else by me unsearchable.
Milton, P. L., viii. 7.

2. One who is versed in history. [Rare.]

Great captains should be good historians. South.

historiated (his-tō′ri-ā-ted), a. [< ML. historiatus, pp. of historiare, narrate, depict: see history, v.] Decorated with figures of animals, flowers, human beings, etc., as the large illuminated letters of medieval manuscripts, and in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries woodcut initial-letters for books, or as surface-ornament in carving, etc. A distinction is sometimes made between such ornament containing figures of men and animals, which is distinctively called historiated, and that made up merely of flowers, etc., which is called floreated.

historic (his-tor′ik), a. [< F. historique = Sp. histórico = Pg. historico = It. istorico (cf. D. G. historisch = Dan. Sw. historisk), < L. historicus, < Gr. ἱστορικός, < ἱστορία, history: see history.] 1. Of or pertaining to history or historians; containing or conveying history.

Here, rising bold, the patriot's honest face;
There, warriors frowning in historic brass.
Pope, Epistle to Addison, l. 58.

The vast power and domination of the Roman empire . . . have dazzled the historic eye.
De Quincey, Philos. of Roman Hist.

A hoard of tales that dealt with knights, Half-legend, half-historic.
Tennyson, Princess, Prol.

To be really historic, I should have mentioned that before going to look for the Rhone I had spent part of the evening on the opposite side of the little place.
H. James, Jr., Little Tour, p. 193.

2. Noted or famous in history.

My first introduction to the historic scenes which have since engaged so many years of my life must be ascribed to an accident. Gibbon, Memoirs.

historical (his-tor′i-kal), a. [< historic + -al.] 1. Of, pertaining to, or connected with history; containing or of the nature or character of history: as, a historical poem; historical evidence; a historical chart.

The best actors in the world, either for tragedy, comedy, . . . historical-pastoral, . . . or poem unlimited.
Shak., Hamlet, ii. 2.

In this view of a supreme divinity he [Julian] made an approach to the Christian monotheism, but substituted an airy myth and pantheistic fancy for the only true and living God and the personal historical Christ.
Schaff, Hist. Christ. Church, III. § 4.

The English Constitution . . . is merely a collection of historical precedents, and for that reason it is held in highest reverence. Stillé, Stud. Med. Hist., p. 189.

2. Narrated or mentioned in history; belonging to the past, and mentioned or used at present only with reference to the past. In this sense the terms of archæology, ancient and medieval art, law, etc., as used in modern books with reference to the past, are historical, and are thus distinguished from obsolete words, such as have no present use at all.

3. In philos., pertaining to things learned from the testimony of others or by our own senses. —4. In gram., used in statement of past facts or narration of past events: as, a historical tense. The historical present is the present tense used in vivid narration, as in the following passage: "And, behold, there cometh one of the rulers of the synagogue, Jairus by name; and when he saw him, he fell at his feet." (Mark v. 22.) In Greek grammar the tenses purely past in meaning—that is, the imperfect, aorist (English simple preterit without have), and the pluperfect indicative—are called historical tenses, as distinguished from the present, future, and perfect (English preterit with have), the perfect not being accounted a past tense. (See perfect.) In Latin, also, the corresponding tenses are called historical, and, as the Latin perfect answers in meaning both to the Greek aorist and to the Greek perfect, when used as an aorist it is distinguished as the historical perfect. The infinitive can be used in Latin in narration, and is then called the historical infinitive.—Historical cognition, credibility, geography, etc. See the nouns.—Historical method. (a) The study of an abstract theory in the light of the history of the object to be investigated. (b) In hydrodynamics, the Lagrangian method, which considers the path of each particle.—Historical school, in jurisprudence, the school of jurists who maintain that law is not to be regarded as made by commands of the sovereign, but is, like the language of a nation, the result of its historical and social circumstances. The principal authors of this school are Savigny and Puchta.

historically (his-tor′i-kal-i), adv. In the manner of history; according to history; as history; by way of narration.

The gospels . . . do all historically declare something which our Lord Jesus Christ himself either spoke, did, or suffered. Hooker, Eccles. Polity.

historicalness (his-tor′i-kal-nes), n. Historical character or quality.

historician†, n. [< historic + -ian.] A historian.

John de Hexam and Richard de Hexham [were] two notable historicians. Holinshed, Rich. I., an. 1199.

historicity (his-tō-ris′i-ti), n. [< historic + -ity.] The quality of being true as history; historicalness. [Rare.]

In judging of the points of controversy connected with Sinai we are brought face to face with the question of the historicity of the Hebrew records involved.
Encyc. Brit., XXII. 88.

Coryat, Crudities, I. 91.

2. The recorded events of the past; also, that branch of science which is occupied with ascertaining and recording the facts of the past. History may deal with the past development of human affairs as a whole, or with some special phase of human activity, as in political history, ecclesiastical history, the history of philosophy, etc.; or with the life of animals, as in natural history; or with inorganic nature, as in geological history; but with reference to the lower animals and to inanimate nature the term has often no special implication of past time (see natural history, below).

It is the true office of history to represent the events themselves together with the counsels, and to leave the observations and conclusions thereupon to the liberty and faculty of every man's judgment.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii. 136.

I have read somewhere or other—in Dionysius of Halicarnassus, I think—that history is philosophy teaching by example. Bolingbroke.

Already for each
I see history preparing a statue and niche.
Lowell, Fable for Critics.

It is a favorite maxim of mine that history, while it should be scientific in its method, should pursue a practical object. That is, it should not only gratify the reader's curiosity about the past, but modify his view of the present, and his forecast of the future.
J. R. Seeley, Expansion of England, Int.

We do not so much want history explained after the manner of science as we want it portrayed and interpreted after the manner of literature.
The Century, XXVII. 926.

3. Recorded or accomplished fact; also, the aggregate of the events, recorded or unrecorded, which mark a given period of past time, as in the development of an individual or of a race, etc.: as, a checkered history.

Per. Where were you bred? . . .

The history of Europe, the history of Aryan man in Europe, the history of man as a really civilized and political being, begins in the lands round the Mediterranean, and of them it begins in the islands and peninsulas of Greece. E. A. Freeman, Amer. Lects., p. 277.

4. An eventful career; a past worthy of record: as, a man with a history.—5†. In liturgics: (a) A series of lessons from the Scriptures, named from the first word of the Respond to the first lesson. (b) The general order of a particular Office. N. E. D.—6†. A pictorial representation of an event or series of incidents; a historical picture. N. E. D.—7. A historical play or drama; a drama representing historical events.

The national history likewise continued to furnish subjects; and the chronicle history remained a favourite species of dramatic composition.
A. W. Ward, Eng. Dram. Lit., I. 146.

Ancient history, the history of man from the earliest authentic records to the destruction of the Roman empire, A. D. 476.—Classical history, the history of the Greeks and Romans.—Ecclesiastical history. See ecclesiastical.—Medieval history, the history of the period which extends from A. D. 476 to the beginning of the sixteenth century. See middle ages, under age.—Modern history, the history of the period which extends from the close of the middle ages to the present time. Some German historians subdivide modern history into later history (from 1492 to the beginning of the French revolution in 1789) and latest history (from 1789 to the present time).—Natural history, a popular designation of the study and description of natural objects, as animals, plants, and minerals, especially the two former, as distinguished from civil, ecclesiastical, military, etc., history.—Profane history, the history of secular events, as distinguished from sacred history.—Sacred history, the history recorded in the Bible.—Tribal history. Same as phylogeny: distinguished from germ-history, or ontogeny.—Syn. History, Chronicle, Annals: record, recital, story, relation. History in its general sense includes chronicles, annals, biography, autobiography, and even travels: as, the history of a journey. In a restricted sense it is an orderly account of the principal events affecting the people of a nation or district for a given period. It is sometimes divided into history proper and philosophical history, the former paying attention simply to the events themselves, the latter showing the events in connection with their causes and effects. When the order of time is most conspicuous, the history is a chronicle, which is generally divided into sections, each section covering a separate period of time. Annals are a form of chronicle in which the subdivision into periods is by years. Chronicles and annals are, however, sometimes used as names for simple and unpretending histories.

J. Kirk, Seven Champions, quoted in Strutt's Sports [and Pastimes, p. 290.

2. A jugglers' trick; a cheat used by conjurers; jugglery.

Convey men's interest, and right,
From Stiles's pocket into Nokes's,
As easily as hocus-pocus.
S. Butler, Hudibras, III. iii. 716.

Our author is playing hocus pocus in the very similitude he takes from that jugler, and would slip upon you, as he phrases it, a counter for a groat.
Bentley, Free Thinking, § 12.

If the doctrine is an imposture. . . . it would be interesting to have it pointed out by what extraordinary hocus-pocus the scientific men of the present age have been imposed upon in accepting it. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXVIII. 555.

II. a. Juggling; cheating.

That Burlesque is a Hocus-Pocus trick they have got, which, by the virtue of Hictius doctius topsy turvey, they make a wise and witty Man in the World a Fool upon the Stage, you know not how. Wycherley, Country Wife, iii.

Such hocus-pocus tricks, I own, Belong to Gallic bards alone.
Mason, tr. of Horace's Odes, iv. 8.

hocus-pocus (hō'kus-pō'kus), v. i.; pret. and pp. hocus-pocused or hocus-pocussed, ppr. hocus-pocusing or hocus-pocussing. [< hocus-pocus, n.] To juggle; deceive; cheat.

★hog[1] (hog), n. [< ME. hog, hoge, hogge, a gelded hog, a young sheep (cf. in comp. hog-pig, a barrow-pig, hog-colt, a young colt, hogget, a sheep or colt after it has passed its first year, and obs. E. hoggerel, hoggrel, a young sheep, hoggaster, hogster, a boar in its third year, also a lamb after its first year, hoglin, a boar); AS. hocg (rare, and uncertain as contained in local names); origin unknown. The supposed connection with hog, hag, hack, 'cut,' is not made out and the early uses do not necessarily imply a 'gelded' swine, a 'shorn' sheep or a 'yearling.' There is no sufficient evidence for the current etymology from W. hwch, a sow, = Corn. hoch, a pig, hog, = Bret. houch, hoch, a hog, = Ir. suig, ult. = AS. sugu, sū, E. sow[2]: see sow[2].] 1†. A gelded pig; a barrow-pig.—2. An omnivorous non-ruminant mammal of the family Suidæ, suborder Artiodactyla, and order Ungulata; a pig, sow, or boar; a swine. All the varieties of the domestic hog are derived from the wild boar, Sus scrofa. (See boar[1].) The river-hogs are somewhat aquatic African species of the genus Potamochœrus. The babirussa is a true hog of the same family, Suidæ. See cut under babirussa.

Shall I keep your hogs, and eat husks with them?
Shak., As you Like it, i. 1.

But for one piece they thought it hard
From the whole hog to be debarr'd.
Cowper, Love of the World Reproved.

3. Some animal like or likened to a hog, not of the family Suidæ. See wart-hog, Phacochœrus, peccary, and Dicotyles.—4. A sheep shorn in the first year, or just after the first year; a young sheep. [Prov. Eng.]—5. A young colt.—6. A bullock a year old. [Prov. Eng.]—7. One who has the characteristics of the hog; a mean, stingy, grasping, gluttonous, or filthy person. hog[1] (hog), v.; pret. and pp. hogged, ppr. hogging. [In def. 1 prob. a var. of hag[3] for hack[1], cut; the orig., and not a derivative, of hog[1], n., to which, however, the later senses are due. Cf. MLG. hoggen, a secondary form of houwen = E. hew, to which hack[1] is ult. referred.]

I. trans. 1. To cut (the hair) short: as, to hog a horse's mane. [Prov. Eng.]—2. To scrape (a ship's bottom) under water.—3. [With ref. to hogback, q. v. The resemblance to G. hocken, carry on the back, get upon one's back, also set in heaps, < hocke, a heap or shock of sheaves, also the back, seems to be accidental.] To carry on the back. [Local, Eng.]

II. intrans. 1. To droop at both ends, so as to resemble in some degree a hog's back in outline: said of the bottom of a ship when in this condition either through faulty construction or from accident.

As a result it was found that the extremities tended to droop with reference to the midship part, and the ship was said to break, this particular form of breakage being termed hogging. Thearle, Naval Arch., § 193.

2. In the manège, to hold or carry the head down, like a hog.

hog[2] (hog), n. [Origin obscure; by some identified with hog[1], as "laggard stones that manifest a pig-like indolence," or, it might be thought, in allusion to the helplessness of a hog on ice, there being in the United States an ironical simile, "as independent as a hog on ice." But neither this explanation nor that which brings in D. hok, a pen, kennel, sty, dock, is supported by any evidence. Perhaps first applied not to the stone, but to the hog-score or line 'cut' in the ice, < hog[1], cut, and thus in fact connected in another way with hog[1], q. v.] In the game of curling, a stone which does not go over the hog-score; also, the hog-score itself. [Scotch.]

hog[2] (hog), v. t.; pret. and pp. hogged, ppr. hogging. [< hog[2], n.] In curling, to play, as a stone, with so little force that it does not clear the hog-score. [Scotch.]

hogan† (hō'gan), n. [Abbr. of Hogan-Mogan (or Hogen-Mogen) rug.] A kind of strong liquor.

Those who toast all the family royal
In bumpers of Hogan and Nog
Have hearts not more true or more loyal
Than mine to my sweet Molly Mog.
Gay, Molly Mog.

For your reputation we keep to ourselves your not hunting nor drinking hogan, either of which here would be sufficient to lay your honour in the dust.
Gray, Letters, I. 12.

The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests.
Mat. viii. 20.

Hence—3. A narrow, dark, or obscure lodging or place; especially, an obscure lodging for one in hiding, or a secret room for a prohibited or disreputable business, as for counterfeiting, unlicensed printing, liquor-selling, etc.: as, a rum-hole.

At a Catholique house, he [Charles II.] was fain to lie in the priests hole a good while in the house for his privacy. Pepys, Diary, May 23, 1660.

The strangest hole I ever was in has been to-day at a place called Portici, where his Sicilian Majesty has a country-seat. Gray, Letters, I. 82.

Many Printers for Lucre of Gain have gone into Holes, and then their chief care is to get a Hole Private, and Workmen Trusty and Cunning to conceal the Hole and themselves. Moxon, Mech. Exercises, p. 380.

4†. The hollow interior of a ship: now called, by corruption, the hold. See *hold*³.

When you let anything downe into the howle, lowering it by degrees, they say, Amaine; and being down, Strike.
Smith, Seaman's Gram., vii. 33. (N. E. D.)

We . . . vsed them kindly, yet got them away with all the speede we could, that they should not be perceiued by them in the houle.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 111.

5. An indentation in the coast; a cove, or small harbor, as Holmes's Hole in Martha's Vineyard, and Wood's Hole on the coast opposite; a narrow passage or waterway between two islands, as Robinson's Hole, in the same region. In 1875 the name Wood's Hole was changed to Wood's Holl, in conformity with the (unfounded) supposition that hole in such local names is a corruption of a Norse word holl, meaning 'hill' (see etymology of *hill*¹), introduced by the Norsemen in the tenth century, and preserved from that remote period by the American Indians.

This [flag] was to be raised at a good anchoring place called Five-Fathom Hole.
Ellis, Voyage to Hudson's Bay (1748), p. 149.

6. A level grassy area surrounded by mountains: a word formerly much in use and still current in the northern parts of the Rocky Mountains. Such places are also sometimes called parks, and occasionally, in certain regions, basins. The use of the term hole implies a more complete isolation and environment of mountains than does that of basin. Park is a more familiar name for localities of this kind in the southern Rocky Mountains.

7. A puzzling situation; a scrape; a fix. [Colloq.]

I should take great pleasure in serving you, and getting you out of this hole, but my Lord, you know, is a great man, and can, in a manner, do what he pleases with poor people. C. Johnston, Chrysal, I. 132.

A hole in one's coat, figuratively, a flaw in one's reputation; a weak spot in one's character.

I do perceive he is not the man that he would gladly make show to the 'orld he is; if I find a hole in his coat, I will tell him my mind. Shak., Hen. V., iii. 6.

If there's a hole in a' your coats,
I rede you tent it:
A chiel's amang ye takin' notes,
An', faith, he'll prent it.
Burns, Captain Grose's Peregrinations.

Blind holes, bobstay holes, etc. See the qualifying words.—Dead holes, shallow holes in cast-iron.—Fox in the hole†. See *fox*¹.—Hole in the sky. Same as coal-sack, 2.—The hole†, the name of one of the worst apartments in the Counter prison in Wood street, London.

I shall never find the way out again: my debts, my debts! I'm like to die i' th' Hole now.
Middleton, The Widow, ii. 2.

He is deni'de the freedome of the prison,
And in the hole is laide with men condemn'd.
Heywood, Woman Killed with Kindness.

Toad in a hole. See toad.—To crawl into one's hole, to retire defeated: used especially of an aggressor who is worsted. [Colloq.]—To put (or get) one in a hole, to get one into a position from which he cannot easily or honorably extricate himself. [Slang.]=Syn. 1. Opening, cave, ★cavity, excavation, hollow.—3. Den, kennel, hovel.

holethnos (hō-leth'nos), n. [< Gr. ὅλος, entire, whole, + ἔθνος, nation.] A primitive or parent stock or race of people not yet divided into separate tribes or branches.

It seems hard to avoid the conclusion that the various Aryan nations of historical times are, linguistically speaking, descended from a single primitive tribe, conveniently termed the Aryan holethnos, in contradistinction to its later representatives as marked off by such lines of distinction as are found between Hindoos and Greeks, and between the latter and Teutons or Celts. The Academy.

Holetra (hō-lē′trạ), n. pl. [NL., ⟨ Gr. ὅλος, entire, whole, + ἦτρον, abdomen.] A term applied by Herman (1807) to a division of tracheate arachnidans, including both the harvestmen and the mites, forming the present orders Phalangida and Acarida.

holewort (hōl′wėrt), n. Same as hollowwort.

holibut, holibutter. See halibut, halibutter.

holidame†, n. A form of halidom, simulating ★holy dame. See halidom.

holiday (hol′i-dā), n. and a. [Formerly also holliday, holyday; ⟨ ME. holiday, haliday (= Dan. helligdag = Sw. helgdag), usually written separately, holi day, holy day, hali day, etc. (the vowel of holy being shortened as in holibut), ⟨ AS. hālig dæg, 'holy day': see holy and day[1]. Cf. holinight.] I. n. 1. A consecrated day; a religious anniversary; a day set apart for commemorating some important event or in honor of some person.

Every holliday through the yeere, Changed shall thy garment be.
Robin Hood and the Curtall Fryer (Child's Ballads, [V. 278).

The holiest of all holidays are those Kept by ourselves in silence and apart,
The secret anniversaries of the heart.
Longfellow, Holidays.

In Heav'n, one Holy-day, you read
In wise Anacreon, Ganymede Drew heedless Cupid in.
Prior, Cupid and Ganymede.

My approach has made a little holiday,
And every face was dress'd in smiles to meet me.
Rowe, Jane Shore, v. 1.

3. A day of exemption from labor, or of recreation and amusement; a day or a number of days during which ordinary occupations are suspended, either by an individual or by a community.

Necessitee nath never haliday:
Take hede on that.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 7.

If all the year were playing holidays,
To sport would be as tedious as to work.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., i. 2.

4. Naut., a spot carelessly left uncoated in tarring or painting a ship or its appurtenances.—Blindman's holiday. See blindman.—Legal holiday, a secular day which the law allows, for some purposes at least, to be treated like Sunday in reference to the suspension of business. The phrase is commonly applied to those days which by statute are treated like Sunday, in reference to the presentment, for payment or acceptance, and the protest and notice of dishonor, of negotiable paper, and for the purpose of closing public offices—with this qualification, however, that paper falling due on such a legal holiday is usually to be presented on the next secular day, instead of on the previous day, as is the case in the absence of statute with paper bearing days of grace maturing on Sunday. See bank-holiday.

II. a. Pertaining to a festival; befitting a holiday; cheerful; joyous; hence, suited only to a holiday; dainty; not fitted for serious action or life.

It is a holyday work to visit the prisoners, for they be kept from sermons.
Latimer, 5th Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1549.

Now I am in a holiday humour.
Shak., As you Like it, iv. 1.

With many holiday and lady terms
He question'd me. Shak., 1 Hen. IV., i. 3.

Courage is but a holiday kind of virtue, to be seldom exercised. Dryden.

Lack-a-day, they have never seen any service—Holiday soldiers! S. Foote, Mayor of Garratt, i. 1.

To speak holiday†, to speak choicely or daintily.

What say you to young master Fenton? he capers, he dances, he has eyes of youth, he writes verses, he speaks holiday, he smells April and May.
Shak., M. W. of W., iii. 2.

holiday (hol′i-dā), v. i. [⟨ holiday, n.] To make holiday; go pleasuring; waste time in play. [Rare.]

We cannot rid ourselves of a lurking suspicion that the holidaying fisherman is a little of a pharisee—not an obnoxious one, but pardonable, even amiable in his self-righteousness. The Critic, V. 165.

holidayism (hol′i-dā-izm), n. [⟨ holiday + -ism.] The character of a holiday.

Under the working of the civil law as the prominent element of authority, Sunday has tended and must tend to holidayism. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXIX. 708.

American Holly (Ilex opaca). a, b, female and male flowers.

I. Aquifolium, the common European holly, of which there are many varieties, grows to the height of from 20 to 30 feet; the stem by age becomes large, and is covered with a smooth grayish bark, and set with branches which form a sort of cone. The leaves are oblong-oval, of a lucid green on the upper surface, but pale on the under surface; the edges are indented and waved, with sharp thorns terminating the points. The flowers grow in clusters, and are succeeded by roundish berries, which turn to a beautiful red about the end of September. This plant is a handsome evergreen, and excellently adapted for hedges and fences, since it bears clipping. The wood is hard and white, and is much employed for turnery-work, for drawing upon, for knife-handles, etc. Of the bark bird-lime is made by maceration. Houses and churches are adorned with the leaves and berries at Christmas. The American holly, I. opaca, is also an evergreen tree, reaching in some instances a height of 45 feet and a diameter of 4 feet. It is similar to the European holly, from which it differs in having less glossy deep-green foliage, less bright red berries, and the nutlets not so veiny. It is distributed generally from Massachusetts south, and west to the valley of the Colorado river, attaining its greatest development in the rich bottoms of Arkansas and eastern Texas. The wood is of the highest class for interior finish and turnery. The Dahoon holly, I. Cassine, a smaller and less valuable tree than I. opaca, is a native of the southern United States. The California holly is Heteromeles arbutifolia.

Heigh ho! sing heigh ho! unto the green holly.
Shak., As you Like it, ii. 7 (song).

When the bare and wintry woods we see,
What then so cheerful as the holly tree?

holo-. [NL., etc., holo-, < Gr. ὅλο-ς, entire, complete in all its parts, whole, safe and sound, Ionic οὖλος, orig. *σόλος = L. sollus, entire, complete (sol-idus, firm, solid), = Skt. sarva, all, whole: see solemn, solicit, solid. It should be noted that Gr. ὅλος has no connection with the equiv. and similar-seeming E. word whole (formerly spelled hole), by which it is commonly translated.] An element in compound words from the Greek, meaning 'entire, whole.'

holoblast (hol'ō-blast), n. [< Gr. ὅλος, whole, + βλαστός, germ.] In biol., a holoblastic ovum; an ovum the protoplasm of which is entirely germinal: distinguished from meroblast.

holoblastic (hol-ō-blas'tik), a. [< holoblast + -ic.] Wholly germinal: applied by Remak to those eggs in which the whole yolk is formative —that is, undergoes segmentation in development: opposed to meroblastic. Mammals, excepting monotremes, have holoblastic eggs. ★See cut under gastrulation.

Holobranchia (hol-ō-brang'ki-ą), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ὅλος, whole, + βράγχια, gills: see branchiæ.] 1. A group of fishes. Duméril, 1806.—2. In J. E. Gray's classification (1821), one of three orders of Saccophora or ascidians, distinguished from Tomobranchia and from Diphyllobranchia.

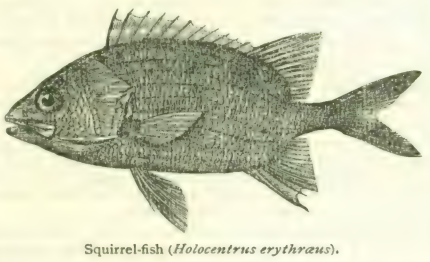
holocaust (hol'ō-kâst), n. [< ME. holocaust, < L. holocaustum, < Gr. ὁλόκαυστον, ὁλόκαυτον, a whole burnt-offering, neut. of ὁλόκαυστος, ὁλόκαυτος, burnt whole, < ὅλος, whole, + καυστός, καυτός, burnt, < καίειν, burn: see caustic.] 1. A sacrifice or offering entirely consumed by fire, in use among the Jews and some pagan nations.



And therefore thus must the Iesuite do when an Ignatian Superiour commands, or else he is no Holocaust for the Leiolan Altar. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 171.

And she, thus left alone, might sooner prove
The perfect holocaust of generous love.
J. Beaumont, Psyche, xxiv. 194.

Eumenes cut a piece from every part of the victim, and by this he made it an holocaust, or an entire sacrifice.
W. Broome.

2. Figuratively, a great slaughter or sacrifice of life, as by fire or other accident, or in battle.

Holocentridæ (hol-ō-sen'tri-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Holocentrus + -idæ.] A family of acanthopterygian fishes of the superfamily Berycoidea; the squirrel-fishes. The limits of the group vary with different writers. (a) In the old systems it was essentially coequal with the family Berycidæ. (b) In a restricted sense, the Holocentridæ are fishes of oblong form with compressed head, ctenoid scales, narrow suborbitals, 8 branchiostegal rays, 2 dorsals, of which the spinous is longer than the soft one, and ventrals of 7 rays besides the spine. There are numerous (about 50) tropical species.

Squirrel-fish (Holocentrus erythræus).

holocentroid (hol-ō-sen'troid), a. and n. [< Holocentrus + -oid.] I. a. Of or relating to the Holocentridæ.

II. n. One of the Holocentridæ.

Holocentrus (hol-ō-sen'trus), n. [NL. (Bloch, 1790), < Gr. ὅλος, whole, + κέντρον, a point, the center.] The typical genus of the family Holocentridæ: so called because beset all over with spines. H. ascencionis is a Floridian species, of bright-reddish color and great activity, and another is the squirrel-fish, H. erythræus. See cut under Holocentridæ.

holocephal (hol-ō-sef'ąl), n. A fish of the genus Holocephalus. Also holocephale.

Holocephala (hol-ō-sef'ą-lą), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl.: see holocephalous.] In Günther's system of classification, the Holocephali as an order of chondropterygious fishes, characterized by the single external gill-opening on each side.

Holocephali (hol-ō-sef'ą-lī), n. pl. [NL., pl. of holocephalus:* see holocephalous.] A group of selachians to which different values have been given. (a) In the systems of Müller and others, an order of selachians or of chondropterygians, characterized by the continuity of the hyomandibular bone with the cranium. There is thus constituted an "entire" or undivided cranium, with which the short lower jaw directly articulates, whence the name. The family Chimæridæ contains the only living species, but numerous extinct forms are known. (b) In some systems, raised to the rank of a subclass, but having the same limits as when used in an ordinal sense.

holocephalous (hol-ō-sef'ą-lus), a. [< NL. holocephalus,* < Gr. ὅλος, whole, + κεφαλή, head.] Having an undivided cranium; specifically, of or pertaining to the Holocephali.

Holochlamyda (hol-ō-klam'i-dą), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ὅλος, whole, + χλαμύς, a mantle.] A suborder of azygobranchiate gastropods, with the margin of the pallium or mantle simple or entire and the lip of the shell unnotched. There are many families, grouped as rhipidoglossate, ptenoglossate, and tænioglossate.

holochlamydate (hol-ō-klam'i-dāt), a. [As Holochlamyda + -ate[1].] Having the margin of the pallium or mantle simple or entire; of or pertaining to the Holochlamyda.

holochlamydic (hol″ō-kla-mid'ik), a. Same as holochlamydate. E. R. Lankester.

holochoanoid (hol-ō-kō'a-noid), a. and n. [< Gr. ὅλος, whole, + χοάνη, a funnel, + εἶδος, form.] I. a. Having complete septal funnels; of or pertaining to the Holochoanoida. Also holochoanoidal.

II. n. A member of the group Holochoanoida.

Holochoanoida (hol-ō-kō-ą-noi'dą), n. pl. [NL.: see holochoanoid.] A group of nautiloid cephalopods, in which the septal funnels close the intervals between the septa: contrasted with Ellipochoanoida. Hyatt, Proc. Bost. Soc. Nat. Hist., XXII. 260.

holochoanoidal (hol-ō-kō-ą-noi'dąl), a. [< holochoanoid + -al.] Same as holochoanoid.

holochrone (hol'ō-krōn), n. [< Gr. ὅλος, whole, + χρόνος, time.] In math., a curve such that if a heavy particle be restricted to move upon it, the times of descent through different portions are a given function of the arcs described.

holocryptic (hol-ō-krip'tik), a. [< Gr. ὅλος, whole, + κρυπτός, hidden: see crypt.] Wholly or effectively concealing; specifically, incapable of being read except by one who has the key, as a cipher.

holocrystalline (hol-ō-kris'tą-lin), a. [< holo- + crystalline.] Entirely crystalline: applied to rocks which contain no amorphous or glassy matter.

holodactylic (hol″ō-dak-til'ik), a. [< Gr. ὁλοδάκτυλος, all dactylic, < ὅλος, whole, + δάκτυλος, a dactyl: see dactyl, dactylic.] In pros., consisting, with the exception of the last foot, entirely of dactyls: noting that form of the dactylic hexameter in which, the last foot being always a spondee or trochee, all the other feet are dactyls. See hexameter.

hologastrula (hol-ō-gas'trȯ-lą), n.; pl. hologastrulæ (-lē). [NL., < Gr. ὅλος, whole, + gastrula, q. v.] In embryol., the gastrula, of whatever form, of a holoblastic egg. It is an archigastrula if the segmentation of the yolk is equal as well as total; an amphigastrula if the segmentation is unequal and total. See gastrulation.

hologastrular (hol-ō-gas'trȯ-lą̈r), a. [< hologastrula + -ar.] Resembling a hologastrula.

Holognatha (hō-log'nā-thą), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of holognathus:* see holognathous.] A section of terrestrial pulmoniferous gastropods, having an entire jaw: contrasted with Agnatha, Goniognatha, and Elasmognatha.

holognathous (hō-log'nā-thus), a. [< NL. holognathus,* < Gr. ὅλος, whole, + γνάθος, a jaw.] In conch., having the jaw of one piece; specifically, of or pertaining to the Holognatha.

holograph (hol'ō-grăf), a. and n. [< LL. holographus, < Gr. ὁλόγραφος, written wholly by the hand of the author, < ὅλος, whole, + γράφειν, write.] I. a. Wholly written by the person in whose name it appears, as a manuscript document or letter.

A holograph letter by a man of quality is a true treasure.
Lamb, To Coleridge.

II. n. Any writing, as a letter, deed, testament, etc., wholly written by the person from whom it purports to proceed.

Let who says
"The soul's a clean white paper" rather say
A palimpsest, a prophet's holograph,
Defiled, erased, and covered by a monk's.
Mrs. Browning, Aurora Leigh, i.

holographic (hol-ō-graf'ik), a. [< holograph + -ic.] Relating to or of the nature of a holograph.

A regularly signed, sealed, and holographic act upon the points stated in the famous note.
Motley, Dutch Republic, I. 316.

holographical (hol-ō-graf'i-kal), a. [< holographic + -al.] Same as holographic.

holohedral (hol-ō-hē'dral), a. [< Gr. ὅλος, whole, + ἕδρα, seat, base.] In mineral., having all the similar edges or angles similarly replaced, as a crystal.—Holohedral isomorphism. See isomorphism.

holohedrism (hol-ō-hē'drizm), n. [< holohedr-al + -ism.] In crystal., the property of having all the similar parts similarly modified, as a crystal, or of having all the planes of each form (see form, 2) present that are crystallographically possible—that is, all that have the same position with reference to the axes. The law of holohedrism is one of the fundamental principles of crystallography, but there are certain exceptions to it, which are noted under hemihedrism. Also holosymmetry.

holohemihedral (hol-ō-hem-i-hē'dral), a. [< holo- + hemihedral.] In crystal., having all the planes present in half the octants: sometimes said of the inclined hemihedral forms of the isometric system. See hemihedrism.

Hololepta (hol-ō-lep'tä), n. [NL., < Gr. ὅλος, whole, + λεπτός, thin, fine, delicate.] A peculiar genus of clavicorn beetles, of the family Histeridæ, of much-flattened form, with prominent mandibles. H. fossularis is a shining-black species, found beneath decaying bark in the eastern United States. Paykull.

Holometabola (hol″ō-me-tab'ō-lä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ὅλος, whole, + E. metabola, q. v.] The series of hexapod or true insects which are holometabolic; the Aphaniptera, Diptera, Lepidoptera, Hymenoptera, Strepsiptera, Neuroptera, and Coleoptera. Also called Metabola.

holometabolian (hol-ō-met-a-bō'li-an), a. Same as holometabolic.

holometabolic (hol-ō-met-a-bol'ik), a. [As holometabol-y + -ic.] Undergoing complete metamorphosis or entire transformation, as an insect: the opposite of ametabolic: correlated with hemimetabolic. See holophanerous. Also holometabolian, holometabolous.

holometabolism (hol″ō-me-tab'ō-lizm), n. [As holometabol-y + -ism.] Same as holometaboly.

holometabolous (hol″ō-me-tab'ō-lus), a. [As holometabol-y + -ous.] Same as holometabolic.

holometaboly (hol″ō-me-tab'ō-li), n. [< holo- + metaboly.] Complete or perfect metaboly; entire transformation or metamorphosis of an insect. Also holometabolism.

holometer (hō-lom'e-tėr), n. [< Gr. ὅλος, whole, + μέτρον, measure.] A mathematical instrument for taking all kinds of measures, both on the earth and in the heavens; a pantometer.

holomorphic (hol-ō-môr'fik), a. [As holomorphy + -ic.] 1. Exhibiting holohedral symmetry.—2. In math., having the form of an entire function.—Holomorphic function, in math., a function which, being uniform over the whole range of quantity, is developable by Maclaurin's theorem for all values of the variable.

holomorphy (hol'ō-môr-fi), n. [< Gr. ὅλος, whole, + μορφή, form.] The character of being holomorphic.

Holomyaria (hol″ō-mī-ā'ri-ä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ὅλος, whole, + μῦς, muscle, + -aria.] One of the three principal divisions of Nematoidea, containing those threadworms in which the muscles of the body-wall are not separated into series of muscle-cells. See Polymyaria, Meromyaria.

holomyarian (hol″ō-mī-ā'ri-an), a. Pertaining to or having the characters of the Holomyaria.

Holopediidæ (hol″ō-pē-dī'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Holopedium + -idæ.] A family of entomostraceous crustaceans, typified by the genus Holopedium. The swimming-antennæ are simple, elongated, cylindrical, and prehensile in the male, and there are two lateral dilatations of the intestine.

Holopedium (hol-ō-pē'di-um), n. [NL., < Gr. ὅλος, whole, + πεδίον, the lower part of the foot.] The typical genus of Holopediidæ.

holophanerous (hol-ō-fan'e-rus), a. [< Gr. ὅλος, whole, + φανερός, visible, < φαίνειν, show, φαίνεσθαι, appear.] In zoöl., wholly visible or discernible, as the complete metamorphosis of certain insects.

holophotal (hol-ō-fō'tal), a. [< holophote + -al.] In optics, pertaining to a holophote; reflecting or refracting rays of light in the desired direction without perceptible loss: as, a holophotal reflector.

The holophotal revolving light perhaps still remains his [Thomas Stevenson's] most elegant contrivance.
R. L. Stevenson, Thomas Stevenson.

holophote (hol'ō-fōt), n. [< Gr. ὅλος, whole, + φῶς (φωτ-), light.] The improved form of optical apparatus now used in lighthouses, by which practically all the light from the lamp or other source is made available for the desired effect of illumination. It may consist of mirrors to reflect the light (catoptric holophote), of lenses to refract it (dioptric holophote), or, better, of a combination of both reflection and refraction (catadioptric holophote).

When placed within a holophote, the electric lamp has already become a powerful auxiliary in effecting military operations both by sea and land.
C. W. Siemens, Pop. Sci. Mo., XXII. 62.

holophotometer (hol″ō-fō-tom'e-tėr), n. [< holo- + photometer.] An instrument designed for the measurement of light emitted in all directions.

holophrasis (hō-lof'rā-sis), n. [< Gr. ὅλος, whole, + φράσις, expression: see phrase.] Holophrastic expression; combination of a complex of ideas and their signs into one word, especially a verb.

holophrastic (hol-ō-fras'tik), a. [< Gr. ὅλος, whole, + φραστικός, suited for indicating or expressing, < φράζειν, indicate, show, tell: see phrase.] Having the force of a whole phrase, as a word or gesture; expressive of a sentence, or of a highly complex idea.

The main classes of words [the parts of speech] . . . into which the holophrastic ("equivalent to a whole phrase") utterances of a primitive time have by degrees become divided. W. D. Whitney, Life and Growth of Lang., p. 209.

holophytic (hol-ō-fit'ik), a. [< Gr. ὅλος, whole, + φυτόν, a plant.] Resembling closely an ordinary green plant in mode of nutrition: said of an animal, as an infusorian: correlated with saprophytic, and opposed to holozoic.

Holopidæ (hō-lop'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Holopus + -idæ.] Same as Holopodidæ.

holoplexia (hol-ō-plek'si-ä), n. [NL., < Gr. ὅλος, whole, + πλῆξις, a stroke, < πλήσσειν, strike: see apoplexy. Cf. hemiplegia.] Complete or general paralysis.

Why are we natural everywhere but in the pulpit? . . . Why this holoplexia on sacred occasions alone?
Sydney Smith, in Lady Holland, iii.

Holopodidæ (hol-ō-pod'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Holopus (-pod-) + -idæ.] A family of crinoids or sea-lilies, named from the genus Holopus. See Encrinidæ. Also written Holopidæ.

Holoptilidæ (hol-op-til'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Holoptilus + -idæ.] A family of hemipterous insects, of the suborder Heteroptera, named from the genus Holoptilus. The head is short and wide, the ocelli are remote, the second antennal joint is curved, and the posterior tibiæ are plumose in the typical forms. They are natives of Australia, the East Indies, and Africa. Also written Holoptilides.

Holoptilus (hō-lop'ti-lus), n. [NL., < Gr. ὅλος, whole, + πτίλον, feather, wing.] The typical genus of Holoptilidæ.

holoptychian (hol-op-tik'i-an), a. Of or relating to, or containing, Holoptychius: said of a geological deposit characterized by remains of the genus Holoptychius.

Holoptychiidæ (hol-op-ti-kī'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Holoptychius + -idæ.] A family of polypteroid fishes, of the subclass Ganoidei, named from the genus Holoptychius. They have thick, sculptured or corrugated, rounded ganoid scales; the head covered with large plates; the dendrodont teeth large, hard, and conical; the dorsal fins two in number; and the pectorals and ventrals lobate. They flourished during the Devonian and Carboniferous periods, and are all extinct; the species were of large size, sometimes attaining a length of 12 feet. Also Holoptychidæ.

Holoptychius (hol-op-tik'i-us), n. [NL., < Gr. ὅλος, whole, + πτυχή or πτύξ (πτυχ-), a fold.] The typical genus of Holoptychiidæ: so called from the wrinkled enamel-scales. The teeth are of two kinds, small ones in closely set rows and larger ones distant from one another; but all are infolded and have numerous fissures radiating from the central mass of vasodentine which fills up the pulp-cavity. Species

Holopus (hol'ō-pus), n. [NL., < Gr. ὅλος, whole, + ποίς (ποδ-) = E. foot.] A notable genus of fixed living crinoids, of the family Comatulidæ, having a broad base without true stalk, 10 spirally rolled arms, and a radial asymmetry in which a bivium and a trivium are recognizable. D'Orbigny, 1837.

holorhinal (hol-ō-rī'nal), a. [< Gr. ὅλος, whole, + ῥίς (ῥιν-), the nose.] In ornith., having the nasal bones only slightly or not at all cleft. A. H. Garrod.

A bird having the [nasal] bones . . . with moderate forking, so that the angle of the fork, bounding the nostrils behind, does not reach so far back as the fronto-premaxillary suture, is termed holorhinal. Coues, Key to N. A. [Birds, p. 165.

Holorhinal Skull of Common Fowl, top and side views. The bones are as follows: Pmx, premaxilla; Na, nasal; Mx, maxilla; La, lacrymal; Fr, frontal; Pa, parietal. Qu, recurved angle of mandible.

holosericeous (hol″ō-sē-rish'ius), a. [< Gr. ὁλοσηρικός, all of silk, < ὅλος, whole, + σηρικός, of silk: see silk and sericeous. Cf. LL. holosericus.] 1. In bot., covered with minute silky hairs, discovered better by the touch than by sight.—2. In entom., covered with short, fine, shining appressed hairs, giving the surface an appearance like that of satin.

holosiderite (hol-ō-sid'e-rīt), n. [< LL. holosiderus, < Gr. ὁλοσίδηρος, all of iron, < ὅλος, whole, + σίδηρος, iron: see siderite.] A meteorite consisting entirely of metallic iron.

Holosiphona (hol″ō-si-fō'nä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ὅλος, whole, + σίφων, a tube, pipe: see siphon.] An order of Cephalopoda named from the completely tubular siphon: opposed to Schizosiphona, and a synonym of Dibranchiata.

holosiphonate (hol-ō-sī'fō-nāt), a. [As Holosiphona + -ate[1].] Having the siphon completely tubular; of or pertaining to the Holosiphona.

holospondaic (hol″ō-spon-dā'ik), a. [< Gr. ὁλοσπόνδειος, all of spondees, < ὅλος, whole, + σπονδείος (sc. ποίς), a spondee: see spondee.] In pros., consisting entirely of spondees: noting that form of the dactylic hexameter in which all six places are occupied by spondees instead of dactyls. See hexameter.

holost (hol'ost), n. [< NL. Holostei.] A fish of the group Holostei.

holostean (hō-los'tē-an), a. and n. I. a. Of or pertaining to the Holostei.

II. n. One of the Holostei.

Holostei (hō-los'tē-ī), n. pl. [NL. (J. Müller, 1844), pl. of holosteus*: see holosteous.] A group of ganoid fishes which have the skeleton osseous instead of cartilaginous: distinguished from Chondrostei. By Müller and others it was regarded as an order, while by some it has been ranked as a suborder. Later writers have discarded it as being too heterogeneous. It embraced the orders now known as Rhombognoidea, Cycloganoidei, and Crossopterygia among recent forms, and representatives of several extinct orders. The living representatives of the group are the bony pikes or gars and the mudfishes (Lepisosteus, Amia, etc.).

holosteous (hō-los'tē-us), a. [< NL. holosteus*, < Gr. ὅλος, whole, + ὀστέον, a bone.] Entirely bony; having an osseous skeleton: specifically applied to the fishes classed as Holostei.

holosteric (hol-ō-ster'ik), a. [< Gr. ὅλος, whole, + στερεός, solid.] Completely solid: said of certain instruments used in barometry in which no liquid is employed, as an aneroid.

Holosteum (hō-los'tē-um), n. [NL., lit. 'all bony' (so called by antiphrasis, the plant being soft and delicate), < L. holosteon, < Gr. ὁλόστεον, a certain plant, < ὅλος, whole, all, + ὀστέον, bone.] A small genus of dicotyledonous choripetalous plants, of the family Silenaceæ, tribe Alsineæ, allied very closely to the genus Cerastium, the mouse-ear chickweed, from which it differs in having dorsally compressed seeds fixed by their face, and umbelliform cymes. The flowers have 5 sepals, 5 denticulate or emarginate petals, 3 to 5, rarely 10, hypogynous stamens, and a 1-celled ovary with 3, rarely 4 to 5, styles. Six species are known, natives of temperate Europe and Asia. H. umbellatum, the jagged chickweed, has become naturalized in the eastern United States.

Holostomata (hol-ō-stō′ma-tä), n. pl. [NL. (Fleming, 1828), neut. pl. of holostomatus*: see holostomatous.] 1. A division of pectinibranchiate gastropodous mollusks, with shells having the mouth entire, and not notched or prolonged into a siphon: opposed to Siphonostomata. It was framed to include such families as Turbinidæ, Neritidæ, Littorinidæ, etc., now referred to different orders. Some are known as sea-snails. There are upward of 12 families, even after eliminating some, as the chitons and tooth-shells, that used to be included. These families are mostly tænioglossate, but some, as the Ianthinidæ and Scalariidæ, are ptenoglossate.

2. In Infusoria, same as Pantostomata. S. Kent, 1877.

holostomate (hō-los′tō-māt), a. [< NL. holostomatus*: see holostomatous.] Same as holostomatous.

The holostomate (entire-mouthed) forms.
Stand. Nat. Hist., I. 339.

holostomatous (hol-ō-stom′a-tus), a. [< NL. holostomatus*, < Gr. ὅλος, whole, + στόμα(τ-), mouth.] Having the mouth entire. (a) Having the mouth not notched or canaliculate: specifically said of the Holostomata: opposed to siphonostomatous. (b) Having all the usual parts of the mouth.

holostome (hol′ō-stōm), n. 1. In conch., one of the Holostomata.—2. In ichth., an apodal fish of the group Holostomi.

Holostomi (hō-los′tō-mī), n. pl. [NL., pl. of holostomus*: see holostomous.] A group of fishes including eel-like forms which differ from true eels in having all the bones usually bounding the mouth — that is, well-developed intermaxillary as well as supramaxillary bones. It includes the families Symbranchidæ and Amphipnoidæ. By some ichthyologists it is ranked as an order and by others as a suborder of Apodes or Symbranchia.

holostomous (hō-los′tō-mus), a. [< NL. holostomus*, < Gr. ὅλος, whole, + στόμα, mouth.] Same as holostomatous; specifically, in ichth., pertaining to or having the characters of the Holostomi.

★holosymmetric (hol″ō-si-met′rik), a. [< holosymmetry + -ic.] Holohedral.

holosymmetry (hol-ō-sim′e-tri), n. [< holo- + symmetry.] Same as holohedrism.

holothecal (hol-ō-thē′kal), a. [< Gr. ὅλος, whole, + θήκη, case, + -al.] In ornith., having the tarsal envelop whole or entire — that is, not divided into scutella or reticulations; booted; having greaves: opposed to schizothecal. See cut under booted.

Holothrix (hol′ō-thriks), n. [NL., so called in allusion to the long petals, < Gr. ὅλος, whole, + θρίξ (τριχ-), a hair.] A genus of monocotyledonous plants, of the family Orchidaceæ, tribe Orchideæ, having the sepals subequal, the petals and lip long and erect, and the flowers arranged in a thin spike or dense, and all directed to one side. They are small herbs with the general habits of Herminium, having one or two leaves at the base of the erect stem. About fifty species are known, all of which are natives of eastern and southern Africa. The genus is the type of Lindley's tribe Holotrichidæ.

holothure (hol′ō-thūr), n. A holothurian.

Holothuria[1] (hol-ō-thū′ri-ä), n. [NL., fem.: see holothurium.] 1. A genus of sea-slugs, typical of the family Holothuriidæ. There are various species, some of them edible, as H. argus or edulis, known as bêche-de-mer and trepang.

2. [l. c.] An individual of this genus.

Holothuria[2] (hol-ō-thū′ri-ä), n. pl. [NL., pl. of holothurium, neut., for Holothuria, fem.: see holothurium.] The sea-cucumbers, holothurians, or Holothurioidea. Thus, in Cuvier's system of classification, the Holothuria are the third family of pedicellate echinoderms.

Holothuriæ (hol-ō-thū′ri-ē), n. pl. [NL., pl. of Holothuria[1].] Same as Holothuria[2]. As thus named in Leuckart's system, the holothurians were an order of his Scytodermata, contrasted with Sipunculidæ or spoonworms.

holothurian (hol-ō-thū′ri-an), n. and a. [< Holothuria[1] + -an.] I. n. One of the Holothurioidea; a sea-cucumber, sea-slug, trepang, or bêche-de-mer. They have been directly divided into several sections, to which the terms (derived from De Blainville, 1834) vermiform, ascidiform, veretilliform, cucumiform, and sipunculiform have been applied.

The Holothurian or "sea-cucumber" has a wonderful power of changing its form. It elongates, contracts, enlarges at each end while it is small in the middle, and thus changes its appearance from time to time. In its power of going to pieces it almost excels the "brittle star" and the starfish, Luidia. Pop. Sci. Mo., XIII. 327.

II. a. Pertaining to or having the characters of the Holothurioidea.

Holothuridea (hol″ō-thū-rid′ē-ä), n. pl. Same as Holothurioidea.

Holothuriidæ (hol″ō-thū-rī′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Holothuria[1] + -idæ.] A restricted family of holothurians, represented by the genus Holothuria. See Holothuria[1].

Holothurioidea (hol-ō-thū-ri-oi′dē-ä), n. pl. [NL., < Holothuria[1] + -oidea.] A class, order, or other group of Echinodermata; the sea-slugs, sea-cucumbers, or trepangs. They have an elongate, vermiform shape, and display little tendency to radiation in structure except at the oral end. They have a tough leathery integument instead of a hard calcareous test as in Development of Holothurians.

A, B, C, Holothuria. A, echinopædic stage, or auricularia: g, dorsal pore of h, ambulacral sac. B, Later stage: c′, intestine; g, dorsal pore; f, f, prolongations of circular ambulacral vessel; i, wheel-shaped calcareous body. C, young holothuria with circular ciliated bands; g, madreporic canal; f′, Polian vesicle. D, E, F, Synapta. D, echinopædic larva with bilateral ciliated band, and wheel-shaped calcareous bodies, ventral view: a, mouth and gullet; b, stomach; c, intestine and anus; d, sausage-shaped sacs of enterocœle; e, rudiment of ambulacral vascular system. E, pupa-stage of the same, with obsolete oral aperture and zonary cilia: i, tentacles; k, Polian vesicle; l, longitudinal muscles of perisoma. F, young synapta without cilia, with fine tentacles, and several of the wheel-shaped bodies at posterior end of body: m, madreporic canal.

other echinoderms (though the skin may include hard spicules of various shapes), an oral circlet of tentacles, and a calcareous ring of several pieces round the mouth. There are two types of Holothurioidea, represented respectively by the genera Synapta and Holothuria, and forming two orders. The former, known as Apoda, Apodia, Apneumona, are hermaphrodite, with a reduced water-vascular system, no special respiratory apparatus, and no Cuvierian organs. The latter, called Pedata, Dipneumona, or Pneumonophora, have the sexes distinct, a respiratory tree, Cuvierian organs, and a developed water-vascular system including ambulacral feet. Also Holothuroidea and several other forms.

holothurium (hol-ō-thū′ri-um), n.; pl. holothuria (-ä). [< L. holothurium, < Gr. ὁλοθούριον, neut., a kind of zoöphyte, appar. < ὅλος, whole, + (?) θούριος, θοῦρος, rushing, raging, impetuous.] 1. A kind of zoöphyte mentioned by Aristotle and Pliny.—2. A sea-cucumber; a holothurian.

Holothuroida (hol″ō-thū-roi′dä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ὅλος, whole, + θυροειδής, like a door, < θύρα, = E. door, + εἶδος, form.] In Gegenbaur's system of classification, a class of echinoderms, divided into the orders Eupodia and Apodia, the latter containing Synapta and Chirodota.

Holothuroidea (hol″ō-thū-roi′dē-ä), n. pl. Same as Holothurioidea.

Holotricha (hō-lot′ri-kä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ὅλος, whole, + θρίξ (τριχ-), a hair.] An order of free-swimming infusorians, more or less completely ciliate throughout. The cilia differ but slightly one from another, and are sometimes supplemented by a variously modified extensile or undulating membrane. The oral and anal orifices are usually conspicuously developed. The cuticular layer or ectoplasm not unfrequently contains trichocysts. The order is contrasted with Heterotricha, Hypotricha, and Peritricha.—Holotricha astomata, a suborder of free-swimming animalcules, more or less completely and evenly ciliate throughout, and possessing no oral aperture.

holotrichous (hō-lot′ri-kus), a. [< Holotricha + -ous.] Pertaining to or having the characters of the Holotricha; having similar cilia over all the body. See Paramecium.

Holotrocha (hō-lot′rō-kä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ὅλος, whole, + τροχός, a wheel.] A superfamily of Rotifera or wheel-animalcules, containing such as have an anus and one entire trochal disk. Ehrenberg, 1838.

holotrochous (hō-lot′rō-kus), a. [< Holotrocha + -ous.] Pertaining to or having the characters of the Holotrocha; having the trochal disk entire.

holourt†, n. See holer[2].

holozoic (hol-ō-zō′ik), a. [< Gr. ὅλος, whole, + ζωικός, animal, < ζῷον, an animal.] Entirely like an animal in mode of nutrition; not holophytic nor saprophytic: said of some infusorians.

All [ciliate infusorians] are holozoic in their nutrition, though some are said to combine with this saprophytic and holophytic nutrition. Encyc. Brit., XIX. 861.

holpt, holpen† (hōlp, hōl′pn). The antiquated preterit and past participle of help.

holsom†, a. An early spelling of wholesome. Chaucer.

Tennyson, The Victim.

Holy Alliance, a league formed by the sovereigns of Russia, Austria, and Prussia in person after the fall of Napoleon, signed at Paris, September 26th, 1815, and afterward joined by all the other European sovereigns except those of Rome and England. Its professed object was to unite their respective governments in a Christian brotherhood, but its real one was to perpetuate existing dynasties by their joint opposition to all attempts at change. A special clause debarred any member of the Bonaparte family from ascending a European throne. The league came to an end after the French revolution of 1830.—Holy bread. (a) The bread used for the eucharist; a piece of such bread; an altar-bread; in the *Gr. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 351.

Holy of holies. [ME. holi of halowes (halewes); tr. LL. sanctum sanctorum.] (a) The inner or western division of the Jewish tabernacle, as distinguished from the outer part, called the holy place. The holy of holies was inclosed on three sides by the walls of the tabernacle, while on the fourth or eastern side a veil, ornamented with figures of cherubim, and suspended from four pillars of shittim-wood overlaid with gold, separated it from the holy place (Ex. xxvi. 31; xxxvi. 35). The holy of holies was a perfect cube in its dimensions, the length, breadth, and height being each ten cubits. In it stood the ark of the testament, or ark of the covenant, of shittim-wood overlaid with gold. Upon the ark was the capporeth or golden mercy-seat, the place of the divine presence (Ex. xxv. 22), and on the capporeth were two cherubim, also of gold, both facing toward its center. No one but the high priest entered the holy of holies, and he only once a year, on the Day of Atonement (Lev. xvi.). Also called the most holy place and the oracle.

The type of Christ in some one particular, as of entring yearly into the Holy of holies, and such like, rested upon the High Priest only as more immediately personating our Saviour. Milton, Church-Government, i. 5.

(b) The sanctuary or bema of a Christian church: used especially by the Greek and other Oriental churches. (c) Among the Nestorians, a small recess at the east end of a church, containing nothing but a cross. No one, not even the priest, is allowed to enter it.

holy†, v. t. [< holy, a. See hallow[1], the older verb.] To canonize. Davies.

cies, which live upon plants or under the bark of trees. —2. In bot., a large genus of dicotyledonous choripetalous shrubs or trees, founded by Jacquin (1760), of the family Flacourtiaceæ, and type of the tribe Homalieæ. It is characterized by having the ovary more or less adnate to the calyx, and the petals as numerous as the sepals, and plane. The leaves are alternate, petioled, ovate or lanceolate, and crenate or serrate, rarely entire; the flowers are small and disposed in branching axillary panicles. About 80 species are known, natives of tropical regions of both hemispheres, a few extratropical.

Homalium diffusum. (Line shows natural size.)

Homalogonatæ (hom″ą-lō-gon′ą-tē), n. pl. [NL., fem. pl. of homalogonatus: see homalogonatous.] A division of birds proposed by Garrod, to include all those which possess a certain muscle of the leg, the ambiens: opposed to Anomalogonatæ.

homalogonatous (hom″ą-lō-gon′ą-tus), a. [< NL. homalogonatus, < Gr. ὁμαλός, even, level, equal, + γόνυ = E. knee.] In ornith., provided with an ambiens muscle.

Passeres have no ambiens; . . . birds having it are termed homalogonatous or "normally-kneed"; . . . those wanting it are called anomalogonatous.
Coues, Key to N. A. Birds, p. 195.

Homalogyra (hom″ą-lō-jī′rą), n. [NL., < Gr. ὁμαλός, even, level, equal, + γῦρος, a ring, circle.] A genus of gastropods, typical of the family Homalogyridæ.

Homalogyridæ (hom″ą-lō-jir′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Homalogyra + -idæ.] A family of gastropods, typified by the genus Homalogyra. The animal has no tentacles; it has sessile eyes, and a very peculiar radula, the central tooth having a quadrangular base and triangular cusp, the lateral and marginal teeth being represented by a single oblong transverse plate; the shell is planorbiform; and the operculum is corneous and has a central nucleus. Five species, among them Homalogyra nitidissima, of the European seas, are known.

homaloidal (hom-ą-loi′dal), a. [< Gr. ὁμαλός, even, level, + εἶδος, form, + -al.] In geom., similar to a plane; flat; having real points at all real distances, but none at imaginary distances. —Homaloidal system, a system of lines on a plane representing another surface; also, a system of surfaces such that every three cut in a single point.

Homalomyia (hom″ą-lō-mī′i-ą), n. [NL., < Gr. ὁμαλός, even, level, equal, + μυῖα, a fly: see Musca.] A genus of flies founded by Bouché in 1834, distinguished from Anthomyia by the narrower cheeks, more rounded head, and less hairy abdomen. The larvæ are found in moist decaying matter, both animal and vegetable; they breathe by lateral branchiæ. Numerous cases are on record of the voiding of these larvæ from the intestines of human beings, but in such cases they have probably entered the body in over-ripe fruit or vegetables.

a, larva of Homalomyia (line shows natural size); b, spiny hair, magnified.

Homaloptera (hom-ą-lop′-tę-rą), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of homalopterus:* see homalopterous.] An order of insects, corresponding to the suborder Pupipara of Diptera. Leach, 1819.

homeopathy, homœopathy (hō-mē-op'ạ-thi), n. [= F. homœopathie = Sp. homeopatía = Pg. homeopathia = It. omeopatia, < NL. homœopathia (taken in sense defined), < Gr. ὁμοιοπάθεια, liability to like affections, sympathy, likeness in condition, < ὁμοιοπαθής, having like feelings or affections, sympathetic, < ὅμοιος, like, similar, + πάθος, feeling, suffering: see pathos.] The medical treatment of diseased conditions of the body by the administration of drugs which are capable of exciting in healthy persons symptoms closely similar to those of the morbid condition treated. This system of medicine was founded by Dr. C. F. S. Hahnemann (1755–1843) at Leipsic. The fundamental doctrine of homeopathy is expressed in the Latin adage "Similia similibus curantur" (likes are cured by likes). In practice homeopathy is associated with the system of administering drugs in very small, often infinitesimal, doses.

homeoplastic, homœoplastic (hō″mē-ō-plas'-tik), a. [< Gr. ὅμοιος, like, + πλαστός, formed, < πλάσσειν, form.] In pathol., resembling the tissue from or in which the thing to which the term is applied is formed: as, a homeoplastic ★tumor.

homer1 (hō'mėr), n. [< home + *-er*1.] A pigeon trained to fly home from a distance; a homing pigeon.

Again, comparing this homer's skull with that of a common pigeon of the same size, we found at least one fourth more brain-room in the homer, and the excess located more especially in the lower back portion.
The Century, XXXII. 370.

homer2 (hō'mėr), n. [< Icel. hāmeri, Norw. haamerr, a kind of shark, lit. 'shark-mare,' < Icel. hār, Norw. haa, a shark (> E. *hoe*2), + Icel. merr, mod. meri, Norw. merr = E. *mare*1.] The basking-shark, Cetorhinus maximus.

homer[3] (hō′mėr), n. [< Heb. khōmer, a homer, also a mound, < khāmar, undulate, surge up, swell up.] A Hebrew measure, containing 75 gallons and 5 pints wine-measure. As a dry measure it was equivalent to 10 ephahs, or 11½ bushels. Also written chomer and gomer.

An homer of barley-seed shall be valued at fifty shekels of silver. Lev. xxvii. 16.

Homerian (hō-mē′ri-an), a. [< Homer (see Homeric) + -ian.] Same as Homeric. [Rare.]

His [Homer's] figure was one of the stock types on Smyrnæan coins, one class of which was called Homerian.
Encyc. Brit., XXII. 187.

Homeric (hō-mer′ik), a. [< L. Homericus, < Gr. Ὁμηρικός, relating to Homer, < Ὅμηρος, L. Homērus, Homer. The name first occurs (disregarding a doubtful fragment of Hesiod) in a fragment of the poet Xenophanes (6th century B. C.). According to the life of Homer falsely attributed to Herodotus, ὄμηρος in the Cumæan dialect meant 'blind,' whence some explain the tradition of Homer's blindness. The name has been otherwise explained, e. g. as an eponym of the Homeridæ (Gr. Ὁμηρίδαι), a gild of poets in Chios, or, generally, the rhapsodists who recited the poems ascribed to Homer; but the meaning of the name and the very existence of the poet as a distinct person remain doubtful.] Pertaining to Homer, the great epic poet of ancient Greece, or to the poetry that bears his name, and specifically to the Iliad and the Odyssey; resembling Homer's verse, or having some characteristic of his works.

Homerical (hō-mer′i-kal), a. [< Homeric + -al.] Same as Homeric.

It has been objected by some who wish to be numbered among the sons of learning that Pope's version of Homer is not Homerical. Johnson, Pope.

Homerid (hō′mē-rid), n. One of the Homeridæ.

Homeridæ (hō-mer′i-dē), n. pl. [< Gr. Ὁμηρίδαι, pl., appar. (see Homeric) < Ὅμηρος, Homer, + -ίδαι, sing. -ίδης, a patronymic suffix.] A hereditary school of rhapsodists which flourished at an early date on the island of Chios, the members of which were regarded as descendants of Homer; hence, in general, rhapsodists who recited the Homeric poems throughout Greece.

Homeridian (hō-mē-rid′i-an), a. [< Homerid + -ian.] Of or pertaining to the Homerids or Homeridæ.

The Homeridian Hymns.
C. A. Bristed, English University, p. 315.

Homerology (hō-mē-rol′ō-ji), n. [< Gr. Ὅμηρος, Homer, + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] The study of Homer, and of whatever relates to him; the whole body of knowledge concerning Homer, his poems, and his times. W. E. Gladstone.

Homeromastix (hō-mē-rō-mas′tiks), n. [L., < Gr. Ὁμηρομάστιξ, scourge of Homer, < Ὅμηρος, Homer, + μάστιξ, a scourge.] Scourge of Homer: an appellation of the ancient grammarian Zoïlus, from his severe criticisms of the Homeric poems.

If there were another Homer, there would be another Homeromastix. O. W. Holmes, The Atlantic, LI. 67.

home-ruler (hōm′rö′lėr), n. A person who advocates the political doctrine of home rule; specifically, in British politics, one who favors home rule for Ireland. See home rule, under home, a.

homesick (hōm′sik), a. Ill or depressed from being absent from home; affected with homesickness.

The home-sick dreamer's brow is nightly fanned
By breezes whispering of his native land.
Whittier, Bridal of Pennacook, vi.

Homesick as death! was ever pang like this? . . .
Too old to let my watery grief appear—
And what so bitter as a swallowed tear!
O. W. Holmes, The School-Boy.

homesickness (hōm′sik″nes), n. A depressed state of mind in persons away from home; nostalgia. It is characterized by an intense longing for home and the society of absent friends; it may also involve profound interference with nutrition, and give rise to further mental disturbance marked by delirium, incoherence, hallucination, or suicidal attempts. Generally the word signifies only a temporary or occasional depression of spirits from a longing for the renewal of former associations, actual or severe illness from this cause being rare.

Home-sickness is a wasting pang;
This feel I hourly more and more;
There's healing only in thy wings,
Thou breeze that play'st on Albion's shore!
Coleridge, Home-sick.

homesocken (hōm′sok-n), n. Same as hamesucken.

home-speaking† (hōm′spē″king), n. Forcible and efficacious speaking.

Our Saviour, who had all gifts in him, was Lord to expresse his indoctrinating power in what sort him best seem'd: sometimes by a milde and familiar converse, sometimes with plaine and impartiall home-speaking.
Milton, Apology for Smectymnuus.

homespun (hōm′spun), a. and n. [< home + spun, pp. of spin, v.] I. a. 1. Spun or wrought at home; of domestic manufacture.

The cloath was homespun, but for colour and make
It might a beseem'd our queen.
Robin Hood's Birth (Child's Ballads, V. 344).

Those youths in homespun suits and ribboned queues,
Whose hearts are beating in the high-backed pews.
O. W. Holmes, A Family Record.

Hence—2. Of domestic origin; plain; familiar; commonplace.

These travellers
Shall find, before we have done, a home-spun wit,
A plain French understanding, may cope with 'em.
Fletcher, Wildgoose Chase, iv. 1.

We say, in our homespun English proverb, He killed two birds with one stone. Dryden.

Mr. Potter seemed to carry about with him a certain homespun certificate of authority which made it natural for lesser men to accept his conclusions.
Josiah Quincy, Figures of the Past, p. 278.

II. n. 1. Cloth made at home; home-made clothing.

The dress of the girl was a well-worn but neat-checked homespun, and at the throat was a bit of faded ribbon.
The Century, XXXVI. 896.

2. A coarse and loosely woven woolen material, made in imitation of actual home-made cloth.—3. A coarse, unpolished, or rustic person. [Rare.]

What hempen homespuns have we swaggering here,
So near the cradle of the fairy queen?
Shak., M. N. D., iii. 1.

homestall (hōm′stâl), n. [< home + stall.] 1. A homestead; a dwelling-place. [Rare or local.]

And thou [Omai] hast found again
Thy cocoas and bananas, palms and yams,
And homestall thatch'd with leaves.
Cowper, Task, i. 640.

2. One of the small inclosures for rearing young cattle usually placed near the center of an ancient English village community.

homestead (hōm′sted), n. [= D. heemstede = Dan. hjemsted; as home + stead.] 1. A family's dwelling-place, with the inclosure or ground immediately contiguous; an abode; a home.

The abuse of war, . . .
The smouldering homestead, and the household flower Torn from the lintel. Tennyson, Princess, v.

We cross the prairie as of old
The pilgrim crossed the sea,
To make the West, as they the East,
The homestead of the free!
Whittier, Kansas Emigrants.

When you think of the old homestead, if you ever do, your thoughts go straight to the wide chimney and its burning logs. C. D. Warner, Backlog Studies, p. 3.

2. In law, real property owned by the head of a family and occupied by the family as a home.

The laws of the United States give to every citizen who is the head of a family, or who has arrived at the age of twenty-one years, the right to a homestead of 160 acres, to be selected at will from any of the surveyed and otherwise unappropriated public lands, without cost, except entry fees. Encyc. Brit., XII. 122.

3. Native seat; station or place of residence.—Homestead Act, a United States statute of 1862 (12 Stat., 392, U. S. Rev. St., § 2289 et seq.), by which a citizen, or an alien who has filed his declaration of intention to become a citizen, may enter upon not more than 160 acres of the unappropriated public land, and, by complying with certain requirements, may after five years acquire title to it by patent. An enlarged Homestead Act, in 1909, provided that an entryman, under the terms of the act of 1862, could acquire 320 or less acres of land of specified character in certain States.—Homestead law. (a) In the United States, a constitutional or statutory provision of a State exempting from seizure or forced sale for debt a limited amount of real estate owned and occupied by a family as a homestead. Provisions of this nature exist in nearly all the States, varying widely in their terms and limitations. (b) Same as Homestead Act.

homestead (hōm′sted), v. t. [< homestead, n.] To acquire as one's established homestead or residence under the Homestead Act. [U. S.]

An Indian who had been married Indian fashion, . . . but who had homesteaded a farm, thought it best to be married in a more civilized way.
American Missionary, Nov., 1879, p. 343.

The new farmers are settling into Dakota, Nebraska, and Kansas, where promising land can be home-steaded or preempted. W. Shepherd, Prairie Experiences, p. 5.

homesteader (hōm′sted-ėr), n. One who settles upon the public land, or acquires a residence under the Homestead Act. [Western U. S.]

The homesteaders . . . are the pioneers of slender means, taking advantage of the beneficent law which gives a man (or woman if she be the head of a family) a home upon the public domain at the simple price of occupying and cultivating it for a term of years; and meanwhile it cannot be taken from him for any outstanding debts.
H. King, The Century, XIX. 136.

homeward (hōm′wärd), adv. [< ME. homward, hamward, < AS. hāmweard, homeward, < hām, home, + -weard, E. -ward.] Toward home; toward one's habitation; toward one's native country. Also homewards.

And also we passyd by the gate of the Temple of the holy Sepulcre, and in ower wey homward we cam to the Chirche that the Jacobyns hold.
Torkington, Diarie of Eng. Travell, p. 33.

homeward (hōm′wärd), a. [< homeward, adv.] Being in the direction of home: as, a homeward journey.

homeward-bound (hōm′wärd-bound), a. Bound or destined for home: said especially of vessels returning from a foreign country, or of persons returning home by sea.—Homeward-bound pennant, a long pennant reaching from the royalmast-head to the water, set by a man-of-war on starting for home after a cruise.

homewardly (hōm′wärd-li), adv. [< homeward + -ly[2].] Homeward. [Rare.]

It was eve
When homewardly I went. Southey, Hannah.

homewards (hōm′wärdz), adv. [< ME. homwardes*, hamewardes, < AS. hāmweardes, homewards, < hāmweard, homeward, + -es, adverbial gen. suffix.] Same as homeward.

Come, you look paler and paler; pray you, draw homewards. Shak., As you Like it, iv. 3.

homewort (hōm′wėrt), n. The houseleek, Sempervivum tectorum.

homey, a. See homy.

homicidal (hom′i-sī-dal), a. [< LL. homicidalis, also homocidalis, < L. homicida, a homicide, LL. homicidium, homicide: see homicide[1], homicide[2].] Characterized by homicide; leading to, resulting in, or tending toward homicide; murderous; bloody: as, a homicidal act; homicidal mania.

The troop, forth issuing from the dark recess,
With homicidal rage the king oppress.
Pope, Odyssey, iv.

homicidally (hom′i-sī-dal-i), adv. In a homicidal manner; with homicidal intent.

A severe wound in the throat, which was homicidally inflicted. A. S. Taylor, Med. Jour., p. 213.

homicide[1] (hom′i-sīd), n. [< ME. homicide, < OF. homicide, F. homicide = Pr. homecida, omicida = Sp. Pg. homicida = It. omicida, < L. homicīda, a manslayer, homicide, murderer, < homo, man, + cædere (perf. cīdi), kill, slay, + -a, suffix of agent. Cf. homicide[2]. The two words, alike in F. and E., differ in other tongues and in the orig. L. in termination. So all similar words, fratricide, parricide, suicide, etc.] A person who kills another; a manslayer.

He that hateth his brother is an homicide.
Chaucer, Parson's Tale.

For what is he they follow? truly, gentlemen,
A bloody tyrant and a homicide.
Shak., Rich. III., v. 3.

homicide[2] (hom′i-sīd), n. [< ME. homicide, homicidie, homicidy, < OF. homicide, F. homicide = Pr. homicidi, omicidi = Sp. Pg. homicidio = It. omicidio, < LL. homicīdium, manslaughter, homicide, murder, < homo, man (see Homo), + cædere (cīd-), kill, slay, + -ium, neut. suffix. See homicide[1].] The killing of a human being by a human being. Homicide in its largest sense is generic, embracing every mode by which the life of one man is taken by the act of another. Shaw, Ch. J. It includes suicide, and also death caused by culpable neglect. In law homicide is usually classed as justifiable, excusable, and felonious: justifiable when it proceeds from necessity, as where the proper officer inflicts capital punishment, where an officer of justice kills an offender who assaults or resists him and who cannot otherwise be captured, or where persons are killed in the dispersion of rebellious or riotous assemblies, or for the prevention of some atrocious crime; excusable, when it happens from misadventure, as where a man in doing a lawful act, without any intention of hurt, kills another by accident, or in self-defense, or in defense of wife, children, parent, servant, etc. (also called homicide by misadventure); felonious, when it proceeds from malice, or is done in the prosecution of some unlawful act, or in a sudden passion, or it may be by criminal neglect. Felonious homicide comprehends murder and manslaughter. In Scots law manslaughter is called culpable homicide.

Thou cruell didst it: therefore, Homicide,
Cowardly treason, cursed Paricide,
Vn-kinde Rebellion, euer shall remain
Thy house-hold Guests.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Trophies.

homicidy†, n. An obsolete variant of homicide[2]. Chaucer.

homiculture (hom′i-kul-tūr), n. [< L. homo, man, + cultura, culture.] The physical improvement of the human race by means analogous to those used in improving the breed of the lower animals. [Rare.]

Indirectly, then, marriages are frequently made on bases which, if not those that the laws of Homiculture would lay down, are at least not diametrically opposed to them.
Nineteenth Century, XXIV. 391.

homiform† (hom'i-fôrm), a. [< L. homo, man, + forma, shape.] Same as hominiform. Cudworth.

homilete (hom'i-lēt), n. [< Gr. ὁμιλητής, a companion, scholar, hearer, < ὁμιλεῖν, be in company, consort, converse: see homiletic. The E. sense is taken from homiletic, after the analogy of exegete, exegetic.] One who composes or delivers homilies or sermons; one versed in the art of preaching. [Rare.]

The pulpit wants above all else enthusiastic homiletes.
Presbyterian Quarterly, January, 1875, p. 120.

homiletic (hom-i-let'ik), a. [< Gr. ὁμιλητικός, of conversation, affable, conversable, < ὁμιλεῖν, be in company, consort or converse, < ὅμιλος, an assembly, throng: see homily.] 1†. Same as homiletical, 1.—2. In the style or of the nature of a homily or a sermon; hortatory; expository.

This [the Ormulum] is a metrical paraphrase of a part of the New Testament, in a homiletic form, and it probably belongs to the early part of the thirteenth century.
G. P. Marsh, Lects. on Eng. Lang., v.

The ecclesiastical literature is all historical, homiletic, or devotional. D. M. Wallace, Russia, p. 433.

3. Of or pertaining to sermons or to homiletics; pertaining to preaching or the art of preaching. —Homiletic theology. Same as homiletics.

homiletical (hom-i-let'i-kal), a. [< homiletic + -al.] 1†. Pertaining to familiar intercourse; conversable; companionable.

His virtues active chiefly, and homiletical, not those lazy sullen ones of the cloister.
Bp. Atterbury, Character of Luther.

2. Same as homiletic, 2.

The Sermon of Pentecost is made the basis of further homiletical hints. Bibliotheca Sacra, XLV. 740.

homiletics (hom-i-let'iks), n. [Pl. of homiletic: see -ics. Cf. Gr. ὁμιλητική (sc. τέχνη), the art of conversation.] The art of preaching; that branch of practical theology which treats of the composition and delivery of sermons and other religious discourses.

homiliarium (hom-i-li-ā'ri-um), n.; pl. homiliaria (-ä). [ML., also homiliarius (sc. liber) and homiliare, < homilia, a homily: see homily.] A homiliary for the use of pastors.

homiliary (hom'i-li-ā-ri), n.; pl. homiliaries (-riz). [< ML. homiliarium, homiliarius: see homiliarium.] A book containing a collection of homilies or sermons to be read on Sundays and other days.

homilist (hom'i-list), n. [< homily + -ist.] One who composes homilies; one who exhorts.

Novelists have enforced moral lessons more powerful than a wilderness of homilists.
Quarterly Rev., CLXIII. 64.

homilistical† (hom-i-lis'ti-kal), a. [< homilist + -ic-al.] Pertaining to or characteristic of a homilist.

These were the grand Divines in all Times and Places, not superficially armed with light armour, onely for the preaching or Homilisticall flourishes of a Pulpit, but with the . . . armour of veterane and valiant souldiers.
Bp. Gauden, Tears of the Church, p. 621.

homilite (hom'i-līt), n. [Irreg. < Gr. ὁμιλεῖν, be together (see homily), + *-ite*2.] A borosilicate of iron and calcium, occurring in black or brownish-black monoclinic crystals near Brevig, Norway. It is closely allied to datolite in form and composition.

homily (hom'i-li), n.; pl. homilies (-liz). [< OF. homelie, F. homélie = Pr. omelia = Sp. homilía = Pg. homilia = It. omelia, < ML. homilia, a homily, sermon, < Gr. ὁμιλία, intercourse, instruction, a lecture, eccles. a homily, sermon, < ὅμιλος, an assembly, < ὁμός, same, like, ὁμοῦ, together, + ἴλη, εἰλη, a company, < εἰλειν, press or crowd together.] 1. In early Christian use, a colloquial and familiar discourse in exposition of Scripture; in modern use, an expository sermon, or one which interprets and applies a particular passage of Scripture rather than elucidates a particular doctrine or theme.

Homilies . . . were a third kind of readings usual in former times, a most commendable institution, as well then to supply the casual, as now the necessary defect of sermons. Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v. 20.

The homily differs from the λόγος, or discourse, because the homily does not, like the oration or discourse, set forth and illustrate a single theme. It sacrifices artistic unity and simply follows the order of subjects in the passage of Scripture to be explained. On the other hand, a homily is distinct from mere exegesis or exposition, because the latter is addressed to the understanding, while the homily is meant to affect the heart also, and to persuade those who hear to apply the lessons of Scripture for the reformation of their lives. Cath. Dict.

2. Any expository or hortatory discourse.

Unspoken homilies of peace
Her daily life is preaching.
Whittier, Among the Hills.

Book of homilies. (a) A collection of religious discourses; a homiliarium. Specifically—(b) [cap.] In the Ch. of Eng., one of the two series of discourses called "The First" and "The Second Book of Homilies," the former of which appeared in 1547 and the latter in 1563, appointed to be read in the churches when the sermon was omitted. =Syn. Exhortation, etc. See sermon.

homine replegiando (hom'i-nē rē-plē-ji-an'dō). [Abbr. of ML. de homine replegiando, (a writ) of replevying a man: de, of; replegiando, abl. ger. of replegiare, replevy; L. homine, abl. of homo, man: see Homo.] A common-law writ, superseded in England by the writ of habeas corpus, but revived by statute in some of the United States, in the interest of liberty, to replevy a human being out of the custody of any private person, as chattels distrained may be replevied, on giving security. Also called de homine replegiando.

homing (hō'ming), n. [Verbal n. of home, v.] The act of going home.

The much discussed question of the homing of the pigeon, or, as the French call it, orientation, does not seem difficult to meet to one who has had much to do with the birds. The Century, XXXII. 375.

homing (hō'ming), p. a. [Ppr. of home, v.] Coming home; characterized by an instinctive tendency to return home on being released from restraint: applied to the lower animals, especially to birds, such as carrier-pigeons, that have the faculty of returning from great distances to the place where they were reared, whence their usefulness in conveying written messages.

It is scarcely possible to regard such an instance of what has been called the "homing instinct" as a purely physiological, reflex act, nor to consider the crab a mere automaton. Stand. Nat. Hist., I., Int., p. xxxv.

Cattle have extraordinary homing power; so have horses.
Nature, XXX. 267.

hominid (hom'i-nid), n. One of the Hominidæ; a man.

Hominidæ (hō-min'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < L. homo (homin-), man, + -idæ.] A family of mammals, represented by the single genus Homo, man, of the suborder Anthropoidea and order Primates; mankind. It is characterized by the complete withdrawal of the fore limbs from the office of locomotion, and consequently the habitually erect attitude except in infancy; the perfection of the hand as a prehensile organ, and the specialization of the foot as a locomotory organ; the regular curvature of the line of the teeth, which are of the same length and in uninterrupted series, without diastemata; the nakedness of most of the body; and the large facial angle. These are the principal zoölogical characters by which the Hominidæ are distinguished from the Simiidæ or anthropoid apes. Physiologically, mankind is peculiar chiefly in the capacity of civilization, or ability to create progressive institutions (including the formation and use of speech). Psychologically, man is separated by a very wide interval from the nearest Simiidæ. The family is the same as Anthropidæ; it is conterminous with its single genus, Homo, with the order Bimana, and with the subclass Archencephala.

hominiform (hō-min'i-fôrm), a. [< L. homo (homin-), man, + forma, shape.] Having the form of the family Hominidæ or genus Homo; anthropoid, in a strict sense; manlike; human.

hominine (hom'i-nin), a. [< L. homo (homin-), man, + *-ine*1.] Pertaining to the genus Homo, or man; manlike; hominiform. [Rare.]

The most distinctively simian, and consequently least hominine, characteristic. The American, V. 267.

hominisection (hom″i-ni-sek'shon), n. [< L. homo (homin-), man, + sectio(n-), a cutting: see section.] Dissection of man; human anatomy; anthropotomy. [Rare.]

If the author is correct in identifying the muscle . . . with the myon of that name in hominisection.
Coues, The Auk, V. 105.

hominivorous (hom-i-niv'ō-rus), a. [< L. homo (homin-), man, + vorare, eat, devour.] Man-eating; anthropophagous.

There are man-eaters among the hyænas, and these hominivorous animals are greatly dreaded.
J. G. Wood, Illustrated Nat. Hist., p. 224.

hominy (hom'i-ni), n. [Formerly also written homony, hommony, hommincy; abbr. of rockahominy, < Algonkian (of Virginia) rocka, corn, + oham, to grind, + min, berry.] Maize hulled and ground or broken more or less coarsely and prepared for food by being mixed with water and boiled.

The English beat [the corn] in a morter, and sift the flower out of it. The remainder they call hommincy.
Quoted in Trans. Amer. Antiq. Soc., IV. 187.

Our entertainer . . . made him own that a dish of hominy was the best rice-pudding he had ever tasted.
Smollett, Humphrey Clinker, J. Melford to Sir [W. Phillips, June 10.

Succotash and homony
Were smoking on the board.
O. W. Holmes, Centennial Song.

homish (hō'mish), a. [< home + *-ish*1.] Pertaining to home; resembling or suggesting home; homelike. [Colloq.]

The complexion of Anna's sentiments looked rather homeish. Ticknor, Prescott, p. 108.

The very look of it is homeish.
The Advance, Dec. 2, 1886.

homliness†, homly†. Middle English forms of homeliness, homely.

hommet†, v. An obsolete variant of *hum*1. Chaucer.

hommock, n. Same as hummock.

hommony† (hom'ọ-ni), n. An obsolete form of hominy.

Homo (hō'mō), n. [< L. homo (homin-), acc. hominem, OL. hemo (acc. hemōnem, homōnem, pl. homōnes), man, a human being, a person, body, fellow, = AS. guma (guman-), a man, E. *goom*2, q. v.; usually connected with L. humus, earth, the ground, Gr. χαμαί, on the ground, χθών, the earth, the ground: see humus, human, *humble*3, etc., and chameleon, chthonic, autochthon, etc.] The typical and single genus of Hominidæ; mankind; the human race. It was formally instituted by Linnæus in his "Systema Naturæ" in 1758, with H. sapiens, man, as its type and leading species; but it also then included the chimpanzee, H. troglodytes. Naturalists now restrict it to H. sapiens, it being generally conceded that mankind constitutes one zoölogical genus having one species with several geographical races or varieties.

homo-. [NL., etc., homo-, < Gr. ὁμό-ς, one and the same, common, joint, akin to ἅμα, together, = E. same, q. v.] An element in some compounds of Greek origin, meaning 'the same': opposed to hetero-.

homobaric (hō-mō-bar'ik), a. [< Gr. ὁμός, the same, + βάρος, weight.] Of uniform weight or gravity.

Homoblasteæ (hō-mō-blas'tē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ὁμός, the same, + βλαστός, a bud, germ, + -eæ.] A division of monocotyledonous plants, proposed by A. de Jussieu, characterized by having the radicle facing the hilum. It embraced families with the ovary free, as the Juncaceæ (Juncaceæ), Pontoderiaceæ, Liliaceæ, Melanthiaceæ, etc., and families with the ovary adherent, as the Dioscoreæ (Dioscoreaceæ), Irideæ (Iridaceæ), Amaryllideæ (Amaryllidaceæ), Bromeliaceæ, Musaceæ, etc.

homoblastic (hō-mō-blas'tik), a. [< Gr. ὁμός, the same, + βλαστός, a bud, germ.] Having the same germinal origin; derived from like cells: opposed to heteroblastic.

This new cartilage is either homoblastic or heteroblastic.
Dr. H. Gadow, Nature, XXXIX. 150.

Homobranchia (hō-mō-brang'ki-ä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ὁμός, the same, + βράγχια, gills.] In Latreille's classification, an order or higher series of crustaceans, containing the decapods: contrasted with Heterobranchia.

homocarpous (hō-mō-kär'pus), a. [< Gr. ὁμός, the same, + καρπός, fruit.] In bot., having all the fruits of one kind.

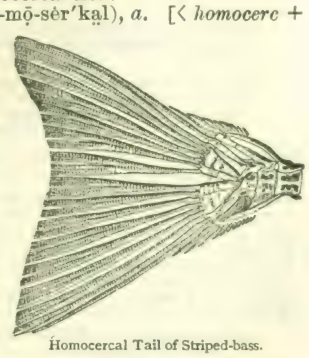
homocategoric (hō-mō-kat-ē-gor'ik), a. [< Gr. ὁμός, the same, + κατηγορία, category.] Belonging to the same category.



We may next consider whether two organisms compared are of the same category of individuality—are homocategoric. Encyc. Brit., XVI. 845.

homocentric (hō-mō-sen'trik), a. [< homo- + Gr. κέντρον center.] Concentric.

homocerc (hō'mō-sèrk), a. and n. [< Gr. ὁμός, the same, + κέρκος, the tail.] I. a. Same as homocercal.

II. n. A homocercal fish.

homocercal (hō-mō-sèr'kal), a. [< homocerc + -al.] In ichth., having the caudal fin symmetrical as to its upper and under halves: opposed to heterocercal. See heterocercal, diphycercal, hypural.

Homocercal Tail of Striped-bass.

The inferior fin-rays are now disposed in such a manner as to give the tail an appearance of symmetry with respect to the axis of the body, and such fishes have been called homocercal. Huxley, Anat. Vert., p. 21.

homocercy (hō'mō-sèr-si), n. [< homocerc + -y.] The state or character of being homocercal; equality or symmetry in the tail or caudal fin of a fish.

Homochelæ (hō-mō-kē′lē), n. pl. [NL., ⟨ Gr. ὁμός, the same, + χηλή, claw.] In Latreille's system of classification, a section of crabs having the claws of equal size in both sexes: contrasted with Heterochelæ. It contained 6 tribes, Quadrilatera, Arcuata, Pinnipedes, Cristimani, Cryptopoda, and Notopoda.

Homochroma (hō-mō-krō′mą), n. [NL., ⟨ Gr. ὁμός, the same, + χρῶμα, color.] A monotypic genus of plants, of the natural order Compositæ, tribe Asteroideæ, the type of the subtribe Homochromeæ, founded by De Candolle in 1836. The head is radiate, the involucre broad, the achenia flatly compressed, and the pappus plumose, in a single rigid series. They are half-shrubby, erect, branching herbs, with all the parts very rough with glandular bristles; the leaves alternate, narrow, entire; the flower-heads long-pedunculed; and the rays always yellow. The single species, H. Eklonis, is a native of South Africa.

Homochromeæ (hō-mō-krō′mē-ē), n. pl. [NL., ⟨ Homochroma + -eæ.] A subtribe of asteroid Compositæ, founded by Bentham and Hooker in 1876, and typified by the genus Homochroma. It is characterized by having the disk wholly of hermaphrodite flowers, of the same color as the ray when that is present, mostly yellow; the corollas tubular, with more or less ampliate throat and 4- or 5-lobed limb; the receptacle not chaffy; and the involucre closely imbricated in several rows.

homochromous (hō-mō-krō′mus), a. [⟨ Gr. ὁμός, the same, + χρῶμα, color.] 1. In bot., having, as a flower-head, all the florets of the same color.—2. In zoöl., being all of one color; whole-colored.

homocinchonicin (hō″mō-sin-kon′i-sin), n. [⟨ homo- + cinchona + -ic + *-in*².] An artificial alkaloid ($C_{19}H_{22}N_2O$) prepared from cinchona.

homocinchonidin (hō″mō-sin-kon′i-din), n. [⟨ homo- + cinchona + *-id*¹ + *-in*².] A natural alkaloid ($C_{19}H_{22}N_2O$) found in cinchona.

homocinchonine (hō″mō-sin′kō-nin), n. [⟨ homo- + cinchona + *-ine*².] A natural alkaloid ($C_{19}H_{22}N_2O$) found in cinchona which is dextrorotatory.

Homoderma (hō-mō-dėr′mą), n. [⟨ Gr. ὁμός, the same, + δέρμα, the skin.] The typical genus of Homodermidæ. A species is named H. sycandra.

homodermic (hō-mō-dėr′mik), a. [⟨ Gr. ὁμός, the same, + δέρμα, the skin, + -ic.] In biol., homological with reference to derivation from one of the three primary blastoderms (endoderm, mesoderm, and ectoderm), as any organ or tissue of the body.

This correspondence, which is of high . . . importance in determining homologies, may be termed homodermic.
Encyc. Brit., XX. 421.

Homodermidæ (hō-mō-dėr′mi-dē), n. pl. [NL., ⟨ Homoderma + -idæ.] A family of chalk-sponges, or Calcispongiæ, in which the gastral cavity forms cæcal outgrowths resembling the tubes of Syconidæ. The genera are Homoderma and Ascaltis.

homodont (hō′mō-dont), a. [⟨ Gr. ὁμός, the same, + ὀδούς (ὀδοντ-) = E. tooth.] Having teeth all alike, as a dolphin: opposed to heterodont.

The simplest dentition as a whole is that of many species of Dolphin. . . . Such a dentition is called homodont.
W. H. Flower, Encyc. Brit., XV. 352.

homodromal (hō-mod′rō-mal), a. [As homodrom-ous + -al.] Same as homodromous.

homodromous (hō-mod′rō-mus), a. [⟨ Gr. ὁμόδρομος, running the same course, ⟨ ὁμός, the same, + δρόμος, a course, race, ⟨ δραμεῖν, run.] 1†. In mech., having, as a lever, the power and weight on the same side of the fulcrum, so that both move up or down together. See lever.—2. In bot., having a similar spiral arrangement of the leaves on the stem and branches; having the spires running in the same direction: opposed to heterodromous.

homodromy (hō-mod′rō-mi), n. [As homodrom-ous + -y.] The state of being homodromous.

homodynamous (hō-mō-dī′na-mus), a. [⟨ Gr. ὁμός, the same, + δύναμις, power.] Of or pertaining to homodynamy; serially homologous.

The Metameres therefore are homodynamous parts; as are the segments of the Arthropoda, etc.
Gegenbaur, Comp. Anat. (trans.), p. 64.

Two plexuses may be homodynamous, although, strictly speaking, not homologous. Nature, XXXIX. 151.

homodynamy (hō-mō-dī′na-mi), n. [As homodynam-ous + -y.] In biol., the relation subsisting between the segments (metameres or somites) of the body which are arranged along its long axis; serial homology, in the usual sense of that term.

Homodynamy is distinguished . . . by the fact that the parts in question are arranged along the long axis of the body and define its type.
Gegenbaur, Comp. Anat. (trans.), p. 64.

As regards homodynamy, another characteristic which appears to be universal among the Multituberculates is the fore-and-aft grinding motion between the alternating rows of tubercles upon the upper and lower molars.
Amer. Naturalist, XXII. 233.

homœo-. [NL. L. homœo-, E. homeo-, or as L., NL., E., etc., sometimes less prop. homoio-, F. homéo-, etc., ⟨ Gr. ὅμοιος, or ὁμοῖος, like, similar (L. similis), also the same, ⟨ ὁμός, the same: see Homo.] An element in English words from the Greek, meaning 'like, similar.' In words thoroughly Englished, as homeopathy, etc., the spelling homeo- is to be preferred.

homœodont (hō′mē-ō-dont), a. [⟨ Gr. ὅμοιος, like, + ὀδούς (ὀδοντ-) = E. tooth.] In odontog., simply conical, without crests or tubercles, as a molar tooth.

He divides the molar teeth of Mammalia into three categories, the simply conic, "Homœodont"; the vertically plicate, "Elasmodont"; and the cross-crested by junction of four tubercles, the "Zygodont."
Amer. Naturalist, XXII. 834.

homœoid, n. See homeoid.

homœomeral (hō-mē-om′ē-ral), a. [⟨ Gr. ὁμοιομερής, consisting of like parts: see homœomerous.] In anc. pros.: (a) Containing two similar systems or strophes. (b) Consisting of pericopes each of which contains two systems metrically similar: as, a homœomeral poem.

Homœomeri (hō″mē-ō-mē′rī), n. pl. [NL., ⟨ Gr. ὅμοιος, like, + μηρός, thigh.] In ornith., in Garrod's and Forbes's arrangements, a division of mesomyodian passeres, embracing those forms which have the sciatic artery well developed, as is usual in birds: opposed to Heteromeri. The Homœomeri are divided into the Tracheophonæ and the Haploöphonæ. Also spelled Homeomeri.

homœomeria (hō″mē-ō-mē-rī′ą), n.; pl. homœomeriæ (-ē). [L.] Same as homœomery.

Anaxagoras of Clazomenæ (in Asia Minor), born about 500 B. C., reduced all origin and decay to a process of mingling and unmingling, but assumed as ultimate elements an unlimited number of primitive, qualitatively determinate substances, which were called by him seeds of things, by Aristotle elements consisting of homogeneous parts, and by later writers (employing a term framed from the Aristotelian phraseology) Homœomeriæ.
Überweg, Hist. Phil. (tr. by Morris), § 24.

homœomeric¹ (hō″mē-ō-mer′ik), a. [⟨ homœomery + -ic.] Pertaining to or characterized by sameness of parts or homogeneity of structure; advocating or receiving the doctrine of homœomery. Also homeomeric.

homœomeric² (hō″mē-ō-mer′ik), a. [As Homœomeri + -ic.] In ornith., of or pertaining to the Homœomeri; having the sciatic artery normally developed. Also homeomeric.

homœomerous (hō-mē-om′ē-rus), a. [⟨ Gr. ὁμοιομερής, consisting of like parts, ⟨ ὅμοιος, like, + μέρος, part.] Having like parts; specifically, in lichenol., having the gonidia and hyphæ distributed uniformly throughout the thallus, without evidence of stratification. Compare heteromerous. Also homeomerous, and improperly homiomerous.

homœomery (hō-mē-om′ē-ri), n. [⟨ L. homœomeria, ⟨ Gr. ὁμοιομέρεια, the homogeneousness of the elements or first principles, ⟨ ὁμοιομερής, consisting of like parts: see homœomerous.] The doctrine, attributed by Aristotle and others to Anaxagoras, that the elements or primitive substances are bodies whose parts are similar to the whole; also, one of these elementary substances. Also homeomery, homœomeria.

homœomorph (hō′mē-ō-môrf), n. [⟨ NL. homœomorphus: see homœomorphous.] A substance exhibiting homœomorphism. Also homeomorph.

homœomorphism (hō″mē-ō-môr′fizm), n. [⟨ homœomorph-ous + -ism.] 1. Similarity in crystalline form, but not necessarily in chemical composition.—2. Same as isomorphism.

★ Also homeomorphism.

homœomorphous (hō″mē-ō-môr′fus), a. [⟨ NL. homœomorphus, ⟨ Gr. ὁμοιόμορφος, of like form, ⟨ ὅμοιος, like, + μόρφη, form.] Having a like crystalline form, but not necessarily analogous composition. Thus, borax and pyroxene are closely similar in form, but apparently not related in chemical composition. Also used as synonymous with isomorphous. Also homeomorphous.

Homœomyarii (hō″mē-ō-mī-ā′ri-ī), n. pl. [NL., ⟨ Gr. ὁμοιος, like, + μῦς, muscle, + L. -arius.] In ornith., a division of birds proposed by Alix, founded upon the character of the flexor muscles of the back of the thigh. [Scarcely used.]

homœopath, homœopathic, etc. See homeopath, etc.

homœoplastic, a. See homeoplastic.

homœoprophoron (hō″mē-ō-prof′ō-ron), n.; pl. homœoprophora (-rą). [⟨ LL. homœoprophoron, ⟨ Gr. ὁμοιοπρόφορον*, alliteration, neut. of ὁμοιοπρόφορος*, ⟨ ὅμοιος, like, + προφορά, utterance, ⟨ προφέρειν, bring to, utter.] In anc. rhet., alliteration, especially as a fault in composition. Also called parhomœon.

homœoptoton (hō″mē-op-tō′ton), n. [⟨ LL. homœoptoton, ⟨ Gr. ὁμοιόπτωτος, with a similar inflection, ⟨ ὅμοιος, like, + πτῶσις, case, inflection, ⟨ πτωτός, apt to fall, fallen, ⟨ πίπτειν, fall.] In anc. rhet., the use of a series of nouns in the same case, of verbs with the same inflection, etc., especially at the close of successive clauses.

Homœosauria (hō″mē-ō-sâ′ri-ą), n. pl. [NL., ⟨ Homœosaurus.] An extinct suborder of rhynchocephalian reptiles, comprising forms without tusk-like teeth on the premaxillæ, and without uncinate processes to the ribs. The Homœosauridæ form the principal family. Also Homosauria.

homœosaurian (hō″mē-ō-sâ′ri-an), a. Of or pertaining to the Homœosauria.

Homœosaurus (hō″mē-ō-sâ′rus), n. [NL., ⟨ Gr. ὅμοιος, like, + σαῦρος, lizard.] The typical genus of Homœosauria, from the lithographic slates of Solenhofen, Bavaria. V. Meyer, 1847.

homœosemant (hō″mē-ō-sē′mant), n. [⟨ Gr. ὁμοίσημος, of like signification, ⟨ ὅμοιος, like, + σῆμα, a mark, sign (⟩ σημαίνειν, mark, signify, σημαντός, verbal adj.).] One of several words having nearly the same meaning. [Rare.]

What we have long and loosely called synonyms are now understood to be, with trifling exceptions, pseudo-synonyms, by which are meant vocables approximating in import, but not equipollent or interchangeable. . . . The exact technicality is homœosemants.
F. Hall, Mod. Eng., p. 172.

homœoteleuton (hō″mē-ō-te-lū′ton), n.; pl. homœoteleuta (-tą). [⟨ LL. homœoteleuton, ⟨ Gr. ὁμοιοτέλευτον, like ending, rime, neut. of ὁμοιοτέλευτος, having a like ending, ⟨ ὅμοιος, like, + τελευτή, ending, ⟨ τελεῖν, end.] In rhet., a figure consisting in the use of a succession of words or clauses concluding with the same sounds. Homœoteleuton is a more comprehensive term than rime, including rime, some forms of assonance, and all other cases of similarity of termination in successive words, clauses, or lines.

homœozoic (hō″mē-ō-zō′ik), a. [⟨ Gr. ὁμοιος, the same, similar, + ζωή, life, + -ic.] Containing similar forms of life, as zones or belts of the ocean or of the surface of the earth. These zones are not parallel with lines of latitude, but undulate in subordination to climatic influences.

homofocal (hō-mō-fō′kal), a. [⟨ Gr. ὁμός, the same, + E. focal.] Confocal.

homogamous (hō-mog′ą-mus), a. [⟨ Gr. ὁμόγαμος, married to the same wife, or to sisters, ⟨ ὁμός, the same, + γάμος, marriage.] In bot., having all the florets hermaphrodite, as certain grasses and composite plants; bearing one kind of flowers.

homogamy (hō-mog′ą-mi), n. [⟨ homogam-ous + -y.] The state of being homogamous; fertilization in a plant when the stamens and pistil of a hermaphrodite flower mature simultaneously.

Homogangliata (hō-mō-gang-gli-ā′tą), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of homogangliatus*: see homogangliate.] A name proposed by Owen for the Articulata of Cuvier, in accordance with a scheme of classification based on the nervous system in animals.

homogangliate (hō-mō-gang′gli-āt), a. and n. [⟨ NL. homogangliatus*, ⟨ Gr. ὁμός, the same, + γάγγλιον, a ganglion.] I. a. In zoöl., having a nervous system in which the ganglia are symmetrically arranged on right and left sides, as the Annulosa.

★ II. n. A member of the Homogangliata.

homogen (hō′mō-jen), n. [⟨ Gr. ὁμογενής, of the same race, family, or kind: see homogeneous.] 1. pl. In bot., in Lindley's classification, a group of exogenous plants characterized by the arrangement of the wood in the form of a series of wedges instead of in concentric circles, as in the stems of Piperaceæ, Aristolochieæ, Menispermaceæ, etc.—2. The offspring of the same or of specifically identical parents.

We can consider the different men as forming a relative homogen—a species, as M. de Quatrefages contends.
Pop. Sci. Mo., XXXIV. 179.

homogene† (hō′mō-jēn), a. [⟨ F. homogène: see homogeneous.] Same as homogeneous.

Know you the sapor pontick? sapor styptick?
Or, what is homogene, or heterogene?
B. Jonson, Alchemist, ii. 5.

Homogenea (hō-mō-jē′nē-ą), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of homogeneus: see homogeneous.] 1†. In Cuvier's system of classification, the second order of Infusoria or Animalcula: approximately equivalent to Protozoa, though including some Infusoria proper, as Urceolaria, with Cercaria (Spermatozoa), Vibrio, Proteus, Monas, Volvox, etc. It is thus a heterogeneous group, like the Polygastrica of Ehrenberg.—2. [l. c.] Plural of homogeneum.

homogeneal (hō-mō-jē′nē-al), a. [As homogeneous + -al.] Homogeneous.

Things simply pure are inconsistent in the masse of nature, nor are the elements or humors in Mans Body exactly homogeneall. Milton, Reformation in Eng., ii.

A homogeneal existence. Longfellow, Hyperion, II. vi.

Homogenei (hō-mō-jē′nē-ī), n. pl. [NL., masc. pl. of homogeneus: see homogeneous.] An order of lichens proposed by Acharius (1810), including the genera Lecidea, Opegrapha, Calicium, etc., now referred to various orders.

homogeneity (hō″mō-jē-nē′i-ti), n. [= F. homogénéité = Sp. homogeneidad = Pg. homogeneidade = It. omogeneità; as homogene-ous + -ity.] The state or character of being homogeneous; likeness or correspondence of parts or qualities; composition from like parts; agreement in elements or characteristics; congruity of constitution.

They appear, as they become more minute, to be reduced to a homogeneity and simplicity of composition which almost excludes them from the domain of animal life. Whewell.

Law of homogeneity, in alg., the principle that only magnitudes of the same kind can be added together. This is laid down by Vieta, but is not admitted by modern mathematicians.—Principle of homogeneity, in logic and metaph., the proposition that no two conceivable things can be without any similarity.

The three principles of Homogeneity, of Specification, and of Continuity or Affinity, as is now sufficiently evident, have a peculiar position in our intellectual constitution. E. Caird, Philos. of Kant, p. 658.

homogeneous (hō-mō-jē′nē-us), a. [< F. homogène; = Sp. homogéneo = Pg. homogeneo = It. omogeneo, < NL. homogeneus, < Gr. ὁμογενής, of the same race, family, or kind, < ὁμός, the same, + γένος, race, family, kind: see genus.] 1. Of the same kind; essentially like; of the same nature: said especially of parts of one whole: opposed to heterogeneous.

Every concept contains other concepts under it; and therefore, when divided proximately, we descend always to other concepts, but never to individuals; in other words, things the most homogeneous—similar—must in certain respects be heterogeneous—dissimilar. Sir W. Hamilton, Logic (1874), I. 210.

2. Having parts of only one kind; composed of similar parts or congruous elements. See heterogeneous.

If a series of rays of homogeneous light, travelling in homogeneous isotropic media, be at any place normal to a wave-front, they will possess the same property after any number of reflections and refractions. Tait, Light, § 216.

Homogeneous coördinates. See coördinate.—Homogeneous equation, function, light, number, product, strain, etc. See the nouns.—Homogeneous steel. Same as cast-steel.—Syn. Cognate, kindred, allied, akin, uniform; congenial.

homogeneously (hō-mō-jē′nē-us-li), adv. In a homogeneous manner; in the same or an accordant way; so as to be homogeneous.

homogeneousness (hō-mō-jē′nē-us-nes), n. Same as homogeneity.

homogenesis (hō-mō-jen′e-sis), n. [NL., < Gr. ὁμός, the same, + γένεσις, birth: see genesis.] In biol., the ordinary course of generation, in which the offspring is like the parent and runs through the same cycle of development. It contrasts with certain special modes of generation, as heterogenesis, xenogenesis, parthenogenesis, etc.

homogenetic (hō″mō-jē-net′ik), a. [< homogenesis: see genetic.] 1. Of, pertaining to, or characterized by homogenesis; passing through the same cycle of existence as the parent.—2. Having a common origin; derived from the same structure, however variously modified, as organs or parts of any two or more animals: synonymous with homologous in its biological sense, and distinguished from homoplastic.

On the use of the term homology in modern zoölogy and the distinction between homogenetic and homoplastic agreements. E. R. Lankester, Ann. and Mag. Nat. Hist., 1870.

homogeneum (hō-mō-jē′nē-um), n.; pl. homogenea (-ä). [NL., neut. of homogeneus: see homogeneous.] Something homogeneous.—Homogeneum adfectionis, in alg., a term of an algebraic equation containing the unknown, but not to the highest power.—Homogeneum comparationis, the negative of the absolute term of an algebraic equation.

homogenize (hō-moj′e-nīz), v. t.; pret. and pp. homogenized, ppr. homogenizing. [< homogene + -ize.] To make homogeneous; mix evenly, as several ingredients; reduce to an even standard.

The whole island would have become homogenized by the action of strong centripetal forces. Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XL. 201.

homogenous (hō-moj′e-nus), a. [Var. of homogeneous.] Having the same origin; derived from the same source; homogenetic: distinguished from homoplastic.

homogeny (hō-moj′e-ni), n. [< Gr. ὁμογένεια, community of origin, < ὁμογενής, of the same race or family: see homogeneous.] 1. Sameness of nature or kind.

The fifth [means to induce and accelerate putrefaction] is, either by the exhaling, or by the driving back of the principall spirits, which preserve the consistence of the body; so that when their government is dissolved, every part returneth to his nature, or homogeny. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 333.

2. In biol., descent from a common ancestor; blood-relationship among animals. The term is used by Lankester in distinction from homoplasy, and as synonymous with homology in an ordinary sense.

homogonous (hō-mog′ō-nus), a. [< Gr. ὁμός, similar, + γόνος, offspring.] In bot., having stamens and pistils of the same height in individuals of the same species, as some hermaphrodite flowers: same as homostyled, and opposed to dimorphous. Compare heterogonous. Asa Gray, 1877.

homogony (hō-mog′ō-ni), n. [< homogon-ous + -y.] The condition or state of being homogonous.

homograph (hō′mō-graf), n. [< Gr. ὁμόγραφος, of the same letters (cf. ὁμογραφεῖν, write in the same manner), < ὁμός, the same, + γραφή, a writing, < γράφειν, write.] In philol., a word which has exactly the same form as another, though of a different origin and signification: thus, base the adjective and base the noun, fair the adjective and fair the noun, are homographs. See homonym.

homographic (hō-mō-graf′ik), a. [< Gr. ὁμός, the same, + γραφή, a writing (see homograph), + -ic.] 1. In geom., having the same cross-ratio or system of cross-ratios; capable of being brought into coincidence by a series of central projections upon planes; so related, as two figures, that to any point in one (without exception) only one point in the other corresponds, and vice versa, while to points situated in a line in either figure correspond collinear points in the other.—2. In orthography, relating to homography; employing the same character at all times and in all circumstances to represent the same sound: as, a homographic alphabet.—Homographic transformation, a transformation between homographic figures.

homography (hō-mog′ra-fi), n. [As homograph-ic + -y.] 1. In orthography, the representation of each sound by a distinctive character, which is employed for that sound alone.—2. In geom., the relation between homographic figures.

homohedral (hō-mō-hē′dral), a. [< Gr. ὁμόεδρος, having a like seat (base), < ὁμός, the same, + ἕδρα, a seat, base.] Having equal or like sides; holohedral.

Homohedral or holohedral forms are those which, like the cube and octohedron, possess the highest degree of symmetry of which the system admits. W. A. Miller, Elem. of Chem., § 82.

homoiomerous (hō-moi-om′e-rus), a. See homœomerous.

homoiousian (hō-moi-ō′si-an), a. and n. [Prop., according to the L. transliteration, homœusian,* but the accepted form rests directly upon the Gr.; < LGr. ὁμοιούσιος, of like nature or substance, < ὅμοιος, like, similar, + οὐσία, being, < ὤν, fem. οὖσα, being, ppr. of εἶναι = L. esse, be: see be[1], entity, ontology. Cf. homoöusian.] I. a. 1. Having a similar nature.—2. [cap.] Relating to the Homoiousians or their belief.

II. n. [cap.] One of the Semi-Arians, followers of Eusebius, who maintained that the nature of Christ is similar to, but not the same with, that of the Father: opposed to Homoöusian.

homoiozoic (hō-moi-ō-zō′ik), a. Same as homœozoic.

homolateral (hō-mō-lat′e-ral), a. [< Gr. ὁμός, the same, + L. latus (later-), side.] 1. Same as homohedral.—2. Being on the same side.

homologa, n. Plural of homologon.

homologal (hō-mol′ō-gal), a. [As homolog-ous + -al.] Agreeable, or like one another. Bailey, 1731.

homologate (hō-mol′ō-gāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. homologated, ppr. homologating. [< ML. homologatus, pp. of homologare (> It. omologare = Sp. Pg. homologar = F. homologuer), < Gr. ὁμολογεῖν, agree, admit, assent, < ὁμόλογος, agreeing: see homologous.] To approve; allow; establish; ratify.

We may take the Doctor's facts without homologating his conclusions. Dr. J. Brown, Spare Hours, 3d ser., p. 227.

I do not, therefore, homologate everything which they have written both on the great Pyramid subject and anything else. Piazzi Smyth, Pyramid, p. 173.

homologation (hō-mol-ō-gā′shon), n. [= F. homologation = Sp. homologación = Pg. homologação = It. omologazione, < ML. as if homologatio(n-)*, < homologare, homologate: see homologate.] The act of homologating; approval; ratification; confirmation. Specifically, in Scots law, a technical expression signifying an act by which a person approves a deed, the effect of which approbatory act is to render that deed, though itself defective, binding upon the person by whom it is homologated.

homological (hō-mō-loj′i-kal), a. [< homology + -ic-al.] 1. Pertaining to or characterized by homology; having a structural affinity: distinguished from analogical, and opposed to adaptive. See homology.

I have . . . treated the metamorphoses at greater length than I should otherwise have done, on account of the great importance of arriving at a correct homological interpretation of the different parts of the mature animal. Darwin, Cirripedia, p. 25.

2. In geom., being in homology or plane perspective, as two figures in one plane.

homologically (hō-mō-loj′i-kal-i), adv. In a homological manner or sense; by means of homologies: distinguished from analogically.

homologize (hō-mol′ō-jīz), v.; pret. and pp. homologized, ppr. homologizing. [< homolog-ous + -ize.] I. trans. To make homologous; make out or demonstrate the correspondence of. See homologous.

In the great class of mollusks, though we can homologize the parts of one species with those of another, we can indicate but few serial homologies. Darwin, Origin of Species, p. 381.

The parts of the segments of the cranium may be now more or less completely parallelized or homologized with each other. E. D. Cope, Origin of the Fittest, p. 181.

II. intrans. To be homologous; specifically, in biol., to correspond in structural position, either in different bodies or in parts of the same body: as, the maxillæ of insects homologize with the legs, the wings of a bird with the arms of a man, etc.

Two ventricles occur in the cerebrum of Scyllium, Rhina, and Acanthias which homologise with the lateral ventricles in the cerebrum of Mammalia. Nature, XXXIII. 333.

homologon (hō-mol′ō-gon), n.; pl. homologons, homologa (-gonz, -gä). [< Gr. ὁμόλογον, neut. of ὁμόλογος, agreeing: see homologous.] Something that corresponds to or agrees with another; a thing or an event that is essentially a repetition of another.

One of the curious homologons of history is this repetition in Europe of the course of events in Asia. J. F. Clarke, Ten Great Religions, i. 4.

homologous (hō-mol′ō-gus), a. [= F. homologue = Sp. homólogo = Pg. homologo = It. omologo, < NL. homologus, < Gr. ὁμόλογος, agreeing, correspondent, < ὁμός, the same, + λέγειν, speak, > λόγος, proportion, etc.] Having the same relative position, proportion, value, or structure; having correspondence or likeness. Specifically—(a) In geom., corresponding in relative position and proportion; also, homological or in homology. (b) In alg., having the same relative proportion or value, as the two antecedents or the two consequents of a proportion. (c) In chem., being of the same chemical type or series; differing by a multiple or an arithmetical ratio in certain constituents, while the physical qualities are analogous, with small differences, as if corresponding to a series of parallels: as, the species in the several groups of alcohols, fatty acids, and aromatic acids are homologous with the others in the same group. (d) In zoöl. and bot., corresponding in type of structure; having like relations to a fundamental type. Thus, the human arm, the fore leg of a horse, the wing of a bird, and the swimming-paddle of a dolphin or whale, being all composed essentially of the same structural elements, are said to be homologous, though they are adapted for quite different functions.

All physiologists admit that the swim-bladder is homologous, or "ideally similar" in position and structure, with the lungs of the higher vertebrate animals. Darwin, Origin of Species, p. 183.

The tissues themselves, in some cases of dissimilar bundles, may be homologous, but they are homologous tissues, and not homologous parts of a system of tissues. Bessey, Botany, p. 120.

homolographic (hō-mol-ō-graf′ik), a. [< Gr. ὁμός, the same, + ὅλος, whole, + γράφειν, write.] Maintaining or exhibiting the true proportions of parts; preserving true relative areas.—Homolographic projection, a method of laying down portions of the earth's surface on a map or chart so that equal areas on the sphere are represented by equal areas on the map.

homologue (hō′mō-log), n. [< F. homologue, < Gr. ὁμόλογος: see homologous.] That which is homologous; something having the same relative position, proportion, value, or structure. Thus, the corresponding sides, etc., of similar geometrical figures are homologues; the members of a homologous series in chemistry are homologues; an organ agreeing in the plan of its structure with a corresponding organ in a different animal, though differing in function, is a homologue of this corresponding organ. See analogue, 4.

homologumena (hō″mō-lō-gū′me-nä), n. pl. [< Gr. ὁμολογούμενα (sc. βιβλία), neut. pl. of ὁμολογούμενος, ppr. pass. of ὁμολογεῖν, agree, admit, acknowledge: see homologate, homologous.] The books of the New Testament the authenticity and authority of which were generally acknowledged in the primitive church. The term is adopted from the church historian Eusebius (about A. D. 270–340), who classifies the books claiming authority as Christian Scriptures under three heads, according as they were received throughout the church, were disputed by some, or had never been recognized, calling these three classes homologumena, antilegomena, and spurious, respectively. He enumerates as homologumena the four Gospels, the Acts, the Epistles of Paul, the First Epistle of John, and the First Epistle of Peter; classes the Epistle of James, that of Jude, the Second of Peter, the Second and Third of John as antilegomena; and says that some reject the Apocalypse and the Gospel according to the Hebrews, while others regard them as homologumena. He mentions as spurious the Acts of Paul, the Pastor (of Hermas), the Apocalypse of Peter, the Epistle of Barnabas, and the book called the Teachings of the Apostles, as well as other writings purporting to be apostolic. Also written homologoumena.

homology (hō-mol′ō-ji), n.; pl. homologies (-jiz). [< Gr. ὁμολογία, agreement, conformity, < ὁμόλογος, agreeing: see homologous.] The state or character of being homologous; correspondence. Specifically—(a) In biol., that relation between parts which results from their development from corresponding embryonic parts, either in different animals, as in the case of the arm of man, the fore leg of a quadruped, and the wing of a bird, or in the same animal, as in the case of the fore and hind legs in quadrupeds, or of the segments or rings and their appendages of which the body of a worm, a centiped, etc., is composed. Homology in this sense implies genetic relationship, and consequently morphological likeness or structural affinity; and it is distinguished from analogy, which usually results from physiological adaptation of unlike parts to like functions, and therefore implies a merely adaptive modification, which brings about a superficial resemblance between things quite unlike in structure, as between the wing of a bird and that of a butterfly. Several kinds of homology are distinguished: (1) general, which is the relation of an organism, or of any of its parts, to the general type or plan of such organisms or parts; (2) serial, which is the correspondence of metamerically multiplied parts in any organism, as of successive ribs, legs, vertebræ, etc., with one another; (3) special, which is the correspondence of a part or organ of one animal with the same part in another, as the homology between a horse's fore "knee" and the human wrist, etc. See homologous, homologue.

Homology.
The triangles ABC and abc are in homology. O is the center of homology, and DEF is the axis of homology.

In the great class of mollusks, though it can easily be shown that the parts in distinct species are homologous, but few serial homologies can be indicated: that is, we are seldom enabled to say that one part is homologous with another part in the same individual.

Darwin, Origin of Species, p. 393.

(b) In geom., the relation between two corresponding figures lying in the same plane which are such that corresponding points are collinear with a fixed point called the center of homology, while corresponding lines intersect on a fixed line called the axis of homology.—Axis of homology. See *axis*1.—Center of homology. See *center*1.—Coefficient of homology. See coefficient.

homomalous (hō-mom′a-lus), a. [< Gr. ὁμός, the same, + ὅμαλος, even, level, equal, < ὁμός, the same.] In bot., having the leaves or branches all bent or curved to one side: applied particularly to mosses.

homomeral (hō-mom′e-ral), a. [< Gr. ὁμός, the same, + μέρος, part, + -al.] Alike in all their parts: applied to two or more things.

Homomorpha (hō-mō-môr′fä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ὁμός, the same, + μορφή, form.] The series of insects in which metamorphosis is incomplete, the larvæ resembling the imagos to some extent, though wingless. The Hemiptera, Orthoptera, and Pseudoneuroptera are of this series, which is also called Hemimetabola: opposed to Heteromorpha.

homomorphic (hō-mō-môr′fik), a. [As homomorph-ous + -ic.] 1. Same as homomorphous. —2. In entom., pertaining to or having the characters of the Homomorpha; hemimetabolic.

homomorphism (hō-mō-môr′fizm), n. [As homomorph-ous + -ism.] Mimicry or imitation of one thing by another; adaptive or analogical resemblance, without true homological or morphological similarity; superficial likeness without structural affinity or relationship. Also homomorphy.

homomorphous (hō-mō-môr′fus), a. [< Gr. ὁμός, the same, + μορφή, form.] Analogous, not homologous, in form or aspect; superficially alike; exhibiting homomorphism. Also homomorphic.

Many examples occur, both among animals and among plants, in which families widely removed from one another as to their fundamental structure nevertheless present a singular, and sometimes extremely close, resemblance in their external characters. . . . Homomorphous forms are . . . found in different parts of the earth's surface. Thus, the place of the Cacti of South America is taken by the Euphorbiæ of Africa; or, to take a zoölogical illustration, many of the different orders of Mammalia are represented in the single order Marsupialia in Australia.

H. A. Nicholson, Manual of Zoöl., Int., § 7.

homomorphy (hō′mō-môr-fi), n. [As homomorph-ous + -y.] Same as homomorphism.

In his Kalkschwämme Haeckel proposed to term homophyly the truly phylogenetic homology in opposition to homomorphy, to which genealogic basis is wanting.

★ Encyc. Brit., XVI. 845.

homonomous (hō-mon′ō-mus), a. [< Gr. ὁμόνομος, under the same laws, < ὁμός, the same, + νόμος, law.] Of or pertaining to homonomy; having the quality of homonomy, or that kind of special homology.

The rays of the pectoral and pelvic fins of fishes, the individual fingers and toes of the higher Vertebrata, are homonomous parts. Gegenbaur, Comp. Anat. (trans.), p. 64.

homonomy (hō-mon′ō-mi), n. [As homonom-ous + -y.] 1. The morphological relation or special homology existing between parts which are arranged along a transverse axis of the body, or in one segment only of its long axis. See homonomous.—2. Lack of distinction of parts, as the absence of segmentation, or the equivalence of the divisions of the body, among annelids: contrasted with heteronomy. Encyc. Brit., II. 648. [Rare.]

homony† (hom′ō-ni), n. An obsolete form of ★hominy.

homonym (hō′mō-nim), n. [Formerly also homonyme; = F. homonyme = Sp. homonimia = Pg. homonymo = It. omonimo, < L. homonymus, < Gr. ὁμώνυμος, having the same name, < ὁμός, the same, + ὄνυμα, ὄνομα, name: see onym, name.] 1. One word used to express distinct meanings, or applied as a name to different things: as, Heteropus is a homonym of eight different genera.—2. In philol., a word which agrees with another in sound, and perhaps in spelling, but is not the same in meaning; a homophone: as, meet, meat, and mete, or the verb bear and the noun bear. The term is also loosely extended to include words spelled alike but pronounced differently, as bow, bend, bow, a weapon; lead, conduct, lead, a metal, etc. The words so designated may be akin or even ultimately identical in origin, as *air*1, *air*2, *bow*1, *bow*2, *meet*1, *meet*2. See homophone, 2, homograph, 1.

Animal is a common name to man and beast, and yet not a homonym; for although one is the definition of man, another of beast, as they differ in names, yet convene they in one definition which answers to the common name of animal, and that is enough to hinder it here from being a homonym; but if animal be referred to a living animal and a painted, tis a homonym, because no definition is in common to a living animal and a painted that is accommodated to the common name of animal.

Burgersdicius, tr. by a Gentleman.

Arbitrary homonym, a name arbitrarily borrowed from one thing to be applied to another, as brougham for a kind of coach.—Casual homonym, a word accidentally having the same sound as another.—Tropical homonym, a word used by a figure of speech in an essentially changed meaning. Thus, the horn of a dilemma is a tropical homonym of the horn of an ox.

homonymic (hō-mō-nim′ik), a. [< homonym + -ic.] Having the same name or sound; of or pertaining to homonymy or homonyms.

The homonymic designation of a thing by something which called to mind the sounds of which its name was composed. Whitney, Lang. and Study of Lang., p. 454.

homonymical (hō-mō-nim′i-kal), a. [< homonymic + -al.] Same as homonymic.

homonymous (hō-mon′i-mus), a. [< L. homonymus, having the same name: see homonym.] 1. Of the same name; expressed or characterized by the same term. In optics, the double images of an object produced by the eyes under certain conditions are said to be homonymous if respectively on the same side as the eye in which they are produced—that is, when the right-hand image is that produced in the right eye, etc.; if the images are on opposite sides, they are called heteronymous.

The diplopia which exists when both eyes look down is homonymous (that is, the image formed by the affected eye is on the same side as that eye).

Quain, Med. Dict., p. 518.

2. Having the same sound, but different significations or origins, or applied to different things; equivocal; ambiguous; specifically, in philol., of the character of homonyms. See homonym, 2.

It is a rule in art that words which are homonymous, of various and ambiguous significations, ought ever in the first place to be distinguished.

Abp. Bramhall, Against Hobbes, p. 19.

We can hardly doubt that it was Aristotle who first gave this peculiar distinctive meaning to the two words homonymous and synonymous, rendered in modern phraseology (through the Latin) equivocal and univocal.

Grote, Aristotle, p. 57.

Homonymous diplopia, diplopia in which the right-hand image is formed by the right eye: here the visual axes cross one another between the observer and the object. Also called simple diplopia, and contrasted with crossed diplopia.—Homonymous genus, hemianopsia, etc. See the nouns.

homonymously (hō-mon′i-mus-li), adv. In a homonymous manner.

As the eyes begin to converge, the images of both objects double homonymously. Le Conte, Sight, p. 109.

homonymy (hō-mon′i-mi), n. [= F. homonymie = Sp. homonomía = Pg. homonymia = It. omonimia, < Gr. ὁμωνυμία, a having the same name, identity, ambiguity, < ὁμώνυμος: see homonym, homonymous.] Sameness of name with a difference of meaning; ambiguity; equivocation; specifically, in philol., the character of homonyms.

There being in this age two Patricks, . . . and, that the homonymy be as well in place as in name, three Bangors. Fuller.

Fallacy of homonymy. See fallacy.

homo-organ (hō′mō-ôr″gan), n. Same as homorgan.

Homoplasts or homo-organs. Encyc. Brit., XVI. 842.

homoöusian (hō-mō-ö′si-an), a. and n. [Prop., according to the L. transliteration, homoüsian, but the accepted form rests directly on the Gr.; < LGr. ὁμοούσιος, consubstantial, neut. ὁμοούσιον, sameness of essence or of substance (prop. ὁμούσιος, a form found, but marked dubious), < Gr. ὁμός, the same, + οὐσία, being, essence: cf. homoiousian.] I. a. 1. Having the same nature.—2. [cap.] Pertaining to the Homoüsians or their doctrines.

II. n. [cap.] A member of the orthodox party in the church during the great controversy upon the nature of Christ in the fourth century, who maintained that the essence of the Father and the Son is the same, in opposition to the Homoiousians or Semi-Arians, who held that their natures are only similar, and to the Heteroöusians or rigid Arians, who maintained that they are different.

On the one hand he [Origen] closely approaches the Nicene Homoousian by bringing the Son into union with the essence of the Father, and ascribing to him the attribute of eternity. Schaff, Christ and Christianity, p. 53.

homoöusie (hō′mō-ö-si), n. [< Gr. ὁμοούσιον, sameness of essence or of substance: see homoöusian.] Identity of substance or being. [Rare.]

So long (continues von Hartmann) as man considers God to be another than himself, or a being not identical with himself—i. e., to introduce a useful phrase, so long as he is in the stage of a heterousian religious consciousness—he desires as a substitute for the absent homoousie or identity of being with God, a union as near, confident, and intimate as possible, through a personal relation of love. Westminster Rev., CXXVI. 475.

homoöusious (hō-mō-ö′si-us), a. Eccles., essentially the same; of like essence or substance: in the Arian controversy, specifically noting the doctrine of those who held that the Son was the same in essence as the Father: opposed to heterousious.

homopathy (hō-mop′a-thi), n. [< Gr. ὁμοπάθεια, sameness of feelings, sympathy, < ὁμοπαθής, of like feelings or affections, sympathetic, < ὁμός, the same, + πάθος, feeling. Cf. homeopathy.] Similarity of feeling; sympathy. [Rare.]

That sympathy, or homopathy, which is in all animals to the same purpose. Cudworth, Intellectual System.

homopetalous (hō-mō-pet′a-lus), a. [< Gr. ὁμός, the same, + πέταλον, a leaf (petal).] In bot., having all the petals formed alike; having all the florets alike, as a composite flower.

homophone (hō′mō-fōn), n. [= F. homophone, etc., < Gr. ὁμόφωνος, of the same sound or tone, < ὁμός, the same, + φωνή, sound, voice.] 1. A letter or character expressing a like sound with another.—2. A word having the same sound as another, but differing in meaning and usually in derivation, and often in spelling; a homonym. Examples are *air*1, *air*2, *air*3, *ere*1, eyre, heir; bare, *bear*1, *bear*2; floe, flow; *no*1, *no*2, *know*1; so, *sow*1, *sew*1; ruff, rough; to, too, two; wait, weight.

We have in English the four homophones rite, write, right, and wright. Isaac Taylor, The Alphabet, I. 29.

3. Same as homophony.

homophonic (hō-mō-fon'ik), a. [As homophonous + -ic.] Same as homophonous.

homophonous (hō-mof'ō-nus), a. [< Gr. ὁμόφωνος, of the same sound or tone: see homophone.] 1. Of the same pitch; of like sound. Specifically—(a) In anc. music, unisonous; in unison: opposed to antiphonic. (b) In mod. music, noting a passage or a style in which one part or melody greatly predominates in importance over all the others; monodic; monophonic: opposed to polyphonic.

2. In philol.: (a) Agreeing in sound but differing in sense. See homophone, 2. (b) Expressing the same sound or letter with another: as, a homophonous hieroglyphic.—Homophonous words or syllables, words or syllables having the same sound, although expressed in writing by various combinations of letters.

homophony (hō-mof'ō-ni), n. [=F. homophonie, < Gr. ὁμοφωνία, unison, < ὁμόφωνος, of the same sound or tone: see homophone.] 1. Sameness of sound.—2. In music: (a) In anc. music, unison, or music in unison: opposed to antiphony. (b) In mod. music, monody; monophony: opposed to polyphony.

Also homophone.

homophyadic (hō″mō-fī-ad'ik), a. [< Gr. ὁμός, the same, + MGr. φυάς (φυαδ-), a shoot, sucker, < φίνεσθαι, grow.] In bot., characterized, as species of Equisetum, by the production of only one kind of stem, which bears both vegetative and fructifying portions. See heterophyadic.

homophylic (hō-mō-fil'ik), a. [< homophyly + -ic.] Characterized by or pertaining to homophyly. Encyc. Brit., XVI. 845.

homophyly (hō'mō-fil-i), n. [< Gr. ὁμοφυλία, sameness of race, < ὁμός, the same, + φυλή, race, family.] Identity of genetic relationships: opposed to homomorphism.

homoplasmic (hō-mō-plaz'mik), a. [< homoplasmy + -ic.] Same as homoplastic.

homoplasmy (hō'mō-plaz-mi), n. [< Gr. ὁμός, the same, + πλάσμα, a thing molded, < πλάσσειν, mold, form.] The quality or condition of being homoplastic; homomorphism. The term was used by Thiselton Dyer with reference to that mimetic resemblance which may exist, for example, between certain cacti and euphorbias.

homoplast (hō'mō-plast), n. [< Gr. ὁμός, the same, + πλαστός, formed, molded, < πλάσσειν, form, mold.] 1. An organ or part corresponding in external form to another, though of distinct nature.—2. That which is homoplastic, as any aggregate or fusion of plastids: opposed to alloplast. Haeckel.

homoplastic (hō-mō-plas'tik), a. [As homoplast + -ic.] In biol. and bot., molded alike, or constructed in the same manner, but not having the same origin; analogical or adaptive, and not homological, in structure; homomorphous in texture: distinguished from homogenous or homogenetic. Also homoplasmic.

Darwinian morphology has further rendered necessary the introduction of the terms homoplasy and homoplastic to express that close agreement in form which may be attained in the course of evolutional changes by organs or parts in two animals which have been subjected to similar moulding conditions of the environment, but have no genetic community of origin, to account for their close similarity in form and structure. Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 808.

homoplasy (hō'mō-plas-i), n. [< Gr. ὁμός, the same, + πλάσις, a forming, molding, < πλάσσειν, mold, form.] The quality of being homoplastic; agreement in form and structure without community of origin, as of organs or parts of two different organs: opposed to homogeny: correlated with analogy or heterology as distinguished from homology in biological senses. The conceptions expressed by the terms homoplasy and homogeny are little different from those for which analogy and homology were earlier and more widely used, as in such a familiar instance as that of the wing of the bat being analogous to the wing of the butterfly and homologous with the fore leg of a horse. But the conceptions now rest upon evolutionary considerations, and are more precisely predicable, as when an organ of one animal may be similar in form as well as function to that of another, and hence homoplastic, though having a different origination, and hence not homogenetic. See extract under homoplastic.

The existence of these thread-cells is sufficiently remarkable, seeing that the Non-Palliate Opisthobranchs resemble in general form and habit the Planarian worms, many of which also possess thread-cells. But it is not conceivable that their presence is an indication of genetic affinity between the two groups, rather they are instances of homoplasy. E. R. Lankester, Encyc. Brit., XVI. 659.

★homopolar (hō-mō-pō'lär), a. [< Gr. ὁμός, the same, + πόλος, pole, + -ar[3].] In morphology, having equal poles: said of the figures called stauraxonia homopola. See stauraxonia.

homopolic (hō-mō-pol'ik), a. [< Gr. ὁμός, the same, + πόλος, pole, + -ic.] Same as homopolar.

See extract under homaxonial. Encyc. Brit., XVI. 845.

homoproral (hō-mō-prō'ral), a. [< Gr. ὁμός, the same, + L. prora, prora: see proral.] Having equal or similar proræ, as a pterocymba: opposed to heteroproral. See prora. Sollas.

homopter (hō-mop'tėr), n. A homopterous insect; one of the Homoptera. Also homopteran, homopteron.

Homoptera (hō-mop'tę-rä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of homopterus, having like wings: see homopterous.] 1. One of the two prime divisions of hemipterous insects founded by Latreille in 1817; a suborder of Hemiptera, contrasted with Heteroptera. It contains a very large number of bugs of the greatest diversity in form, normally with large wings, and hemielytra of like texture throughout (whence the name), which are usually folded in a slanting direction. They have a blunt face with inferior rostrum, eyes and ocelli usually present, antennæ commonly inserted in a depression below the eyes, and legs adapted for either walking or leaping. The group is often elevated to the rank of an order. It is principally composed of the Cicadariæ, of which the families are numerous, as Cicadidæ, Fulgoridæ, Membracidæ, Cercopidæ, etc.; but it contains also the aphids or plant-lice, the coccids or scale-insects, the Aleurodidæ, and Psyllidæ, which are often grouped under the name Phytophthiria.

2. A group coextensive with the preceding, except that the Phytophthiria are excluded. Auchenorhynchi is a synonym of Homoptera in this sense.

homopteran (hō-mop'tę-ran), n. Same as homopter.

homopteron (hō-mop'tę-ron), n. Same as homopter.

homopterous (hō-mop'tę-rus), a. [< NL. homopterus, < Gr. ὁμόπτερος, of or with the same plumage (having like wings), < ὁμός, the same, + πτερόν, wing, feather.] Having wings of the same or like texture throughout; specifically, pertaining to or having the characters of the Homoptera.

homoquinine (hō″mō-ki-nēn'), n. [< Gr. ὁμός, the same, + E. quinine, q. v.] A molecular compound of quinine and cupreine.

Homoraphidæ (hō-mō-raf'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ὁμός, the same, + ῥαφίς, a needle, < ῥάπτειν, sew, + -idæ.] A large family of marine sponges, of the suborder Halichondrina and the order Cornacuspongiæ. By Lendenfeld it is divided into numerous subfamilies and even lesser groups.

homorgan (hō'môr-gan), n. [< Gr. ὁμός, the same, + ὄργανον, organ.] In morphology, a similarly organized part; a homoplast: distinguished from alloplast. Haeckel. Also homo-organ.

homorganic (hō-môr-gan'ik), a. [< Gr. ὁμός, the same, + ὄργανον, organ, + -ic.] 1. Similarly organized.—2. Produced by the same organs.

It is maintained by some ancient grammarians that the hard aspirates are the hard letters k, t, p, together with the corresponding winds or homorganic winds. Max Müller, Sci. of Lang., 2d ser., p. 161.

homoseismal (hō-mō-sīs'mal), n. and a. [< Gr. ὁμός, the same, + σεισμός, an earthquake: see seismic.] I. n. The curve uniting points at which an earthquake-wave synchronously reaches the earth's surface: the equivalent of the German homoseiste, a term introduced into seismological science by K. von Seebach to replace the hybrid term coseismal, used by certain seismologists writing in English.

II. a. Pertaining to or having the character of such a curve.

homoseismic (hō-mō-sīs'mik), a. Same as homoseismal.

homosporous (hō-mos'pō-rus), a. [< Gr. ὁμός, similar, + σπόρος, seed.] Having only one kind of asexually produced spores. See heterosporous.

homostaura (hō-mō-stâ'rä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ὁμός, the same, + σταυρός, a cross.] Homostaural figures, collectively considered.

The simpler group, the Homostaura, may have either an even or an odd number of sides. Encyc. Brit., XVI. 844.

homostaural (hō-mō-stâ'ral), a. [As homostaura + -al.] In morphology, having a regular polygon as the base of a pyramidal figure: applied to the figures called stauraxonia homopola: distinguished from heterostaural. See stauraxonia.

homostyled (hō'mō-stīld), a. [< Gr. ὁμός, the same, + στῦλος, pillar: see style[2].] In bot., having styles of the same length and character: opposed to heterostyled. Darwin.

homotatic (hō-mō-tat'ik), a. [< Gr. ὁμός, the same, + τάσις (ταν-), strain, stress, < τείνειν, stretch.] In mech., pertaining to a homogeneous stress.—Homotatic coefficients, fifteen coefficients of the equation of a certain biquadratic surface, upon which the axes of direct elasticity of a body depend.

homotaxeous (hō-mō-tak'sē-us), a. [< homotaxis + -e-ous.] Same as homotaxial.

homotaxial (hō-mō-tak'si-al), a. [< homotaxis + -al.] Of or pertaining to homotaxis; in geol., similarly disposed or arranged with reference to the order of succession of the overlying and underlying groups of fossiliferous strata, but not necessarily contemporaneous. Also homotaxic, homotaxeous.

When . . . the [geological] formations of distant countries are compared, all that we can safely affirm regarding them is that those containing the same or a representative assemblage of organic remains belong to the same epoch in the history of biological progress in each area. They are homotaxial; but we cannot assert that they are contemporaneous, unless we are prepared to include within that term a vague period of perhaps thousands of years. Geikie, Encyc. Brit., X. 323.

homotaxially (hō-mō-tak'si-al-i), adv. In regard to or by homotaxis; with similar arrangement.

These Jurassic strata are evidently not homotaxially related to the other North American strata which have by some authors been referred to the Jurassic. Amer. Jour. Sci., 3d ser., XXIX. 232.

homotaxic (hō-mō-tak'sik), a. [The proper form would be homotactic*, < homotaxis (-tact-) + -ic.] Same as homotaxial. Huxley.

homotaxis (hō-mō-tak'sis), n. [NL., < Gr. ὁμός, the same, + τάξις, arrangement.] A term introduced into geology by Huxley, to express the idea of similarity of arrangement or of order in the fossiliferous deposits of various regions, while not necessarily including that of contemporaneity in the same: opposed to heterotaxis.

But the moment the geologist has to do with large areas or with completely separated deposits, then the mischief of confounding that "homotaxis" or "similarity of arrangement," which can be demonstrated, with "synchrony" or "identity of date," for which there is not a shadow of proof, under the one common term of "contemporaneity" becomes incalculable. Huxley, Quart. Jour. Geol. Soc., 1862, No. 24, p. xlvi.

homotaxy (hō'mō-tak-si), n. [< NL. homotaxis, q. v.] Same as homotaxis.

Homothalameæ (hō″mō-tha-lā'mē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ὁμός, the same, + θάλαμος, a bed-chamber.] A family of lichens proposed by S. F. Gray, 1821, including his divisions Collematideæ, Usneadeæ, and Ramalinideæ. These with others are placed by Tuckerman in the Parmeliacei.

homothermous (hō-mō-thėr'mus), a. [< Gr. ὁμός, the same, + θέρμη, heat.] Having the same bodily temperature; preserving the same degree of animal heat.

Such homothermous animals as whales, seals, walrus. I. C. Rosse, Cruise of Corwin (1881), p. 12.

★homothetic (hō-mō-thet'ik), a. [< Gr. ὁμός, the same, + θετός, verbal adj. of τιθέναι, put, place: see thesis.] In geom., similar and similarly placed; in homology with reference to the line at infinity as axis of homology.

homotonous (hō-mot'ō-nus), a. [< L. homotonus, of the same tension, < Gr. ὁμότονος, of the same tone, < ὁμός, the same, + τόνος, tone.] Of the same tenor or tone; equable: applied to diseases which have a uniform tenor of rise, state, or declension.

homotony (hō-mot'ō-ni), n. [< Gr. as if ὁμοτονία*, < ὁμότονος, of the same tone: see homotonous.] The act of maintaining the same tone; monotony. [Rare.]

Thomson has often fallen into the homotony of the couplet. Langhorne, Effusions of Friendship.

homotropal (hō-mot'rō-pal), a. [As homotropous + -al.] Same as homotropous.

homotropous (hō-mot'rō-pus), a. [< Gr. ὁμότροπος, having the same turn, < ὁμός, the same, + τρόπος, turn, direction, < τρέπειν, turn.] Turned in the same direction as some other body, or directed in the same way as the body to which it belongs; specifically, in bot., curved or turned in one direction: applied also to the embryo of an anatropous or a campylotropous seed, in which the radicle is next the hilum. Gray. This term, which was early introduced by Richard, is synonymous with orthotropous as used by him: an unfortunate confusion, the ovule and the embryo being designated by the same term. It is, moreover, superfluous when the ovule or seed is stated to be anatropous or orthotropous.

Campylotropous Seed of Chickweed, with homotropous embryo.

homotypal (hō'mō-tī-pal), a. [< homotype + -al.] Same as homotypic.

It is the object of serial homology to determine homotypal parts. Brande.
